We acknowledge receipt of an invitation to attend the marriage of Miss Kathleen Mallory Wyatt to Dr. Leonard Lane Bankston on Wednesday, June 12, at high noon, in Shelby, Miss. Miss Wyatt is the accomplished daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, of Shelby, and Dr. Bankston is a man of such character and sterling worth as merits the hand of an accomplished woman. We regret our inability to attend these nuptials and extend to both bride and groom our heartiest congratulations, and wish for them all the blessings their fondest dreams have pictured.

A letter from Brother Seaman A. Mayo, of Lake Charles, La., announces that the Louisiana State Epworth League Conference, which was called to convene in Shreveport, La., in June, has been postponed to some date in September. Due to the stress of work in the interest of government programs and the fact that the railroads are not now in position to offer reduced rates, it was thought wise to delay the convention. Mr. Mayo urges Epworth League Chapters to elect new officers early in September and arrange for them to attend the State convention as a training school for their work.

At the close of the Day of Prayer services in the Louisiana Avenue Church, Thursday, May 30, after prayers had been offered for the thirty boys represented by the stars on the service flag, a young man who is in Class 1A and who expects to be called during June came forward and requested that he be permitted to take the vows of the Church. He was received into the Church, and his consecration was a fine example to thousands of other boys who need the prayers of the Church and the power of God to sustain them in the life to which their government is calling them.

Rev. A. F. Vaughan, the careful and much loved pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, of New Orleans, has been accepted by the War Work Committee of our Church as a chaplain for over-seas service with the United States Army. Just when he will be called is a matter of uncertainty due to the fact that the law governing the age limit of chaplains is now undergoing revision and no man more than forty years old will be called until the legal age limit has been changed. Although his congregation has urged him to remain with his charge, Brother Vaughan has announced that he will go when he is called.

Rev. M. R. Jones, of Raleigh Miss., not only knows how to represent the Advocate once, but has those staying qualities that merit for him a place upon a roll of honor in any office. After leading off a letter with words like this: "For the inclosed check of twenty-four dollars," he names sixteen new subscriptions and closes the letter by saying, "We appreciate the good paper you are giving us and hope to send you another list of subscribers." One hundred pastors like Brother Jones would neutralize many of the ills that a poor editor and publisher must suffer in war times.

A life need not be great to be beautiful. There may be as much beauty in a tiny flower as in a majestic tree—in a little gem as in a great mountain. * * * A beautiful life is one that fulfills its mission—that is what God made it to be and does what God made it to do.—James R. Miller.

"The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal. The Lord knoweth them that are His." This is the seal, the guaranty of their safety and security. Knowing them and having as the accompaniment of that knowledge all power in heaven and on earth He will take care of them.—Exchange.

THE WORK PROSPERING.

Dear Dr. Meek: On April 20 and 21, our second quarterly conference was held at Marvin. Our presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Holder, was with us, and preached a soul-stirring and helpful sermon at the 11 o'clock service on Sunday. Our efficient pastor, Rev. H. H. Wallace, has entered heartily upon his work, preaches to the delight of his congregations, and looks after every interest of the Church. We are predicting for him a good year. I am glad to say that we are now having Sunday school here at Marvin and are also beginning to prepare for Children's Day.

ROBBIE L. WOODS.

Route No. 6.

Washington, Miss.

Dear Editor: We have just closed a very successful meeting at the Washington Church, which began on Sunday, May 19, and closed on the following Sunday night. Three services were held on the first day, one by the pastor, one by Dr. W. A. Borum, pastor of the Baptist Church in Natchez, and the third by Rev. G. M. Smiley, the Presbyterian pastor at Fayette and Pine Ridge. Brother B. E. Meigs came to us on Monday night and preached two sermons each day for a week, sermons that could not but benefit those who heard them. There was not a single note in them of compromise with sin and the preaching was as nearly like the old-time Methodist preaching as it could possibly be, but the love of Christ and his power to save was held up in such a reasonable, earnest way that members of other denominations fell into line (we had members of seven denominations in regular attendance) and sang, prayed, and testified with the same zeal that our own folks did. The work among the children was specially good. It was a genuine pleasure to hear them, as well as older folks who had never done so before, stand up and say that they loved the Lord and wanted to give their lives fully to him. Four members joined our Church and two joined the Presbyterian Church. All of us were made better by Brother Meig's coming. The very modest contribution which the Church made to him came without a word of solicitation on the part of anybody at a time when appeals were being made for everything in general and more particularly for the Red Cross, and yet it was the largest made to a visiting minister in a number of years. I feel that it is a privilege to serve the Washington Circuit and I appreciate the kindness of the people and their efforts more all the time. I have temporary charge of the Roxie Church and there we are trying to finish the church building, on which the people have been faithfully working for some time. There is no doubt that it will be completed in the near future. We ask the prayers of all the Christian people for the work we are trying to do. Sincerely,

—J. B. Cain.

The Soldiers' "Comfort Kits"

Are not complete without a box of Allen's Foot-Ease, the antiseptic powder to shake into the shoes. The Plattsburg Manuel advises men in training to shake Foot-Ease in their shoes each morning. It takes the friction from the shoe, freshens the feet and gives instant relief to corns, bunions, callouses and aching, swollen, tender feet. Allen's Foot-Ease has been the standard remedy for over 25 years. Try it today and mail some packages to your friends in Army and Navy.

THE GIBSLAND HIGH SCHOOL.

On the evening of May 17, 1918, we had the pleasure of witnessing the closing exercises of the Gibsland High School. The entertainment given by one of our talented young men of Gibsland, Mr. William W. Todd, in the interest of the Red Cross, was very much enjoyed by all in attendance. Sunday, at 11 o'clock a. m., the Commencement Sermon was preached by Rev. John F. Foster of Shreveport, which gave us much food for thought. Monday evening, May 20, we attended the graduating exercises. There were 15 to receive diplomas, which were presented by the principal, Mr. E. D. Shaw. Hon. Robert A. Hunter addressed the class, and did justice to the occasion. There was a good audience in attendance. There were no idle curiosity-seekers looking for pleasure, but those who came did so for mental gratification—for a "feast of reason and a flow of soul"—and they did not go away disappointed. The programme was tastefully and appropriately managed by the principal of the school, Mr. E. D. Shaw, giving evidence of culture, tact and talent. The exercises were a decided success, giving indisputable evidence of the progress of the pupils and great labor and painstaking upon the part of the teachers. While the performance was going on, my memory went back over the years that have flown, recalling to my mind the beautiful lines of Young:

"Like birds whose beauties languish half concealed,
Till mounted on wings—their glossy plumes expanded,
Shine with azure, green and gold."

I thought of the responsibility of the teachers, and how few, try ever so hard, can satisfy even themselves with their work. And I thought of the little child, of whom no less a personage than our great Redeemer hath said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." I thought of its mind, immortal as eternity and as plastic as the clay in the hands of the potter, being guided and directed, for good or evil, weal or woe, by the teachers. I thought of the anxious solicitude of the mother for the welfare of her child, as evidenced by a letter written by the elder Mrs. Adams to her son, John Quincy, while a student at one of the universities of England, telling him, "I would rather you were swallowed up in the ocean you have crossed than prove an immoral, graceless child," and, again, I thought of the advice given by the great Robt. E. Lee to his son while a student at the military academy—advice worthy of commemoration and which ought to be written with a sunbeam of livening light upon the lintels and portals of every household in the land: "Always do your duty."

This manuscript is much longer than I intended; so I will close by thus admonishing the graduates and pupils of the Gibsland High School: "If you wish to be ornaments to society, a blessing to your country, and an honor to the age and nation in which you live, always do your duty."

Mrs. J. T. WILLIS.

Hurrah! How's This

Hospital records show that every time you cut a corn you invite lockjaw or blood poison, which is needless, says a Cincinnati authority, who tells you that a quarter ounce of a drug called freezone can be obtained at little cost from the drug store but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You simply apply a few drops of freezone on a tender, aching corn and soreness is instantly relieved. Shortly the entire corn can be lifted out, root and all, without pain.

This drug is sticky but dries at once and is claimed to just shrivel up any corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin.

If your wife wears high heels she will be glad to know of this.

Try It! Substitute For Nasty Calomel

Starts your liver without making you sick and can not salivate.

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs but a few cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.

THE SYMPATHETIC PRESENCE OF THE LORD.

On the rough path of homely duty they once more encountered their lost Master. He is never far distant from the plowman on the field, from the fisherman on the sea, from the merchant in his office, from the artisan at the bench; and blessed are they who realize His sympathetic presence. He comforts the worker in his weariness, encourages him in his disappointments, and by His blessing often turns failure into fortune. Happy are they who carry their spiritual perceptions into business life and secular scenes, and who, to their great joy, are able to exclaim, "The Lord is in this place and I know it."—W. L. Watkinson.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages, and for grown-ups. —Adv.

THIS WEAK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. WORTHLINE, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia Pa.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as it did to Mrs. Worthline.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

On Sunday, May 26, I was with Rev. B. L. Sutherland, at our Poplar Springs Church, Meridian, and Rev. H. S. Westbrook, at Seventh Avenue, Meridian. One Bibie Ciass was organized at Poplar Springs. Decision Day will be observed, and a Workers' Counciі was started, and I feel that Brother Sutherland will be enabled to do some fine work.

We had a fine service with Brother Westbrook. I feel that they will have a Cradie Roli, and Brother Westbrook has promised to see that one Sunday is given to Missions, which means that the joy of helping others will not be denied his Sunday school scholars any ionger.

I might say in passing that they are ready to lay the foundation of the Central Meridian Church, for which we are all thankful.

Wednesday and Thursday were spent at the Jackson District Conference. Thursday morning was given over to a Sunday school institute. It was a good one, too. Mr. Virgil Howie, the President of the Jackson District Sunday School Institute, gave a fine address on "The Pastor's Relation to the Sunday School." Prof. D. M. Key made a very striking presentation of the Wesley Bible Ciass work. Rev. B. F. Lewis gave a happy presentation of the Graded Literature. We were all sorry that the time limit stopped his speech. I wish that every man in the Conference who has a country church could have heard Rev. J. F. Campbell present "The Graded Literature in the Country Church." It was good and helpful, too. The Field Secretary spoke on "Missions in the Sunday School" and preached on "Decision Day."

I want to thank my brethren again for their forbearance toward me and to ask a continued interest in their prayers. I just wish from the deep of my heart that I were a bigger, better man for this great work.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

"Every duty we omit obscures some truth we might have known." Only a few men have failed to order Children's Day programs. The need for giving our children every advantage the Church offers is more imperative than it has ever been. When the day is observed send the offering to Rev. E. S. Lewis, Greenville, Miss.

The great business of the teacher is to make Christ known to those who do not know him. It is not enough to teach some Bible lesson to the child, as important as this is, but the teacher should teach how to live the life of victory in Christ.

How shall we secure a supply of such teachers for our Sunday schools? Suppose we try the plan Jesus gave: "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." The fact that we have not ali the teachers needed is a mark of sin; for we have sinned against the Lord in ceasing to pray.

Hundreds of revival meetings will be heid during the next four months. Call the teachers together for prayer, secure a list of all the unconverted in the school and community, have the teachers do some definite work in presenting Christ to those under their care, and they will experience the joy of winning many souls to our Savior.

God is more attractive than Satan. He has more and better ways of getting and holding the heart than the enemy. "Ali power hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth." "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw ali men unto me." Read forty ways for increasing the membership in the May number of the Graded Magazine.

"The moral and reiigious training of childhood stands out not only as a task of supreme importance to the Church, but as the patriotic duty of the hour." This is the subject of the National Day Program to be given the first Sunday in July. Send to Smith & Lamar for this the most attractive and informing program that you have seen lately.

MUCH LAMENTED.

There was universal sorrow on the part of ail who knew him when the sad news was announced that Brother A. W. Durkee, popular engineer on the Y. & M. V. R. R., had answered the iast summons. His untimely end came on the morning of the 28th of April, 1918, when his engine left the track near Hamburg, Miss. All that was mortai was brought back to Vicksburg, and laid to rest with Masonic honors in the city cemetery, following one of the largest funerals ever held in Vicksburg, conducted by the writer.

Brother Durkee was a whole-hearted, enthusiastic man who loved his work, his fellow-men, and his Church. He was a faithfui member of the Gibson Memorial Methodist Church, and enjoyed attending its services. Invariabiy he would come to his pastor foiiowing the sermon and enthusiasticaiiy express his appreciation of the message. In looking through his Bible, the writer found several clippings relative to some good services heid at the church. At the last service he attended at Gibson Memorial he gave his hand in response to an appeal for a more earnest, consecrated life.

His devotion to his wife and mother was beautiful, and their many friends deeply sympathize with them in their great ioss. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ is sufficient for their every need—and may His abiding presence be their comfort, joy and song, till that day when God shall wipe away aii tears.

UTTERANCE OF JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

To the Presiding Elder and Members of Jackson District Conference, now in session at Eden, Miss.:

Dear Brethren: We your committee on "The War" beg leave to submit the foiiowing statements as our report for your consideration and adoption:

1. We are fuiiy convinced that the horribie war that has cast a sable pall over the world, causing the murder of miiiions of people, resulting in the deportation of tens of thousands of innocent civiiians to be the victims, helpless and terrorized, of the lust and greed of a savage enemy, had its origin in the selfish ambitions of the Imperial German Government. "Mittel Europa" was the fascinating dream of the Hohenzoliern dynasty. It opened up to the materialistic Teuton mind visions of growing wealth and dominant power. We are sure that the tragic murder of the unfortunate Austrian Archduke had no other real meaning touching the war than to furnish a specious pretext to the German Kaiser and to the German war leaders to unleash their dogs of war upon an aimost undefended world. For forty years and more Germany has been preparing for this diabolical war, training her miiiions of men, increasing her navy, spending many biiions of dollars for war equipments, and in every other way possible girding up her nationai ioins to win a place in the sun, and to establish Teutonic hegemony in Europe and in iarge portions of Asia. Her purpose, manifestly, was to control the world's commerce and to master the human race.

2. We feel that so far from deserving a place in the sun, Germany doesn't deserve any place of honor or trust among the nations of this earth. She deserves only a piace in the dismal and sulphurous reaims of Dante's Inferno. She has no just ciaims to the respect and confidence of the civilized and Christian nations. Her war aims, war policies, and war atrocities have brought forfeiture of ail claims to recognition as a civilized nation. German ruiers and peopie have been unmasked, and the worid now knows them as the savage murderers of babies, the ravishers of heipless women, the wreckers of defenseiess homes, hospitals and churches, the devil-inspired pirates on sea and land and the monumental liars of ail history.

3. We wouid deciare, laying all possible emphasis upon the deciaration, that in our sober judgment the war waged by the Entente Aliies is a just and righteous protest against Germany's ruthlessly wicked invasion of the rights of weaker nations, the trampling in the dust of her treaty obligations, the torturous methods of her warfare, and the utter contempt for everything civil and decent in deaiing with the helpless people in the invaded and conquered countries.

4. We wouid deciare to all the worid that there is not a shadow of doubt in our minds as to our national attitude to the war. We are at war with Germany. It was not of our choosing; Germany forced the war upon us. Germany destroyed our property and murdered our citizens. As a buriy buiiy she demanded that we should crouch abjectly before her and tamely submit to her audacious and insulting demands. If we had not accepted her chaiienge we would have shown ourselves to be whimpering, cowardiy weaklings — a nation unworthy to exist and without any claims to respect and trust among the nations of the world. We are fighting Germany to-day; to do otherwise would be to forfeit aii claims to have red biood running in American veins. We are fighting Germany to-day, for it is the oniy thing we can do to be true to the principles upon which our government is founded. We have made our glorious hlstory by fighting for the rights, the God-given rights, of the people. The German philosophy of the State and of the divine right of kings—we have always held that this German view of things was anti-Scriptural and anti-Christian. We are fighting to destroy this system of government that throttles the best in man, and is a constant menace to the rights and peace of the world.

5. We would piace ourseives on record as supporting our great President and our great government to the utmost of our power. We regard President Wiison as the greatest living man in the world to-day—a man of big brain, of big heart, of big faith, of big courage. In his great heart he hates war and ioves peace. We believe he did everything in keeping with the dignity of our nation to preserve the integrity of our fundamentai principles of government, to prevent our entrance into the war. Now that we are at war we are profoundly grateful to have, as a nation of peace-lovers, a conscience void of offence. We believe we are in the war by the will of God, and, that so far as we are concerned, it is a holy war. We are fighting for the giory of God and the good of His kingdom. We would assure Mr. Wiison and the heads of the government departments that we are fuiiy prepared to give ioyai support to every war measure enacted, no matter how [illegible] and great personal sacrifices [illegible] be incurred.

For Committee.

LLOYD GEORGE A HARD WORKER.

Mr. Lloyd George is continuaiiy at work. His breakfasts, luncheons, and dinners are ail matters of business. Visitors whom he is unable to see during the day and whom he wishes to meet are invited to eariy breakfast or iunch. He occasionaiiy goes to his residence at Walton Heath during the week; but he is at Downing Street next morning for 9:15 breakfast. On two days of the week he goes out to breakfast; at one house to meet his Liberai and Labor coiieagues, and at another he meets his Conservatlve coileagues. During the week-end, which is now narrowed down to from Saturday afternoon till Monday morning, he devotes his time partly to reading officiai reports, discussing business with visitors, and handing out work to his secretaries. He is never aione, and he is never idle. He frequentiy returns to London for meetings on Saturday and Sunday. He has littie time for general reading; he prefers the human book. His chief recreation is obtaining information from all and sundry. His physical exercise is now confined pretty well to an occasional walk in St. Jame's Park and a walk on Sunday morning. The oniy game which he practices is goif, and that oniy on rare occasions.

Uniike other Ministers, he does not piay bridge or any indoor game, and he does not go in for social gatherings unless they are concerned more or less with public affairs.

Perhaps what is equally remarkabie in the Prime Minister's strenuous iife is the stimuius which he gives to others. He inspires and enthuses ail who come in contact with him. With all his hard work and heavy responsibilities, he maintains a cheerful disposition, and remains a confirmed optimist.—The Outlook.

Loss of Appetite is commonly gradual; one dish after another is set aside. It is one of the first indications that the system is running down, and there is nothing else so good for it as Hood's Sarsaparilla—the best of all tonics.—Adv.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA AND PEPTIRON

Conditions that are both scrofulous and anemic are very common. Many persons whose faces are "broken out," cheeks are pale, and nerves are weak, suffer from them.

There is an effective, economical remedy in the combination of Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron, one taken before eating and the other after.

FROM REV. HILARY WESTBROOK.

Since my last writing to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, I have been very busy as a pastor visiting and preaching the Word of God to my dear people, and the Lord in a measure has blessed our humble efforts and has given us success, and to-day I have the blessed assurance that the precious blood of Jesus Christ cleanses me from all sin.

I want to write a few lines on two leading subjects in the Bible that are most exquisite and attractive to me, and to my mind they are so closely connected that we cannot handle the one without touching on the other—they are heart purity and the second coming of Jesus. We find the following words spoken by Christ in the Sermon on the Mount: "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." (Matthew 5:8.) Then we turn to the Acts of the Apostles and we see in the first chapter, 9th, 10th and 11th verses, these words: "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Again in Revelation 1:7 we read: "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him." "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" (Revelation 6:15-17.)

If we will turn back to the 24th Psalm, we will find a direct answer to the question just asked. "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." We are told that the German surgeons prior to this awful carnage of war, which is disturbing the nations of the earth, were so strict that before an operation could be performed upon a patient they had a rule that they must wash their hands five minutes by the watch before they were allowed to do the work. But I guess they have abandoned that since they have become so inhuman.

God says: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." He shall come back to earth again, and "it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; and every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." "For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

The seekers after God and the old-time religion must deal with the great facts about God and religion. Science takes account of facts. It observes with the closest scrutiny that it may know all the phenomena relating to anything. Having carefully observed, it is prepared to classify. Science has to do with the ascertainment and the classification of facts. Philosophy has to do with the explanation and the interpretation of facts. What kind of education is it that ignores the greatest fact of human life? "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

How is this life obtained? The conditions are fixed by divine appointment, and the terms are never changed to suit the sinner. Yet our God, who is both holy and just, has fixed a standard that all must reach. There must be repentance and faith. These are essential. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." But it is evidently impossible to have saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ unless there has previously been a hearty repentance for sin. The sinner must throw off his allegiance to sin, and from the heart renounce all the works of darkness, before his heart is free to savingly trust the spotless Son of God. Saving faith in Christ introduces one to the way of life. "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." Jesus himself is the Way of life to those who put their trust in him.

I love the way of holiness better every day. Hallelujah! The blood of Jesus cleanseth my heart from all sin and the Comforter abides. I am

Yours in Jesus' name,
HILARY S. WESTBROOK.

FROM WINNSBORO, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: After a long delay, I will write a few lines for the Advocate. Things are moving along reasonably well on the Winnsboro charge. We held our revival meeting here in April. It continued fifteen days, and Rev. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Monroe District, did the preaching, and did it well. Brother Lutz is a fine preacher, a good revivalist, and an excellent presiding elder. The people in token of their appreciation paid him $100, and also his regular percentage of salary for the year.

During the revival meeting, we slipped off to Boeuf Prairie Church and held the second quarterly conference. We had a fine conference, and an excellent dinner, as we always do down there. Those people know how to cook, and how to feed. The Board of Stewards were on hand almost in full, and very graciously raised the pastor's salary to $1500, with the assessment for the presiding elder added.

While our revival did not result in any accessions to the Church, the Church was quickened, and much good was accomplished. We closed on the first Sunday night in May, with the house crowded to its utmost, while many could not get in. On the third Sunday in May we observed Children's Day here. A splendid program had been prepared by some of our faithful trainers and it was well rendered. The collection was good, amounting to $13. On last Sunday we observed Children's Day at Crowville, and there, as well as here, a beautiful program had been prepared by some of our faithful workers, and the program was well rendered. Also a nice collection was taken. At the close, we received three members into the Church on profession of faith. Our Sunday schools are doing well.

My people are doing a vast amount of work for the Red Cross, Liberty Loan, and Y. M. C. A. calls. We feel that this will be a great year on the Winnsboro charge, and to this end will ask all the readers of the Advocate to pray.

S. D. HOWARD.

THE FUTURE.

We think and plan for the future because we are creatures of intelligence and cannot help doing so. God made us for that, and haphazard thriftlessness and lack of foresight are no virtues in His eyes. But intelligent planning for the future is one thing, and burdensome and fretting worry about it is quite another. God did not intend us for the latter, and when we are guilty of it we are going quite counter to His will and thought. We ought to reckon generously with the fact that the future is with Him. He is as interested in our life as we can possibly be, and there is every chance that His plan for our best and highest good is not going to miscarry. In fact, about the only thing that can make it miscarry is for us to get fussy and fidgety, and undertake to interfere with it too much. God himself cannot do much for a man or woman who persists in carrying a burden of anxious care for the coming days. And the legitimate planning for the future that we ought to do is most surely made useless by the fretting and worrying that we oughtn't to do.—Christian Guardian.

human things must be known to be loved; but divine things must be loved to be known. Pascal

If we put off repentence another day, we have a day more to repent of, and a day less to repent in.—W. Mason.

SARDIS DISTRICT MEETING.

The District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference, was held in the Methodist Church of Como, May 24, 1917, with a large attendance.

Mrs. W. H. Roberson conducted the morning devotional, taking as a basis for her remarks, Mark xiv. 8, "She hath done what she could."

Mrs. R. M. Short, District Secretary, in her report stated that Sardis District led the Conference in number of new auxiliaries for 1917, also in percentage of increase in finances—the pledge being more than made. Her report proves she has been constantly and earnestly engaged, striving to bring her district up to the highest standard.

We were especially favored in having with us Mrs. J. W. Conger, our Conference President; Mrs. S. F. Riley, Field Secretary of Orphanage; Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Field Secretary of Sunday school work and Rev. J. H. Holder, our faithful presiding elder.

In a message to the rural auxiliaries, Mrs. T. T. O'Bryant struck the keynote when she stressed the importance of tithing, not only of finances but of time and talents.

Mrs. Conger's message from the Council was both instructive and inspiring. She asked that we take as our key the one given by Miss Bennett, "All authority is given unto me in heaven and in earth." She told of the plans for the establishment of hostels or dormitories under Christian supervision for Methodist girls in State universities and normal schools; of the great need of a medical college for women in China, and that the Council will proceed at once to take steps toward the establishment of such a college; that the Week of Prayer offering this year will supplement the Retirement and Relief Fund; for the first time the Council pledge was met; that North Mississippi Conference made the ten per cent increase, being the third in the roster of increase of finances; of the $2,000,000 worth of property owned by the Council being free of all debt; that more offers had been made to support girls in Scarritt Bible and Training School than there are girls to accept such offers. She spoke of Dr. Durham's series of devotional services on "The Inner Circle," and reminded us that we as missionary women are members of "The Inner Circle," and should give the whole gospel to the whole world. She spoke of the plan for the "Centennial Celebration," and suggested that all, who can, attend the joint convention of Northern and Southern Methodists to be held in Junaluska, June 26-30.

Mrs. Riley brought a message from the two hundred children in the Orphanage and made an appeal for the waifs of our State that they may be saved from illiteracy and crime.

A special prayer was offered by Mr. Holder in behalf of Miss Pollard who is preparing for work in foreign fields, and Mrs. Terry, a volunteer for home mission work.

Mrs. R. P. Neblett conducted a round table discussion on young people and junior work. The Sardis District rejoices that it has Mrs. Neblett as Conference first vice president.

A bountiful lunch was served on a lawn near the church, and so much was done for our comfort that this day in Como will be a pleasant memory to each of us.

Miss M. JONES,
Secretary.

TO BE READ IN EVERY AUXILIARY.

Dear Auxiliary Women: We are all hard at work for a minimum increase of ten per cent in our collections for 1918. We have gone "over the top" with more than a 13 per cent gain for the first quarter. Thank you for this fine beginning. And now let us make a tremendous effort to "make good" for the second quarter. Pay dues and pledges in full and secure generous gifts for the cause from every possible source. There is a great deal of God's money in the hands of the womanhood of our churches. Let us see that his cause gets it.

Our goal also includes a net 10 per cent increase in membership. To reach this will require that we secure as active, contributing members many of the uninterested women of our churches. Lay your plans now for getting these; cordial and repeated invitations and stirring missionary facts prayerfully given will win them. We must have them. Ask God to help you present the cause so attractively that they cannot resist its appeal. Think what it would mean for the Woman's Missionary Society if half a million women could be won for its membership during this year! It can be done if we will give ourselves heartily to the effort.

If I can help you in any way let me know. I am praying daily for you.

Yours in service for the Missionary Society, BESSIE W. LIPSCOMB, Home Base Secretary.

SOUTH AMERICAN LITERATURE.

"Dime novels, such stuff as Dare Devil Dick, Nick Carter and Sherlock Holmes, translated and published by Germany, is the 'literature' which South America reads." Dr. William H. Teeter, survey secretary for South America, who has made a special study of reading matter and its effect on the people of South America, expressed his estimate of the literature thus: "The so-called literature is so bad that I would not dare to talk of it to ladies—no North American could have any conception of the abominable stuff that is put into the hands of the young people of South America.

"The intellectual, educated class," Dr. Teeter concedes, "do read history, biography, poetry, but it is of the great mass of people I am speaking. In Buenos Aires the vilest kind of stuff can be bought for a few cents, on the streets or in the barber shops.

Students who expect to attend Whitworth College should engage rooms early. Dr. W. G. Henry has given the following testimonial:

"In selecting a college to which one should send a daughter a parent should consider four primary and fundamental things: (1) The health conditions of the community; (2) the cost of maintaining a student; (3) the ability of the faculty, and (4) the moral and religious atmosphere of the college. Whitworth College, now of 60 years standing, has established a reputation worthy of all commendation as to health record, moderate cost, eminent ability of her faculty, and normal and healthy religious life among the girls. Whitworth College offers advantages which command the admiration of all cultured persons and all friends of real artistic tastes. THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE.

Nothing is threatening the purity and integrity of social life in these modern times so much as the growing laxity in the observance of the obligations of marriage relations. It is time that the pure and upright members of society made their influence felt by definite utterance and action in opposition to the growing social uncleanness. Men and women who have been proved guilty of social vice should not be encouraged in society, no matter how much money they may have. Social vice is condoned by the daily press, in the theaters, in business circles, and in fashionable society. There is no place where it is sternly frowned upon except in the Church and in Christian circles. Social corruption means the downfall of any nation. The Church must stand as a fortress against it, not only to save itself, but to save the nation. A socially corrupt person is a traitor to the country.—Watchman-Examiner.

WHAT IS NEEDED IN THE PULPIT.

Some preachers make the mistake of addressing to Pharisees sermons suitable for Publicans, and vice versa. They would do well to take a lesson from John Wesley, who once preached to a congregation that was "at ease in Zion" a scathing discourse on the text, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" At the close of the service an irate hearer met Wesley with the criticism: "Sir, such a sermon would have been suitable in Billingsgate—but it is highly improper here!" "If I had been in Billingsgate," replied Wesley, "my text would have been, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.'"

Thus were revealed two characteristic qualities of Wesley's nature, and indeed of all true Christian preachers—fearlessness and pity. It is very easy to storm impressively before the weak and the broken-hearted, but what is needed in the pulpit is a stalwart courage which will rebuke sin in high places, joined, on occasion, with a yearning tenderness which will bind up the broken reed, and apply to conscience-striken hearts the precious balm of Gilead. To Pharisees preach the terrors of the law, and to Publicans the tenderness of Christ.—Zion's Herald.

Send Nuxated Iron to Your Boy in Camp

General Gibson Says He Feels that every Soldier Who Goes to the Front Should Take Nuxated Iron

Dr. James Francis Sullivan Explains Why It Helps to Increase Strength and Endurance and Build Up Weak, Nervous, Run-down Folks.

What every soldier most needs is tremendous "stay there" strength, power and endurance, with nerves of steel and blood of iron. To help produce this result there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron, says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly Physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. "I have personally found it of such great value as a tonic, strength and blood builder that I believe if General Gibson's advice were followed many of our fighting men would find it of great benefit. In my opinion there is nothing better than organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for enriching the blood and helping increase strength, energy and endurance."

General Horatio Gates Gibson says Nuxated Iron has brought back to him in good measure that old buoyancy and energy that filled his veins in 1817 when he made his triumphant entry with General Scott into the City of Mexico and he feels that every soldier should take Nuxated Iron.

Another remarkable case is that of General David Stuart Gordon, noted Indian fighter and hero of the battle of Gettysburg. General Gordon says: "When I became badly run-down this year, I found myself totally without the physical power to 'come back' as I had done in my younger days. I tried different so-called 'tonics' without feeling any better, but finally I heard of how physicians were widely recommending organic iron to renew red blood and rebuild strength in worn-out bodies. As a result I started taking Nuxated Iron and within a month it had roused by weakened vital forces and made me feel strong again, giving me endurance such as I never hoped to again possess."

Another interesting case is that of General John Lincoln Clem, who at the early age of 12 years was Sergeant in the U. S. Army and the last veteran of the Civil War to remain on the U. S. Army active list. General Clem says: "I find in Nuxated Iron the nne and ever-reliable tonic. Two months after beginning the treatment I am a well man."

And then there is Judge Samuel S. Yoder, Statesman, Jurist and for 18 years a practicing physician formerly Surgeon Major in the Army and now Commander in Chief of the Union Veteran Union, who says: "Nuxated Iron restores, revivifies and rehabilitates the system. To the man of 70 as I am, it is just as certain, just as efficacious as to the youth in his teens."

It is surprising how many people suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron which is prescribed by Dr. Sullivan, and which has been used by Generals Gibson, Gordon, Clem, Judge Yoder and others with such surprising results is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron preparations it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists and general stores.

THE STORY OF A GREAT DISCOVERY.

The hardships of a traveling salesman's life had wrecked my health. My family physician diagnosed my case as chronic gastritis, brought on by a congested liver and complicated by kidney trouble. I consulted specialists in New York and other cities where my travels called me. They confirmed his diagnosis and approved his treatment. Months passed, I grew worse and was finally compelled to give up my work.

By chance I heard of some wonderful recoveries which had resulted from drinking the water of a little spring in the Mineral Belt of South Carolina, a picture of which spring appears on this page. In desperation I tried it. On the second day I imagined that I could notice some improvement; at the end of the first week my appetite and digestion had returned, and I was much stronger; at the end of the third week I felt that I was completely restored. That was nine years ago and I still enjoy perfect health.

Knowing that it had restored my health and believing that it had saved my life, I bought the Spring.

I then determined to see whether the water would restore others as it had me. During the first year I shipped ten gallons free of charge to each of one thousand sufferers from chronic diseases. Only four reported no benefit from the use of the ten gallons. The others reported decided benefit or complete restoration. Many claimed that the water had saved their lives.

I realized that I had discovered one of the world's greatest mineral springs, and I decided to devote my life to it. But how could I make the world listen; how could I make them believe my story? The precious water was running to waste while thousands were suffering. I said, I will make them believe me by showing my faith in them and in the restorative power of the Spring. I will tell them that the water shall cost them nothing if it fails to benefit them.

Some wrote for proof and I sent them the letters which I had received from their fellow sufferers. Others accepted my offer without question. Thousands have written me reporting relief and permanent restoration from a great variety of chronic diseases.

But some of the water still ran to waste for lack of belief. I determined that every drop should be used to relieve the sufferings of humanity. To this end I requested a physician friend of mine to come to see me. At my desk I spened my mail and showed him the letters from men and women from all parts of the country who had suffered and who had found relief. I gave him my letter files and induced him to spend several hours reading my past correspondence with those who were using the water. I showed him the chemical analysis and letters from physicians and chemists explaining the medicinal properties of the water.

He believed, and as a result he has written this announcement for me.

WILL YOU BELIEVE?

I do not ask your implicit faith; only enough to try the water for three weeks as I did. I estimate that I drank about ten gallons and I, therefore, offer gladly to give you the equivalent of a three weeks visit to the Spring by by shipping you two five-gallon demijohns on my agreement that if you find that it does not benefit you I will promptly refund the price, which is only $2.00. You must promise to drink the water in accordance with the instructions which I will send you and return the empty demijohns. I make you the sole judge as to whether the water has benefitted you or not and hope you will feel perfectly free to accept my offer.

This offer is extended to all who suffer with any curable disease, but I especially recommend the water for the treatment of stomach, liver, kidney and bladder diseases and conditions resulting therefrom, such as rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, gout, uric acid poisoning, nervous headache and general debility resulting from impure or impoverished blood. These are the diseases most frequently mentioned in the letters which I have received, but my offer is open to any one who suffers from any curable ailment.

Yours sincerely,

N. F. Shivar

I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered 10 gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months from date I began drinking it gained 29 lbs., was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportions that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely nature's remedy.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 65—No. 24. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3251.

REV. H. T. CARLEY, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1918. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

The serving of God in spirit and in truth results in a life that is weatherproof. When rain detains you, and heat and cold send you to your fires or fans, you may rest assured that your worship is not in spirit, no matter how dearly you may hold to the truth.

"Do you know of a congregation where spirituality is on the increase?" This question sent us on a mental search among the churches where we have cause to pass judgment. Alas! We are giving more money, making great successes promoting the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and other "drives," but we are not impressing others with the power of Jesus Christ as a saving influence in our own lives.

Millions of eyes looked through smoked glass at the eclipse of the sun on June 8, but that eclipse did not throw nearly so many in the haze or complete darkness as has the eclipse of the Sun of Rigteousness by the worldliness of this age. It does not take a smoked glass to view the spiritual eclipse, and the darkness is more intense and of longer duration than was that on last Saturday.

A church member excused herself from church attendance because she said the lights in the church auditorium hurt her eyes. Another excused herself because she claimed her feet hurt her when she walked a great distance. Both women were seen three times the week following their spoken excuses on their way past the church building to a moving picture show. Hell will be full of such church members.

We read a press account of a meeting where the fact that Negroes of the North are sending literature into the South calculated to stir up the Southern Negro with dissatisfaction was deplored and steps were taken to prevent the circulation of such literature at this time. Whatever else the North may have that the South wants, it may stand affirmed that the South does not want the Northern view-point on the Negro question. And when we mention the South, we include the educated Negro as a part of the South. It is true that ignorance is always easily swayed by the voice of the agitator and no doubt there are Negroes who would hear and heed a harrangue of hate against the Southern white man.

THE CURSE OF PROFANITY.

We take the following from the Reformed Church Record: "The man who swears sins ten times at once: (1) He breaks the command of God; (2) he violates the law of the land; (3) he transgresses the rule of good manners; (4) he outrages decency; (5) he insults good people; (6) he profanes sacred things; (7) he shows bad bringing up; (8) he dishonors his parents; (9) he does what he is ashamed of; (10) he does what he will regret."

One of the most thoroughly disgusting habits is that of swearing. I met a young man not many weeks ago who used very profane language in his opening remarks to me. Upon learning that I was a minister he apologized profusely. I suggested that the real offense was not against me but against God in whose presence he lived, moved and had his being. Every day on the street or in offices we hear the profane tongue. Is there no way to impress upon a world that God should be respected? Certainly, we should cry from the housetops against the habit of profanity.

PRAISE FOR DR. F. N. PARKER.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate carried in its May 30 issue the following editorial comment regarding the action of Dr. F. N. Parker in declining to be ordained a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

"Will his example inspire others to do likewise? It is feared not. Excellence in the special work in which a man is engaged when the 'call' comes seems at times to be forgotten, and more than one great preacher, secretary, or editor has been spoiled to make a fair Bishop. The very spirit manifested by Dr. Parker would seem to disprove his self-estimate and establish his claim to election. But he is his own judge. His declination created a profound impression and will stamp him as a great man—greater in the eyes of the Church than when they cast their ballots for his elevation."

Methodists of Louisiana, who love Dr. Parker as a brother indeed, who respect him as one having authority, who honor him as one whose faithfulness to the Church is a record of unstained consistency, reverence him the more for the straightforward manner in which he unbosomed his very innermost soul when he took his stand at Atlanta. That he refused to be ordained is a matter for his own decision, and Dr. Parker's judgment is as good as that of the whole General Conference. His friends honor him in his decision and prayers are being made that four years hence may find him in robust health and led of the Spirit to accept the high calling of his Church.

BUY YOUR NEXT PASTOR'S COAL.

The government is making strenuous efforts to prevail upon the public to order its coal supply for next winter during this summer. There is sound logic in this policy. There is plenty of coal, and sufficient mines operating to produce all that is needed even in war times, but with the increased demands for coal by the government it will be impossible for railroads to handle, or for the mines to bring to the top, all the coal needed by our country and the people unless work at the mines continues during the summer.

The mines have no place wherein a nation's supply of coal can be stored. Dealers cannot store even a large enough supply to satisfy their customers. There is but one way coal can be handled in the summer time and that is for the people to store their winter's supply in their own coal bins during the summer time. Thus far, most of the American public has leisurely fanned the harder and ignored the urgent advice from the government to buy coal now.

Methodist preachers, for the most part, are alive to the importance of this order, but they are helpless. None of us have any assurances that we will be where we are next winter. A coal pile would be awkward baggage. There remains just one solution for the preacher's coal problem next winter, and that is for the Boards of Steward to act for the 1919 pastor. It would be wise action on the part of every official board in Louisiana and Mississippi to buy enough coal right now for the use of their pastor next winter. Store the coal and sell it laid down to the preacher, whoever he is, the day he arrives from Conference. The coal supply of churches should be looked after in a similar manner.

"EXPERTS" "PUTTING PEP."

There has appeared in the Sunday school columns of our Church press recently a story called "Putting Pep into the Sunday School Class." What the story aims to teach is a little difficult to understand, but this statement credited to a teacher of boys speaks very much out of tune with class conditions as they should be. The teacher is quoted as having said that the youngsters had told him that they did not care to know about people who had lived so long ago that the archaeologists are busy with their bones.

The article in question says that the expert offered a "present-day, right up-to-now quarterly." If this quarterly that is right up-to-now substitutes anything for the stories of those people who lived so long ago that archaeologists are busy with their bones, the quarterlies had better be burned instantly. When Sunday school experts get so expert that they have an improvement on the Bible, and have biographical sketches of men who are an improvement on the Bible characters, it is time that said experts were taken out of the expert business.

Boys may be boisterous and hard to handle, but when a Sunday school teacher finds it necessary to omit the Bible lesson in order to discuss baseball or foot-ball or the war in order to hold the attention of the lads the only solution is a new teacher. We heard of a certain "present-day, right up-to-now" teacher who brought a story book with her to read to her pupils because she said the children were not interested in the Bible and she was afraid they would quit Sunday school. It is high time for the real purpose of Sunday school teaching to be impressed upon teachers. We are getting so expert that there is grave danger of our Sunday schools losing sight of the whole task assigned to them. The business of the Sunday school is to teach God's Word so that in it the pupils will find Christ.

BE TRUE.

If I should tell you what to do,
There is a Christian rule for you:
Be true, be true.

These are the words that we should talk:
Be true, be true.

Then let no man or child forget
In this plain path his feet to set—
Be true, be true.

THE PERMANENCY OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

"On the stormy southwestern coast of England is a massive column of masonry resting upon a desolate island rock, a league or two from shore. It lifts its brilliant light steadily as a star along the firmament, to warn the mariner of breakers, and of the yawning gulfs below. It is the renowned Eddystone Lighthouse. A hundred years ago the architect who proposed to erect in such a dreary place a lighthouse—a column of stone strong enough to defy the howling blasts and surging tides of the sea—was laughed to scorn. The proposition was treated as the dream of an enthuslast. The people said that no edifice could possibly be reared in such a place to stand against storm and billows. Yet the builder, just because of the great danger, was the more determined to succeed. Almost alone he began his work. He cleared a level on the isolated rock for a foundation. The corner-stone was tried and laid. Layer after layer of adamant went down in solid strata, the structure rising into view only to excite the ridicule of spectators on the shore. They smiled contemptuously, and said the first fierce storm would sweep the masonry away. The storms came, one after another, and, like broadsides from a battery, drove the workmen from their places on the walls. But, as the wind abated, the work went on. Tempests were but arguments for perfect work. The howling sea by its very madness said, 'Build strong. Bind the walls.' Stone by stone the column rose as a monument of patience and perseverance toward the clouds. At length, after years of labor, the capstone was laid and soon the cheery beacon-light from Eddystone danced triumphantly over the billows. Even then opinionated prophets would say, 'It will yet fail; it will yet give way before the tides.' In three years one of the great storms did come. The people on the shore shuddered for the fate of the keepers of Eddystone Lighthouse. It was a night of awful crash and thunderbolt and roar along the coast. In the morning after the tempest hundreds of the people hastened to look toward the sea, lest the beautiful column should be missing. Anxious eyes through the telescopes turned hopefully and fearfully to the ominous southwest. The universal question of the hour was only, 'Has that majestic structure been swallowed up in the waves?' But how great was the joy of its friends, how bitter the disappointment of its enemies, how intense the astonishment of all, when through the misty atmosphere of the morning the magnificent upright proportions of Eddystone Lighthouse were seen, still bearing its turrets to the sky, still throwing radiance along the restless sea! Not a stone was displaced. Not a ray of light was quenched." The history of Eddystone Lighthouse is most strikingly illustrative of the history of the Church. How men have sneered at and ridiculed its builders! Voltaire vowed he could demolish the work of its buiders. Fierce have been the tempests that have raged against it. Hell has exhausted its forces to cast it down. But after centuries of the fiercest antagonism it stands in grander and more attractive proportions than ever, flooding the sea of man's life with the glory of its beams.—Wm. Downey in Eastern Methodist.

THE MIRACLE OF MIRACLES.

There are not wanting those who wholly reject the supernatural in the form of the miraculous, and yet who call themselves Christians. These include in their number not merely popular novelists and magazine writers, but even scholars of the highest rank. We need not be much concerned, however, about these attempts to commend to us a non-miraculous Christianity. Not only have all past attempts along this line been failures, but we may be sure that all similar attempts in the future will prove equally unsuccessful. And that because, as regards Christianity, it must ever hold good that the choice is not between a miraculous and a non-miraculous Christianity, but between a miraculous Christianity and no Christianity at all. That such is the case appears most clearly when we consider that we cannot eliminate the miraculous without eliminating Jesus himself. Jesus himself is the miracle of miracles, and yet it is Jesus who stands at the center of Christianity and makes it what it is, not only as a system of truth, but as a dynamic that is destined to turn and overturn until all life is transformed. No doubt it is possible to call what is left behind after the God-man has been eliminated by the name of Christianity, but that which is left behind is no more Christianity than a piece of statuary is a man. In common honesty, therefore, it should be called by another name. It is open to us to either accept or reject Christianity, but we have no right—and it will profit us nothing—to call ourselves Christians unless we trust and obey the living Christ as Savior and King.—The Presbyterian.

OUR LIVING SERMON.

By Mrs. S. J. Phillips.

"And they went forth and preached everywhere" (Mark 16:20), and so do we, if we are His true followers. It is just as impossible to be a genuine Christian and keep the fact hidden from the world as it is to travel East and West at the same time. True, all may not proclaim the message with words as did the Apostles, but our lives are daily giving out what is in the heart (and that, too, with no uncertain sound) to an audience that changes often, as we walk to and fro and mingle with those we meet, and with whom we are surrounded.

It is not always smooth sailing if we take a firm stand for Jesus. Rough waves often roll about us, but we need have no fear if we stay in the boat with Him, He will calm all boisterous waves. But we must be earnest and true, for eyes and ears are open and ready to note our least faltering step. It would be better if we could more fully realize how the people of this poor old battle-scarred world need more "living epistles, known and read of all men."

Are you criticized? Yes, often, even when you are known to be in the right—and in many ways they try you. That is part of the sifting out process. But you will never know how much you can withstand until you are tried out, and stand the test. Daily we are being judged by our fellowmen, and a note is made of a weak spot, if it exists. Did you ever hear a sinner quote a verse (they all seem to be agreed that the same verse is a good piece of Scripture to keep on hand) and smile critically while saying, "By their fruits ye shall know them?" Such critics refer to one who in a weak moment had probably failed to shine his light. A chauffeur by failing to "dim" his light may cause a wreck, but a Christian in failing to keep his light shining may cause some one to err, and the wrecking of souls may result.

The world to-day has such a multitude of distractions that drum in our mortal ears. The din of strife and disputing, the whirl and turmoil of life surge about until one longs to flee away to a quiet place to be alone with God. And, indeed, we should often do so, but only to pray and receive new strength to renew the battle, and then go back to face the crowd, to live the life of devotion to God, to preach the daily sermon of good deeds, loving thoughts and earnest intercession for needy souls about. The very needlest ones are those who do not yet realize the fact of their need.

Is the world a beggar to-day? No. Yet the needs and calls for service in various forms, and the cry for help everywhere, surely never were so pressing since God spoke the world into existence. And the greatest and most necessary equipment a man and woman can have to fit them to serve and to be their very best while serving is to realize the fact that Christ is ruling in their heart and directing their every step. The word failure can never be written at the close of such a life. No, never.

These are days when many are tempted to be discouraged. The failure of human programs of peace, the spread of the war-spirit, the interruption of missionary operations, the selfish eagerness for wealth, the mad rush for pleasure, the intrigue and corruption among legislators—if considered alone—would turn to pessimism even the most stout-hearted optimist.

But one factor is omitted in that view of the situation and the outlook—the greatest factor in the universe—God. Those who realize man's weakness and wickedness have good reason to say that the realization of ideals is impossible; civilization has broken down; international reconciliation and human brotherhood are an idle dream. Our Lord Jesus Christ said of this and other difficulties: "With men it is impossible, but not with God, for with God all things are possible." He also added a wonderful statement: "All things are possible to him that believeth."

There is no limit to the possibilities of God; there is a very serious limit to the possibilities of man; but where man is joined to God by faith, then God's possibilities become man's possibilities. It is not because of anything in us, but it is because of the nature of God, and it is because God is in us, individually, that things become possible, that without Him would be absolutely impossible. Men become God-like when linked by faith to God's power, and the power that is in God comes into them, and things become possible that were impossible before. But when that power is taken away, the Christian can do no more than any other man.

It is harmony with the will of God and believing prayer that brings man into the condition of a charged battery—a man filled with the Spirit of God. This enables him to do the impossible.

The will of God is surely to be carried out in this war or in spite of it. The man who is in touch with God, who is in harmony with Him and is acting in accord with His will, is the man who will not only remain undiscouraged, but will accomplish what is, humanly speaking, impossible.—The Missionary Review of the World.

THE DEAD ARE THE LIVING.

The dead are the living. Every man that has died is at this instant in full possession of all his faculties, in the intensest exercise of all his capacities, standing somewhere in God's universe, ringed by a sense of God's presence, and feeling in every fiber of his being that life, which comes after death, is not less real, but more real, not less great, but more great, not less full or intense, but more full and intense, than the mingled life, which, lived here on earth, was a center of a life surrounded with a crust and circumference of immortality. The dead are the living. They lived while they died; and after they die, they live on forever.—Alexander Maclaren.

We all have our share in developing the sentiment of our community. We are all equally responsible for the forces which control the moral development. Our influence depends upon what we are. We need not look at others in this world crisis. The shedding of blood and the inhuman treatment of our fellows could not take place if the lead of Jesus Christ had been followed. God permits because He has given the care of the world into the hands of man. Will man rise to his responsibility? Let us look to ourselves.—Bishop Mann.

I abridged myself of all superfluities.—John Wesley.

DANGER.

This World War clamors across the sky. We can hardly hear any other music. Thunder is hard to talk against. The American people and Methodism are as one. Methodism has no minority report on this vast battle. We are not pacifists: we fight with God for a safe world, for a decent world, for a world with a chance to be virtuous, for a Christian world.

Just because Methodism is so patriotic to the United States of America and to the united states of the planet, it is experiencing a subtle danger. That danger is that the Church should in any wise silence its own heavenly music. Patriotism is a lesser majesty than the gospel. Methodism must preach both majesties. The gospel must not be stifled by any business, however worthy. It need not be. There is a more amazing trumpet than a battle trumpet. It is the gospel trumpet.

Have a care, Methodism, lest in the revel of patriotism we become unconsciously remiss in the highest patriotism, namely, the proclamation and practice of spirituality, the preaching of Jesus the Savior, of the glory and necessity of the new birth, of the pressing character of redemption, of the insistent ministry of immortality in these battle days of death, of the necessity of Christianity above all the things this battling world needs, to the end that this World War may eventuate in a world peace, at whose heart dwells righteousness.

The Sunday school, in particular, must be guarded against a threatened falling off. Christian men and women must not less but more hold hard to the gospel. Sunday school teachers and Sunday school helps must speak in certain terms of Christianity and of Christian theology. Sunday school and Church were never so greatly needed. The Church must hold to its Sunday school, its prayer meeting, its Sunday service, its prayer, its sanctity of soul. Every church agency must be as vital as the resurrection morning. Preacher and Sunday school teacher and every church member must love Christ and talk Christ and practice Christ to the uttermost.

Beware! Danger, lest in our fervid activities our Christian fervor abate. Danger! Methodism, to your knees!—Bishop William A. Quayle in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

JOHN BARLEYCORN'S OBITUARY.

On May 15, Michigan went dry. The Detroit Free Press carried that day the following story:

John Barleycorn has had the decency to croak in twenty-eight States, and there is a deep-seated desire to see the thing become epidemic, in keeping with the old refrain—

"There was a dog and his name was Rover,
And when he died he died all over."

The earthly record of the deceased was such that we do not envy the funeral orator his task. He will have to emulate the wisdom of the officiating pastor who was asked what in the world he could say at the obsequies about a defunct reprobate who beat his wife and side-stepped his debts. He answered, "Dead easy. I'll speak of the glorious age in which he lived."

All we can indite about the now pulseless John Barleycorn is that he lived in a glorious age—which he betrayed, shamed and defiled.

He was full of years—as well as of other things. He began with Michigan's beginning, alack!

A historian deposes and says that when the United States and Canada kissed the result was Michigan.

Both parents must have been drinking, for John Barleycorn, the first-born, was an inebriate from birth—a sad instance of transmitted iniquity, cursed by the serpent of the still.

He was not uncomely in youth, and he made himself useful on occasions. He claimed to be good for sickness and low spirits.

Being a pioneer and a money-maker, he gathered politicians and newspaper supporters about him. He entered homes, banquets and armies as a friend. He claimed protection and permanence as a vital business institution.

When bold, outspoken men and women denounced him for filching plenty from firesides, the glow from women's cheeks, strength from manhood, integrity from legislators and mayors, he and his hirelings drowned their brave protesting voices with cries of "fanatics!" "personal liberty!" and the like.

And John Barleycorn lived on, rearing a frightful progeny. Of the evil brood disease, pauperism, insanity, prostitution, poverty, degeneracy, and bossism were well-known offsprings, spreading over the land like blight.

But there came a day when the keeper of the tap-house trembled, for the people rose up like a strong man after sleep. * * *

Legitimate business bade John Barleycorn be gone; industry denounced him as an Old Man of the Sea on its shoulders; the Army and Navy of the United States drummed him out of camp with "traitor" branded upon his forehead. * * *

It was really merciful more merciful than he ever was to his millions of victims—to sentence John Barleycorn to death. The world was getting to be a mighty lonesome place for him.

Friendly faces were few; and their sincerity questionable. As he walked alone, grim specters of his miserable past confronted him. * * *

So it behooved John Barleycorn to wail, "I'm only in the way," and to go off and die, leaving the sunshine of a better day to disinfect the place where his festering carcass lay.

SOME BAPTIST PRETENTIONS NAILED.

By Rev. Henry T. Young.

According to statistics furnished by Dr. H. K. Carroll at the close of 1917 there were in the United States 7,782,018 Methodists and 6,412,393 Baptists. But press reports announce that the Southern Baptist Convention recently held in Hot Springs, Ark., claimed 6,957,380 Baptists and only 5,826,157 Methodists. Why this difference? Personally, I shall lay the blame at the door of the Southern Baptist denomination until it shall make corrections through the press, which i prophecy it will not do.

The great Baptist denomination ranks second in numbers and evangelical activity to our own Church. The Baptists have done more toward evangelizing America than, perhaps, all the rest of Christendom except our own Church. God has honored the Baptist Church, and what I shall say is not against the denomination in so far as God has honored it, but because Baptists are to be blamed somewhat. Let me say, furthermore, that I have studiously refrained from attacking their hobbies from the pulpit, that some may be edified, who might otherwise have been driven from the services. Neither have I ever so much as raised my hand to influence a new convert to join the Methodist Church, who seemed inclined to join the Baptist Church. I have held few revival meetings in which I did not turn converts over to the Baptist Church.

I do not complain because of their persistency for perseverance, election, or their differing from us on any point of theory. I must accord another a right that I most certainly contend for myself. Neither do I complain because they believe in and practice immersion. I take it that they are as conscientious in their belief that the Bible teaches immersion as I am that it does not. But I am going to complain:

First, because their report as mentioned above is false. Second, because they persist in making invidious comparisons together with circulating false reports, and, finally, because we are not taking proper steps to combat such an attitude as they assume.

1. Any reputable encyclopaedia, without going to the trouble to get later statistics, would prevent making such false and misleading statements as were sent out from Hot Springs. I have heard similar claims all my life, and having been reared in a rural section, knew no better until I was nearly grown. Nor did I get the truth then from Baptist sources.

2. They are always comparing themselves with us, and usually stuff the box in order to run ahead. In what do we fall behind the great Baptist denomination. Into [illegible] Consecration of [illegible] Missionary activity [illegible] camp at home or abroad. [illegible] their equal, and in [illegible] Then why this everlasting method [illegible] and why the practice of circulating [illegible] If I thought the Methodist Church was using such unfair means of propaganda against [illegible] roman Catholic Church, I would [illegible] it if it persisted in such things. [illegible] position of our Baptist brethren to prosely[illegible] or to hinder us as a Church? In [illegible] that every lexicon and scholar agrees to their [illegible] sion hobby being correct, and even quoting Wesley and others of our own [illegible] in denying that they are Protestant and claiming always to have been the Church; in [illegible] excluding everybody except Baptists; and in claiming a [illegible] patent on church government, etc., they assume an attitude that can no longer [illegible] only ridicule or call forth but a horse laugh from us. These claims should be positively and speedily met.

This brings us to the final point of my complaints. We are not taking proper steps to combat their doings. I urge that we serve notice on them that if they are going to persist in their unwarranted and untrue assertions and thus force us to a defense in order that we may protect ourselves, we will declare a war of retaliation that shall end only when they are willing to recognize us, as we wish to recognize them, as Christian people, with views perhaps peculiar to some—but with love for all and consecration to our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I urge that we raise a special propaganda fund and furnish our people with tracts [illegible] combating these untrue and unchristian methods. We have lost thousands of members in the "follow Christ-in-baptism" dope. We have furnished them many members because of their "only Church" slush. We must either join in with them or else defend ourselves and people against what seems to be an effort, or the expression of a desire, to bury us as a Church.

One of their leading preachers in this State, and a man that I love very much, in a tract on "What Baptists Believe" (I think that is the name) makes a statement, claiming to quote from a Methodist Discipline, trying to justify the Baptist "close communion" performance, using what I am unable to find in our Discipline; and unless he should state from what branch of Methodism he is quoting he is unbrotherly and false. Baptists are using this tract to "indoctrinate," especially in the territory where we are operating.

I close by saying "we know we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." This love is not to be merely "in word," but "in deed and in truth." I love them, and I believe all Methodists do, but I am going to resent their unfair attitude, and I believe that every Methodist is about to reach the point where patience ceases to be a virtue.

SOME SOCIALISTIC ASSUMPTIONS.

One reads in a certain address that "brotherhood knows no geographical lines." Then St. Paul did not know the fact relating to the Gospel he preached when he said that Christians had special duties to those of the household of faith. The Bible recognizes the family, the Church and the race from which we spring, as having first claim upon our benevolence. And when the same address went on to say that "God intended the good things of this life for all," the Aviator's Bible says that if a man will not work, neither should he eat. In the early part of the last century, Robert Owen founded a New Harmony colony upon the theory of "the good things of life for all," but he soon found that he had on his hands every [illegible] and dead-beat in three States. A PATRIOT'S PART IN A PRINCELY PROGRAM.

By W. G. Henry, A.M., B.D., Ph.D.

Unsollcited, I desire to spcak a few words in the interest of educatlon and our educational institutions. Recently it was my good fortune to be present on the Commencement occasion of three of our schools, Port Gibson, Whitworth, and Mlll-saps. At the first I was a participator in the program, and an interested spectator at the last two. The finished product of each school reflected credit upon the particular institution.

It is so easy at the present time for the youth of the land to forsake the schoolroom with its routine and to enter some office or shop which generously gives gold. It is exceedingly easy for a parent to sin against the future of the child by consenting to such an exchange. In these days when men are surely struggling for the supremacy of Christian ideals in morals, and for the supremacy of democracy in the body politic, we, as never before, must crowd the college halls with our numerous and cholce young men and young women. Every American can but hope and pray and give, to the end that our foes shall be beaten down to the death. But to what end shall we contend on "no man's land" to scatter our enemies if, ultimately, we shall call our victorious millions back to a land whose citizenship is numerous but weak? It is the part of patriotism to support the Liberty Loan, Red Cross, War Saving Stamps, Y. M. C. A., etc., but the patriot's princely portion is to make first the education of the child. To omit the education of our future citizens is too dear a price to pay for any type of present-day economic good.

It is not amiss to urge upon the attention of our people the claims of our Church schools. They are not only permitted to teach religion but are definitely set to insist upon the spiritual interpretation of the facts of life. Our schools are not only "as good as the best and better than the rest," but they make the attaining of moral excellence, the crying need of these stlrring times, a chief end in education. While it is positively unpatriotic to be engaged in any occupatlon whlch does not help to win the war, it is equally as unpatriotic to permit our young men and maidens to be employed in other than educational pursuits.

If perchance the eyes of some young person should fall upon these lines who has no parent to asslst, financially, in the attaining of an education, I would call attention to be words of Rabbi Ben Ezra:

"Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but go!
Be our joys three parts pain!
Strive, and hold cheap the strain;
Learn nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe!"

Ye men above draft age, give!
Ye men within the draft age, go!
Ye men below the draft age, get!

THAT EFFICIENCY CONFERENCE AT GRENADA.

By Ben P. Jaco.

When I was asked to write about the Conference I at once objected, on the ground that I was not a writer. They said I could write a "good hand," and I replied that it was not my hand but my head that gave me trouble in appearing in print. My smart reply was not so original because Knickerbocker had told us that there are two conditions upon whlch men are made presiding elders: efficiency and inefficiency. I supposed the principle would apply to wrlters. On some matters an inefficient writer might be suitable, but in this case an efficient pen was needed. I also recall a forceful saying of Rev. R. M. Davis, that a certain preacher could "perform well," but could not preach much. But I am a man of very great sympathy and when my friends suffer I am moved with compassion and want to bear with them their "burdens," and "remember those who are in bonds as bound with them." For such reasons I am sending to all my frlends who could not be present these words of kindly feelings of love, to tell them some things I enjoyed that they may rejoice in my good fortune.

The greatest fact about this Conference was that it was efficient. The chief element in making it so was that the speakers were all there and each had a vital message of truth. The next element making for efficiency was that so many came, stayed through, and thought on the matter presented. I heard a visitor who had attended many such meetings say that he had rarely seen such interest in, and alertness on, such subjects. Whatever may be said about what we were before, it may certainly be said that there is great interest now and will be much more alertness in the future. One man had some misgivings as to his getting help from such occasions because he lacked early advantages. But he has a good, clear head, and horse sense, and after hearing the lecture on Amos by Dr. Jno. A. Rice hc said he was well paid for coming, and that he would be a different man forever in the matter of study. I did not ask him what he had to say after he had heard all the lectures by each speaker, because I knew he could not tell and I could not retain all that might be said.

The committce on program are to be commended for the comprehensive scope they planned for, and their good fortune in the subject-matter brought by the speakers. When Bishop Wm. A. Quayle of St. Louis, Mo., had finished his two hours' lecture on "Faust," there was found no one to describe it, for it was so varied in its beauties, so composite in its abounding elements, so vibrant with throbbing life, so extensive in the reaches of destiny, and so fearful in immortal doom as to beggar description. Those who heard it will forever have different conceptions of the names, Goethe and Faust.

I think most of us were deceived in our expectations in the manner and matter of the addresses by Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker, of Houston, Tex. So many expected humorous entertainment; they got it, but in exceedingly small portions—just enough to season some of the sanest, most earnest, Scriptural and spiritual discussions of the duty, methods, and results of evangelical effort I have ever listened to. He taught us all the one universal note—"B" natural.

Thc wonderfully successful work done on his district in demonstrating his unusually extensive study of rural church and community work by Rev. J. J. Brock, of Haleyville, Ala., was the concrete basis for his illuminating and stirring lectures. He surely put on our hearts a great work.

Everybody feels grateful to the program committee, the presiding brethren, Misses Stevens, Carpenter and Countiss for splendid music, to Rev. T. M. Brownlee for untiring attentions, and to Presldent Countiss for so much to eat at so little cost.

With these few words of cordial and sympathetic interest to all who could not attend, I will not say more now, lest my consolation might emphasize their sense of loss to the point of pain by accidental inference.

I shall, however, be glad when I may come and spend a month with you and talk it all over.

ATTENTION, MINISTERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

There was a time in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when the preachers were pald at the end of each Conference year. At that time those who were unable to pay in money gave a bounteous supply of provisions, such as meat, potatoes, "'lasscs," and other products. That time has largely passed from thls Conference, and instead the preachers are pald regularly, or they should be paid regularly.

As the changes in business methods and advancement of the times have necessitated the changes; so have these conditlons changed the basis upon which the superannuated preachers have to be pald. There is not a business firm within thc State of Mlssissippl which could maintain its business for any length of tlme by paylng its obligations only in the fall of the year. In a short time it would be forced to close its doors.

It has gotten so that farmers do not put off all their obligations until the fall, the foresighted among them arranging to pay their obligations as they become due, because they realize that some one has to pay for that delay, and it is generally the farmer.

However, with the superannuated preachers, they are the ones who have to pay for the long delay, and they have only a meager amount to pay with. Some of our pastors have not paid anything upon this most sacred fund of the Church. There is now in the treasury a little more than half the amount required to make the second quarterly payment. These faithful men must suffer unless some effort is made to take these collections and send the same in right away. W. E. MORSE,

Treasurer, Joint Board of Finance.

JOHN SHOLARS.

A SUGGESTION.

Just a word to the presiding elders, if you please.

Seashore Divinity School is furnishing a rich program this year—June 25 to July 4.

Why not help the pastors on your district to be more capable and more efficient laborers in the vineyard by helping them to get to the Divinity School?

You are of course in touch with the best laymen on the charges, and your influence would put it over and get them there.

Hoping to meet you and your preachers on the Campground soon,

Fraternally and cordially,

H. M. ELLIS.

The Commencement exercises of Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Texas, began Friday evening, June 7, and closed Tuesday, June 11. The list of speakers included Bishop John M. Moore, Professor Paul B. Kern, and Hon. G. T. Fitzhugh, of Memphis.

FIVE MONTHS AT SOUTH AND EAST McCOMB, MISS.

We reached McComb about the 20th of last December. I was really sick with trouble that had resulted from hard labor and other causes while at Meadville. Rev. F. B. Ormond, the outgoing pastor, was still in the parsonage on account of sickness and other troubles, and hence we had to go to the hotel for a few days. However, the arrangements had been made by the board of stewards and a committee had been appointed to meet us at the train and conduct us to the hotel. It proved to be a rainy night and only one member of the committee met the train.

As the train stopped, Mr. Barry and myself stepped out with suitcases and bundles, such as all married men and especially preachers carry while traveling, and waited for some one to advance to ask if we were the preacher and his wife, but in vain. There happened to be a Mr. Bennett, who is a traveling salesman and an old acquaintance of ours, on the train and he carried us to the hotel. After reaching the hotel and securing a room for the night, Mr. Barry called Brother Ormond over the 'phone, asking what arrangements had been made, if any, and found that everything was ready. He thought we had been met as planned. Presently the 'phone rang and some one called to know whether Brother Barry and wife had registered there. When informed that we were present, he replied, "I met that train and did not see anyone that looked like a preacher." But we were well received the next morning and made to be very comfortable until Brother Ormond could give us possession of the parsonage.

We were met at the parsonage by a large number of ladies, a nice warm meal was served, and the pantry replenished. Everything was as tidy as could be and we had a great time socially. The good women were busy for the next few days making the parsonage neat as a pin, and as comfortable as a palace, and this has continued through these five months, resulting in showers of linen, birthday showers, poundings, etc., until we have been nearly killed with kindness.

The churches had been faithfully served and every interest of the Church had been looked after by the former pastor, but each had been gradually waning for several years. And to make more gloomy the future of our Church, the Baptist churches in South and East McComb went on full time on January 1, but our congregations grew larger every Sunday and someone joined the Church at nearly every service. We secured Rev. J. V. Bennett for the month of March, to hold two meetings for us. We closed at South McComb with fifty-eight members. This includes those who had joined before and during the meeting. This was said to be the best meeting this church had had in years. We then went to East McComb and closed with twenty-seven members, some of whom had joined before the meeting. This was an eye-opener to the town, but with Brother Bennett as the evangelist you will always open the eyes of the people. He is in my judgment one of the best helpers we have had in a meeting. We have now received altogether 97 members at South McComb Church and 52 at East McComb, a total of 149, and only a few of these by letter. The number of new subscriptions to the Advocate has more than doubled our allotment. The Sunday school attendance is about three times as large as when we came. The Children's Day offering was very much in advance of last year. The prayer meeting has more than doubled in attendance, and some have been converted in prayer service.

We have organized an Epworth League. We are not able to report more than its having been organized, for it has just started, but we are expecting great things of our young people, since we have some of the very best to be found anywhere in the world. The outlook of the Church is bright from every view-point. We could not afford to close without mentioning the invaluable service and help rendered to us by Rev. J. Loyd Decell, who is doing everything in his power to help make the work in this charge a glorious success. We will always praise God for him.

Mr. Barry has made about two thousand pastoral calls during the five months, notwithstanding the fact that I have been in bed ten weeks during the time, and he had to take me to New Orleans to the hospital and stay a week. At this writing he is tired and nervous, yet has an anxious heart and a determination to continue his work in such a way as to make possible the best of the wine later on in the year; by the help of God. We have no fears but that we will be able to say to Bishop Kilgo next December, when the Conference meets here in our city, "All is up, Bishop."

My health has improved to the extent that I can take hold and help in my way to forward the cause. I have made 130 calls, which have afforded me great pleasure. We request prayers that the Lord may continue to use us here and elsewhere as the Bishop may direct for His glory and the salvation of souls. Mrs. A. B. BARRY.

The Executive Committee was instructed to get data concerning budget of funds needed for prosecuting the work and report to a future meeting of the Commission. The time and place for the next meeting of the Commission was left to the decision of the Chairman, Bishop Lambuth, and the Secretary, Dr. Watson.

The Executive Committee met in Washington, D. C., May 29, 1918. The Secretary reported the opening and furnishing of an office at 40-41 Washington Post Building, Washington, D. C., and this action was approved. Mr. John Victor, of Lynchburg, Va., President of the Peoples' National Bank, First Federal Reserve, and Treasurer of the Virginia Conference, was elected Treasurer. A meeting of the War Work Commission was called to meet at 9:30 a. m., Friday, June 7, in the Assembly Room of the Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Liberal subscriptions have already been made for the prosecution of the War Work, notably subscriptions of J. J. Gray, Mt. Pleasant, Tenn., of $25,000; Bishop W. R. Lambuth, $1000; Ed. F. Scheffey, Lynchburg, Va., $1000, and John R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn., $1000.

It was decided to fit out our chaplains, some twenty in number, who are expecting to go across immediately, with necessary equipment for their work. It is estimated that the necessary equipment of chaplains not provided by the Government will range from $600 to $1000. The Secretary has begun the work of Chaplain selection and endorsement, in co-operation with the Federal Council of Churches, and of securing chaplains and searchers for the Red Cross.

The new chaplain act has been signed by the President and the War Work Commission office has been notified that 60 chaplains are required to supply the quota of our Church. The Secretary will at once enter into correspondence with our Chaplains, Camp Workers, Nurses of our Church, Y. M. C. A. Secretaries, and others with reference to lines of service. Steps are being taken through correspondence and otherwise to organize the Annual Conferences in correlation with the general War Work Commission. As these arrangements are perfected and funds come in, help will be rendered in many phases of camp and community work in or adjacent to the camps needing such.

It is contemplated that Bishop Lambuth sail for England at an early date, and from thence he will go to France and take up such lines of action as we can prosecute to help and bless on that side. The Commission is alive to the stupendous task and great opportunity of the Church, and asks the co-operation of all throughout the Church.

"Brethren, pray for us."

TO THE THINKING LAYMEN.

You want your pastor to be at his best. You know the success of the charge depends on this.

But no man can long remain at his best when held to a steady grind and denied seasons of rest and inspiration. The bow kept strung inevitably loses its spring.

Why not help your pastor to remain at his best? Let me suggest:

The influences needed to renew the weary pastor's vitality, enlarge his vision of opportunity, intensify his zeal and equip him with new enduement of power from on high are to be found at Seashore Divinity School, to be held this year June 25 to July 4, on Seashore Campground, near Biloxi, Miss.

The program this year promises instruction, inspiration and association of the highest order. Every preacher within reach ought to be there. YOUR pastor ought to be there.

Will you not see that he is given a vacation for this time—June 25 to July 4—and that sufficient funds to cover all expenses of the trip are put in his hands in ample time?

This will not only bring happiness to him, but prove a profitable investment for your charge.

Shall we look for your pastor at the Seashore Divinity School? Or will your charge cheat him and itself of the chance?

It is up to the thinking laymen to take the lead.

H. M. ELLIS.

A WORD TO THE PASTORS.

Seashore Divinity School has provided a splendid program for this session and you will lose greatly if you fail to come.

Remember the time—June 25 to July 4—on Seashore Campground, Boiixi, Miss.

If you want an outing, this is a royal place for it, and there is no better time. The water is delightful and the fish are biting their best.

And, by the way, don't you reckon your presiding elder would enjoy it—and don't you reckon he needs it? Suppose you try it on him any way. It can't do him any harm. Shall we look for him—and YOU? H. M. ELLIS.

CURRENT NOTES AND COMMENT.

Buying Booze and Paying Pastors.

We are told that in 1917 the American people paid $415,000,000 to support the ministry serving her congregations. During the same time the other crowd paid $1,500,000,000 for liquor. It would appear that spirits come higher than the gospel, or else the devil's gang has the most money.

Another County Big.

Born to the State of Mississippi on May 28 the County of Humphreys. The child measures 100,000 acres of land and weighs $2,000,000 in value. The county seat is Belzoni, and Silver City, Midnight and Louise are included within her borders.

Mississippi and Louisiana Red Cross.

There are 97,781 members of the Junior Red Cross in Louisiana and 34,318 in Mississippi. Louisiana paid $1,935,854 on an allotment of $800,000 in the recent Red Cross Drive and Mississippi paid $898,788 on a $350,000 allotment. Both States more than doubled the quota.

Salaries of Bishops.

The salaries of Bishops in our Church are now fixed at $5000 a year, with $1200 allowed for clerical help. The retired Bishops are allowed $2500 per year. This is less than is received by a great many men who are in the regular pastorate, perhaps not of the M. E. Church, South, but of other denominations.

The Bust of Bishop Candler.

The unveiling of the Bust of Bishop Warren A. Candler at Emory University during the recent session of the General Conference in Atlanta was a great occasion. When the beautiful piece of art was exposed to sight it is said that Bishop Candler viewed it and then turned away, covering his tear-filled eyes with his hands. On the Bust were these words:

"WARREN AKIN CANDLER sometime President of Emory College, one of the founders of Emory University and its first Chancellor, one of the world's great thinkers and educators, whose inspired speech is a challenge to all gospels of negation; a master of men whose Master is Christ."

He Died a Spy.

It is reported that Dr. H. L. E. Luering, for many years reputed to be the most brilliant linguist of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was caught in London, England, and shot as a spy. Speed the day when by this or some other means Methodism may be set free from all who will wear the cloak of the Church and serve the cause of the arch enemy of our Nation. This is no time to urge our brethren of the North to weep not.

Housewives, Please Get This:

Another economy measure is the use of potato butter as a cheap substitute for butter. Potato butter is made in England at a cost of less than ten cents per pound. Peel the potatoes and boil them until they fall to pieces and become floury. Then rub through a fine sieve into a warmed basin fourteen ounces of potatoes and add two ounces of butter or of margarine and a teaspoonful of salt. Stir the mixture until it is smooth, then mould it into rolls. Keep the rolls in a cool place. To make the appearance attractive use butter coloring. If the potato butter is to be kept for more than a few days a butter preservative should be added.

The Soldier Job is Serious.

A chaplain of many years' experience remarked in our hearing that the public was willing to entertain soldiers in every sort of manner. Dances, moving pictures, vaudeville, and diversions of all kinds are invented as if the soldier boy never had had a solid thought in his life and had no ability to think. What the soldier needs and for a most part really wants is something solid. His is a serious task and demands the attention of a serious man.

Will They Unseat Stafford?

There is a rumor to the effect that his District will invoke the Referendum and Recall Act in order to unseat Senator E. M. Stafford of New Orleans for having cast his vote in favor of the adoption of the National Prohibition Amendment. If such action is taken, it will permit the case of John Barleycorn to be tried on the platform before the rank and file of the citizens of New Orleans. This privilege is to be desired. The exercise of the recall might lose Senator Stafford his seat, for New Orleans is soggy wet, but it would lose Rum a large block of votes among the intelligent listeners who would hear truth as never before.

Roman Catholics Use Big Numbers.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate is conducting a census of cantonments for the purpose of finding out how many boys belong to each of the larger denominations. Thus far, twenty-six cantonments have been enrolled and of the 433,679 soldiers interviewed, 95,098 were Roman Catholics and 80,858 were Methodists. The Roman Catholics have been claiming from thirty-five to forty per cent of enlisted soldiers, but actual statistics give them but little more than twenty-two per cent. Methodist have more than eighteen and a half per cent.

There is Danger Ahead.

Twenty-six spring Conferences were held in the M. E. Church and statistics show that there was a decrease of 37,400 in Sunday school enrollment; 20,952 decrease in Sunday school attendance; 11,525 decrease in number of conversions, and 10,064 decrease in number of accessions to the Church over the previous year. If such a decrease should be repeated for many years, Northern Methodists would be in a bad way. Going backward is fraught with many dangers. It would be well to examine Sunday school literature, Sunday school teachers, and Methodist preachers, as well as the habits of the people. A really live Gospel scarcely ever fails to attract.

Boy Scout Work and Christianity.

It would be well for the men who have influence over Boy Scout Troops to look to the kind of influence that is dominating the order. Scouts in uniform have been used in New Orleans to sell numbers for a raffle wheel; sent out on the streets to sell tickets to Sunday night theater benefits; have been led on long Sunday hikes and taught to do many things that a real Methodist boy ought to have conscience enough not to think of doing. If Scoutdom is to be dominated by such practices it is high time the order ceases to be a part of our Sunday school movement. A protest from Methodist scout-masters should be heard to the heights of the order.

The Mormons are Still With Us.

On different dates a certain New Orleans daily paper has carried a column advertisement setting forth the doctrines and claims of the Mormons. It is unfortunate that the business management of a daily paper would sell the privilege to any set of people to disseminate a doctrine so unholy as is the Mormon doctrine. An advertisement, paid for, setting forth Mormon claims should meet instant resentment from Methodists and all right thinking people. When your newspaper carries such matter let your protest be heard by the next mail.

Bishop Ainsworth Honored.

Bishop W. H. Ainsworth has been elected President of the Board of Trustees of Wesleyan College to take the place made vacant by the resignation of Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Hon. Charles W. Fairbanks Dead.

The press dispatches on June 5 carried the sad news of the death of Hon. Charles W. Fairbanks of Indiana, formerly Vice President of the United States. He was an honored statesman, a cultured gentleman and an ardent Christian and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Hens Have No Hun Blood.

Some one who had nothing else to do last year seems to have busied himself counting the eggs American hens laid. He announces that the grand total was two billion dozen, or the equal in food value of three million head of cattle.

Boosting Prices of Dairy Lunches.

Restaurants are charging in many places three times as much for dairy products as they did two years ago. It is cheaper to-day to buy a meat lunch than a dairy lunch. It seems that if the price of anything ought to be kept down, it is the price of those things that are perishable and cannot be sent to Europe.

Read This Aloud Sunday Morning.

It would not be considered good taste for the pastor of your church to do such a thing, but one of the church members might ask for a little time and read the following aloud to the congregation:

"Really is the pastor's support rising with the cost of living? When the farmers get twice as much for butter and eggs, do they lift the 'salary' of their pastor in proportion? In brief, do they realize that in its purchasing power they pay their pastor this year what may be only about half of what it was a couple of years ago?

"It is scarcely fair to ask men in this land of plenty and these times of great prices and profits to see their stipend, for themselves and family, gradually shrinking as prices soar higher and higher. And our laymen may put it in their hats where it can be seen every time they take their hats off or put them on, that they cannot expect young men of high talent to appreciate any thoughtless parsimony.

"We have no expectation and no wish that the ministry as a class will be well paid—paid as the same talent is paid in other occupations. But we do affirm that the minister might be paid as well as the brick layer, the miner, the peddler or the furnace stoker. The minister of the gospel does not expect the reward of his labors to be in dollars and cents; it is in souls; it is jewels for the Savior's crown; his treasure is in heaven.

"But what of a penurious official who, having plenty himself, sees his pastor next door to want?

"However, on the other hand, it is to be said that generally pastoral support has been advanced all along the line. In reality it is the very exceptional case where a layman wishes his pastor to be underfed and underclothed, underpaid as to his library and disheartened as to his credit and honor. This, in fact, is very rare. We are trying to get in under the cuticle of that exceptional layman. But, alas, that kind does not take a Church paper—and this, after all, is wasted powder."

WAR CONDITIONS
—REFLECTED IN—
TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

MISS FRET AND MISS LAUGH.

Cries little Miss Fret,
In a very great pet:
"I hate this warm weather; it's horrid to tan!
It scorches my nose,
And blisters my toes,
And wherever I go I must carry a fan!"

Chirps little Miss Laugh,
"Why, I couldn't tell half
The fun I am having this bright summer day!
I sing through the hours,
And cull the bright flowers,

—Margaret E. Sangster.

A SMALL BEGINNING.

One day a litle English girl was walking along a street in London, on her way to school. She carried her books and a little bouquet for her teacher. A poor little boy, leaning on crutches, said to her: "Say, gimme a flower?"

The kind-hearted little girl picked out a rose and gave it to him. Four or five other children gathered around her, each begging for a flower; and one by one she gave them all away, and had no bouquet that day for her teacher.

The next day she took two bouquets, one for the teacher and one for the street children, and day after day she carried flowers until at last she carried a basket especlally for the poor children.

This was the beginning of the Flower Mission. The news spread and the idea was taken up all over London, and then some one in Boston began it, and then in New York, and now thousands of flowers are given away all over the country. So all this beautiful work started with one kind-hearted little girl.—Anonymous.

MAKING OTHERS HAPPY.

A dozen pairs of little shoes and slippers hung down almost to the floor from that infant class bench, and a dozen little maids kept them swinging back and forth all through the lesson hour. Ada Bryce was so busy gazing at her own pretty, shiny boots that she did not notice a pair of very worn shoes at the other end of the row.

"Why, what a shabby pair of shoes to wear to Sabbath school!" she thought to herself, when she caught sight of them; "and what a faded dress that little girl has! I am glad she is not sitting by me," and she smoothed her own dainty frills with a chubby hand.

The teacher was speaking again, and her words set Ada thinking. "Now, girls, you have answered well to-day, and I want to know who will promise to remember the lesson during the week and try to make some one happy whenever she can?"

Up went Ada's hand with the rest, and her eyes turned again to the little stranger, whose name, she had discovered, was Janey Burns. "I don't believe she is very happy," she thought; and before she knew it, almost, she had smiled at the little stranger, whose big, wondering eyes smiled back into her own.

As the infant class scholars trooped out for the closing exercises a little figure in a dainty dress slipped into the seat beside Janey Burns and a soft little voice whispered: "I guess I'll sit by you. You can hold my new muff if you like. It's cozy to put your hands in."

As she and Lucy Miller trotted home from Sabbath school together Ada whispered in Lucy's ear: "It's easy to make people happy; and isn't it funny? It makes you feel as if some one were making you happy, too!"—Jewels.

A POETIC TRAGEDY.

"Bill," the poet gasped, staggering into his friend's room.

"Why, what's wrong?" the friend enquired, startled as he grasped hold of the tottering man.

"Wrong!" the poet muttered. "Ye gods! I wrote a poem about my little boy. I began the first verse with these lines:

"'My son! My pigmy counterpart.'"

"Yes? Yes?"

The poet drew a long breath as he took a newspaper from his pocket.

"Read!" he blazed suddenly. "See what that criminal compositor did to my opening line."

The friend read aloud:

"My son! my pig, my counterpart!"—The National Monthly.

SHOW RESPECT FOR OUR PARENTS.

Jesus was "subject unto them." That is one reason why he not only "advanced in wisdom and stature," but also "in favor with God and men." Any child to-day who shows respect for his parents wins the approval of God, as well as the esteem of all right-thinking people. It is positively disheartening to find a sentiment among so many people that obedience to parents is Puritanical and old-fashioned, and therefore, out of date. It is really alarming to see so many of them grown up, increasing in stature, and oftentimes in worldly wisdom, but never heeding the voice of divine wisdom which says, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right," or the first commandment with promise, "Honor thy father and thy mother." There is a disposition to chafe at the restraints of thoughtful parents and teachers and to break away from home at the first opportunity to explore the world, or to "make a name" for themselves. This may seem to be the romantic thing to do, but it is not the heroic thing. Any foolish boy or girl can run away from home, but it often requires courage and resolution and patience to stay with one's work and to bo subject to one's parents. This is one shining lesson that comes from the boyhood period of Jesus' life.—Gospel Advocate.

A PACKAGE OF MIXED SEED.

"Have you any seeds of kindness for sale?" a little boy asked at a seed store.

"Seeds of kindness, what are those?" said the seedsman.

"'Then scatter seeds of kindness,
For our reaping by and by.'

I have a little garden and I want to plant some kindness seeds."

"Oh, those come in a mixed package," said the seedsman, as he took a big book from a shelf.

"That looks like a Bible," the little boy thought, and sure enough it was.

"Let me see; I think I will find that package of seeds in 2 Peter, chapter one," said the man. "Yes, there it is; see if you can read it for me, beginning with the fifth verse."

So the boy read: "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity."

"Eight kinds of seeds in this package you see," said the man.

"But aren't there any real seeds?" said the boy. "Does it just mean that you are to be kind to folks?"

"Yes, that is what it means," said the man. "but kindness and charity and faith are real things and if you plant them in your heart they live and grow, just as seeds grow in the garden."

"What is the reaping by and by?" said the boy.

"It means that if you are kind, people will be kind to you," said the seedsman, "and, better than all, it means that God, who is kind to the unthankful and evil, will be pleased with you."

"I shall find that package of mixed seeds in my Bible when I get home," said the boy, "and it may help me to remember to be kind all the time."—Classmate.

FROM BAD TO WORSE.

My small niece, aged four, came running into the room where her mother and I were sitting.

"My dolly's sick," she said, "and I don't know what's the matter. I gave her water and she can't swallow that; the doctor gave her a pill and she can't swallow that."

"Then," said I, "I don't see but that you had better try Christian Science for her."

"We have tried it," said she, "and she can't swallow that."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

"Did old Skinflint want to buy a lot?" asked the superintendent of the cemetery.

The clerk shook his head. "He asked the cost of a grave, but he was afraid he might not get the full value of it."

"But didn't you tell him a man has got to die some time?" exclamed the superintendent.

"Surely I did, but he only answered, 'Suppose I should be lost at sea.'"

A ragged, poor, and friendless New Orleans boy was asked, "Do you not think that if there was a God he would tell somebody to give you clothes and other things that you need?"

"He does tell somebody," replied the boy," but somebody forgets."—Anonymous.

A STATEMENT FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Dear Dr. Meek:

As chairman of the Publishing Committee, I wish to express to you my appreciation of your devotion to the trust imposed in you as editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. And now that for a time you relax your toil, I pray that you may soon feel the return of that vigor and strength needful for the performance of other services in the interest of our great Church, and that God's blessing may rest upon you at all times.

Rev. Henry T. Carley, a professor in Centenary College, has been selected as Editor until the regular meeting of the Publishing Committee this fall. Brother Carley will be in the city during the whole summer and will give personal attention to the work. This is not to be construed to mean that he will not accept invitations to visit Conferences and charges in the interest of the paper.

Yours truly,

J. M. HENRY.

A PERSONAL WORD FROM THE PUBLISHER.

During the eight and one-half years that I have been associated with Rev. R. A. Meek in the office of the New Orleans Christian Advocate I have learned to love him, and I feel that it is appropriate that I speak a personal word at this time. Brother Meck should be commended for his devotion to his work, and for his efforts to conserve the interests of the paper and get it out in good shape. Besides attending to his editorial duties, Brother Meek was always ready to assist the Publisher in any way he could, and his advice and counsel were freely sought. He showed the utmost consideration for the Publisher, and for the other members of the Advocate force. Our attachment for him and his son, Robert, was such that we gave them up with the greatest reluctance. Because of his congeniality, the time that we have spent together will ever be remembered as one of the most pleasant epochs in my life.

CHAS. O. CHALMERS.

QUR NEW EDITOR.

We take pleasure in presenting to the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate Rev. Henry T. Carley, who has been elected to the office of Editor of the Advocate by the Publishing Committee to succeed Dr. R. A. Meek, resigned. Brother Carley will serve our Church in this office until a permanent Editor is elected at the annual meeting of the Publishing Committee in October. He is not a stranger to the Advocate family. Having been born, reared, and educated in Mississippi, and being the son of a Methodist preacher, he came to his full manhood known by Methodists of all parts of the State, and he is regarded with favor by all who know him. Being a product of Millsaps College, he is indeed the brother of hosts by a fraternal tie that only exists among students and former students of the same College. He is also a B. D. graduate of Vanderbilt University.

But our new Editor came to Louisiana more than a decade ago and has made Louisiana his home and field of labor. After a happy experience in the pastorate, he gave his services to Centenary College for seven years and as a teacher of our young men, tied himself by that same college feeling to another host of people. Thus by birth, training, and service he is linked to the life of both the States in our Advocate territory. It is not necessary to comment on his ability to edit the Advocate. The very fact that the Advocate Publishing Committee has selected him as the successor to so able an Editor as Dr. R. A. Meek speaks loud enough. We commend him to the Advocate family, and bespeak for him an appreciative constituency, and we feel that all of us have in him an able exponent of the doctrines and polity of the Church we love.

"LET US MAKE A GREAT 'PUSH.'"

"Let us make a great 'push' for the Advocate this summer," are the words by which Rev. Henry T. Young, Conference Evangelist of the Louisiana Conference, introduces the general suggestion that every preacher of our Church in Louisiana and Mississippi who holds a revival meeting during the summer months make it a matter of special effort to secure new subscriptions for the Advocate. The suggestion is timely, and Brother Young is not making a plunge in the dark when he says that the revival meeting season is the best time to secure new readers for the Advocate.

The plan that has been practiced with good results by Brother Young for eighteen months is as follows: He has the Publisher send to him where the meeting is to be held a liberal supply of Advocates, which are distributed to the families of our Church in the community. At different times he exhorts the people upon the necessity of the church paper and upon the ill effect upon children growing up in a professedly Christian home where there is no church paper on the table. Near the close of the meeting he makes a direct appeal for new subscriptions, taking names only and leaving to the pastor the work of collecting the subscription price within ten days. He has never failed to send in a large list of subscriptions, and pastors of congregations where he has held meetings have made good collections on these lists.

There will be held during the next three months, no doubt, in the three patronizing Conferences not fewer than one hundred revival meetings. At the least calculation, if but a half-way effort were made by the leader in each meeting, the Advocate would receive for its mailing list one thousand new names. We commend the plan to the brethren with the added comment that every name you send in means the co-operation to a fuller extent with the works of the Church of another family.

PUBLIC SCHOOL HOUSES AS DANCE HALLS.

Rev. T. B. Holloman, our pastor at Vicksburg, Miss., used the columns of the local newspaper of his city to enter his protest to the giving of a dance in a public school building on Thursday evening, May 30, the day designated as a Day of Prayer by President Woodrow Wilson. His protest was timely and it might be added that his is not the only community where the public school building has been made the dancing center of the community.

The dancing rage seems to have shaken reverence, religion and common decency out of a large number of people, who in almost every other way appear to be perfectly respectable. New Orleans is dance wild. Many churches that give programs on the platforms about which soldier boys congregate hurry through with these programs in order to wind up with a dance. Mother's clubs stage dances in the public schools in all parts of the city. This same condition prevails in many other places in Louisiana and Mississippi.

It is high time Methodist preachers were lifting their voices and sounding a warning note. The fever is epidemic. Epworth League socials have been known to shift from what young people call "tame" affairs to be near dances. This disease is upon us. It kills. The dancing church member is not a soul-winner, and the dancing Sunday school teacher is a positive curse to the Church.

Mincing words and sparing the feelings of others and using a soft word may have its effect sometimes. Right now the time has come for preachers and Sunday school teachers to take a radical stand. The children of Methodist homes should be kept at home when public school entertainments include dancing numbers. Sunday school teachers who dance should be relieved, even if by so doing it is necessary to turn the Sunday school into one class and have the pastor as teacher. The anti-dancing crusade should become so much of a drive that the luke-warm preacher who is willing to let the matter alone rather than stir up something will have to march in the line and fight the devil like a man or get out of the ranks. At last, it may be said that it is better to shut the door of a Methodist Church building than to have any Methodist congregation sit under the ministry of a Methodist preacher who approves dancing as it is carried on in the modern dance room.

A. J. G.

Grateful acknowledment is made of the kindness of Rev. A. J. Gearheard, the gifted pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church of this city, in assisting very materially in bringing out the Advocate this week. In fact, practically all the editorial work for this issue was done by him. Brother Gearheard is an experienced newspaper man, and more than once he has rendered valuable assistance in the Advocate office.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. A. I. Townsley, "Bishop" of Bogalusa, La., who was reported some time ago to have volunteered for special war work, has reconsidered his action and will remain at his post in the "Magic City."

Miss Pauline Glass Randle, daughter of Rev. Robert Randle of Farmerville, La., is a guest in her father's home for a short time. She has been assigned to work in Korea as a missionary and will soon set sail for her new field of labor.

Rev. and Mrs. R. O. Randle, who have been living with a daughter in Calaveras, Texas, have moved to San Antonio, Texas, and are now residing at 570 Lubback Street, in that city. They are living for the present with their son, R. R. Randle.

Dr. R. A. Meek is now with his family at Black Hawk, Miss., where his host of friends may address him. He left the Advocate office Saturday, June 1, and attended the Commencement of Millsaps College in Jackson, Miss., and went from there to Black Hawk.

As a result of the scourge of mosquitoes that have been adding to the supply of material for excuses to derelict Methodists in New Orleans who avail themselves of ever reason or none to remain away from evening services, both the Algiers and Mary Werlein congregations have screened their auditoriums.

We have been informed by the Information Department of the Illinois Central Railway Company that the new Government ruling regarding the sale of railroad tickets does not affect ministers holding Clergy Permits. Tickets will be sold to preachers as heretofore until a ruling is made to the contrary.

Rev. P. H. Howse, our pastor at Ellisville, Miss., reports a gracious revival in the church at Ellisville, which resulted in eleven accessions to the Church. Rev. J. V. Bennett, one of the Conference Evangelists of the Mississippi Conference, was the preacher and led the people of Ellisville in a most acceptable manner.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions recently sent in: Rev. D. W. Babb, Crawford, Miss., 3; Rev. J. J. Gaines, Sidon, Miss., 5; Rev. J. Loyd Decell, McComb, Miss., 4; Rev. R. A. Tucker, Grenada, Miss., 3; Rev. B. T. Crews, Vivian, La., 11.

A fine program was rendered at St. Mark's Church in New Orleans Sunday afternoon, June 9, after which the American Flag, the Italian Flag, and a Service Flag were consecrated and unfurled. St. Mark's Church has as its membership a large number of Italians and it is indeed fitting to unfurl to the breezes just beneath Old Glory the flag of Sunny Italy.

Miss Clara Chalmers, the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Chalmers, has just completed her Junior year at Athens College, Athens, Ala. She is a delegate from her College Y. W. C. A. to the Southern Student Assembly at Blue Ridge, N. C. For some time Miss Chalmers was the very efficient office secretary for her father, the Publisher of the Advocate.

Dr. Robert Selby, Commissioner of Emory University, spent the day with Rev. B. W. Lewis at Utica, Miss., on June 2. We feel safe in saying that the people of Utica were greatly benefitted by his visit. Brother Lewis reports that his work is well in hand and we are not surprised. Brother Lewis is one of the men who are known for their habit of keeping things well in hand.

Brother W. D. Little, a faithful reader of the Advocate residing in Dillville, Miss., passed through New Orleans Monday of this week and favored the Advocate office with a call. He was on his way home after having visited his son in Atlanta, Ga. We were glad to have this chance of meeting a long-time reader of the Advocate, and only wish that more of our readers would come to see us.

Rev. J. J. Stowe, D.D., our pastor at Pulaski, Tenn., and an honored member of the Tennessee Conference, has just been elected to the responsible position of Field Secretary and Treasurer of the Missionary Centenary Movement. Members of the Tennessee Conference bespeak for Dr. Stowe a cordial reception in the various fields in which he will labor. Dr. Stowe will enter upon his new duties at once.

A personal letter from Rev. Walter W. Jones brings the information that Dr. V. P. Randolph, son of Chaplain J. A. Randolph of the 2d Engineers, A. E. F., has joined the Army and his name therefore belongs on the list of "Sons and Brothers of North Mississippi Conference Preachers in the Army." Sam B. Jones, a brother of our pastor at Lula, Miss., is now "somewhere in France," having reached there on May 15.

We have a letter from Brother S. D. Rinehart, of Choudrant, La., containing his renewal to the Advocate. He says in the letter that he has been a constant reader of the Advocate for 35 years and cannot get along without it. May the habit grow on him and become contagious until it has spread all over Louisiana and Mississippi. Ten thousand men like Brother Rinehart would give the Advocate such a constituency as it really wants.

Dr. D. D. Mims, a faithful member of our congregation in Crowley and a physician with a large practice, spent last Friday in New Orleans and took the time to find the Advocate building. He reports that Crowley has a vigorous pastor who is leading his people on to greater things. Those who know Rev. R. W. Tucker, who is our pastor at Crowley, know him to be a man of great energy and fine preaching ability, who always leads his people to higher heights.

It is barely possible that some of the readers of the Advocate have photographs, drawings, or descriptions of bridges, buildings, towns, and localities now occupied by the Germans in France, Belgium and Luxembourg, or even of that part of Germany lying west of the line running north and south through Hamburg. If you have, the War Department requests you to send them at once by Parcel Post to Colonel A. B. Coxe, 1156 Fifteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

Rev. A. F. Vaughan, pastor of our Carrollton Avenue Church in New Orleans, received a telegram from the government Sunday, June 9, ordering him to Camp General Taylor near Louisville, Ky., to attend the Chaplains' Training Camp preparatory for appointment to over-sea duty. Brother Vaughan has been granted an indefinite leave of absence by his church in New Orleans and will not finally tender his resignation as pastor until he has been appointed to the regular chaplaincy.

We have a statement from Mr. Frank A. Crippen, whose reputation as a secular journalist is familiar to many, that farmers in North Louisiana are short of help and that the office of the Farm Labor Emergency Bureau in Baton Rouge, of which he is Director, is prepared to handle all applications for jobs, particularly from boys from sixteen to twenty-one years of age. "Their welfare will be looked after by the Government and they will receive a fair wage," says Mr. Crippen in his letter.

"We have lately organized two Sunday schools, making us a total of five Sunday schools on this charge," says Rev. W. N. Ware, pastor of the Walnut Grove (Miss.) Circuit, in a personal letter, which also contained a subscription to the Advocate. Brother Ware reports that two of the Sunday schools on his charge have observed Children's Day and that two others have programs ready to be rendered. He is a live pastor who sees to it that Children's Day is observed in all the schools of his charge.

Rev. R. H. Clegg, pastor of the Harpersville and Lena charge of the Mississippi Conference has a good summer's work before him. His plans include the building of one new church and the repairing of two others. The building activities on the Harpersville and Lena charge have not impaired Brother Clegg's ability to serve the Church in other ways. Besides looking after the benevolent interests of the Church, he is taking care of the Advocate. A letter from him last week contained three subscriptions to the Advocate.

The Louisiana Women's Federation of Clubs recently offered a prize for the best short story written by contestants in the State. The prize was won by Miss Alice Wynn, of New Orleans, daughter of Rev. J. F. Wynn, of Crowley. Again the honors in a contest where merit counts were carried away by the child of a Methodist preacher. A most brilliant chapter of the history of Methodism might be written about the high percentage of winners in world contests that are sons and daughters of Methodist preachers.

The Advocate carried a report some time ago to the effect that the assessment against the Lulu charge this year was $835. The figures, we are informed, should have been $885. We thank Rev. W. W. Jones for calling our attention to this mistake. And while we are discussing Brother Jones' work, it may be added that he is now holding a revival meeting at Lula with Rev. W. M. Young assisting him, and expects to have Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder of the Greenville District, with him in a meeting at Rich beginning June 30.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, presiding elder of the Shreveport (La.) District, has issued a challenge to Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, to compare district statistics at the Conference session in New Orleans in November. Brother Atkinson, who is familiarly known as "Tug," indicates in his challenge that the Shreveport District will present a clean sheet in every line of church activity and that the only district that will lead it will be that one that is more than a hundred per cent district.

We regret to learn that Rev. R. M. Brown, our pastor at Felicity Church in New Orleans, has had sore affliction in the parsonage for several days. In addition to the illness of Sister Brown, he has a little girl suffering with diphtheria. We are glad to say, however, that both the afflicted ones are improving, but Brother Brown was detained for several days from his pastoral labors because of the sickness in his home. On last Sunday morning Dr. J. T. Sawyer filled the pulpit and at the evening hour Rev. W. A. Mangum, our pastor at McDonoghville, preached at Felicity.

On June 5, Bishop W. F. McMurry turned the office of the Board of Church Extension over to Dr. H. A. Boaz, his successor. On that day Southern Methodism's greatest Secretary of Church Extension laid down his duties as a Secretary for the work of a Bishop of our Church. The Advocate recognizes the fact that Dr. Boaz is taking the place of a big man, big of body, brain and heart, but it is also cognizant of the fact that the Church has reason to look forward to the continuation of a sound business policy in the office of our Board of Church Extension at the hands of Dr. Boaz.

Just as we go to press, announcement comes of the critical illness of Mrs. J. F. Wynn of Crowley, La., the wife of Rev. J. F. Wynn, one of the noble superannuates of the Louisiana Conference. Mrs. Wynn has been in failing health for several months, and no hope is held of her recovery. Dr. R. H. Wynn, President of Centenary College, is at the bedside of his mother. The deepest sympathy of the Advocate readers will go out to Brother Wynn and all members of his family in this time of sorrow, and earnest prayer will be made that sustaining grace may be abundantly supplied.

The Camp Meeting at the Seashore Campground this year will be held in August. A preacher from the New Orleans District, the Seashore District, and the Mobile District will preach in turn. Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, announces that Rev. F. M. Freeman, pastor of the Parker Memorial Church of New Orleans, will be the New Orleans District preacher. Those who plan to attend the Camp Meeting may look forward with expectation to the hearing of Brother Freeman's sermons. As a preacher, he emphasizes the things of greatest importance.

Rev. M. A. Burns, who attends to the duties of the pastorate at Mt. Pleasant, Miss., has held the celebration of Children's Day at two of his churches. He reports both occasions as great services. Brother Burns is giving a good account of himself in other lines of activity. His letter contained the names of four subscribers to the Advocate, with the added report that he was making plans to attend the Efficiency Conference in Grenada. The man who does much for the Master must feed himself well both spiritually and mentally, and there is no better place to go than to an Efficiency Conference.

Brother M. L. White, the careful and faithful pastor of the Homewood Circuit, Mississippi Conference, writes the Advocate in glowing terms about the administration of Rev. W. L. Linfield, the popular presiding elder of the Newton (Miss.) District. Brother White says of Brother Linfield: "He is a good, strong and forceful preacher and a very congenial presiding elder. He stands pat for his Church and her doctrines and he is loyal and true to his country." The stewards of the Homewood Circuit, according to reports, have the finances in hand better than they have ever been at this season of the year.

In a letter from Rev. J. C. Ellis, of McComb City, Miss., we note the following paragraph that speaks in a manner that scarcely any other Methodist preacher in Louisiana or Mississippi could speak: "Uncle Sam has three of our boys. J. C. Ellis, Jr., and Joseph Moody Ellis are in the Navy, and Andrews Ellis is in civil service, while Rev. D. Y. Register, our son-in-law, is an Army Y. M. C. A. Secretary." Brother Ellis has reason to be proud of his offering to his country. It may be said just here that the boys who have been reared in our parsonages have proved already that they are not wanting in patriotism.

Rev. E. Nash Broyles, of Macon, Miss., Treasurer of the Board of Education of the North Mississippi Conference, reports that he has in hand the educational assessment in full from Rev. J. D. Wroten, of Benoit and Beulah charge and a handsome check from Rev. W. C. Beasley, of Tishomingo, to apply on the educational assessment against his charge. These two brethren are to be commended. Their examples, if followed by all the pastors in the three patronizing Conferences would make the three treasurers of the three Boards of Education happy men. After all, what is the use of a pastor keeping money that belongs to the Conference? That is why Treasurers are continued in service twelve months out of the year. Send in your Conference assessment money as soon as you get it.

In a letter from Rev. H. H. Ahrens, who was lent by the Louisiana Avenue Church of New Orleans to the Church at large for publicity work in connection with the Centenary Celebration of American Missions, he quotes Bishop Warren A. Candler as follows: "The Cenetenary celebration of American Missions is timely and inspiring. Methodism and the Foreign Mission Boards and Societies are contemporaneous. Indeed, the influence of the Wesleyan Revival is the source from which several boards and societies sprang. It is fitting that this Centenary celebration should be observed, and in view of all that has been done in the past one hundred years, and all that ought to be done now, it is to be hoped that hoarded treasures will yield under the inspiration of the celebration. The needs of the heathen world and the resources of the Church at home are such, the sum of $85,000,000 ought to be secured easily."

DEATH OF REV. W. L. HAMIL.

Rev. W. L. Hamil, a local elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died at his home in Homer, La., on the night of June 2. He was born in Cave Springs, Ga., on August 24, 1841.

Brother Hamil was licensed to preach in the year 1880. In December of that same year he came to Louisiana and settled near Homer. From the year 1890 to 1904 he served charges in the Louisiana Conference, sustaining the relation of a supply to the Conference. Though not a member of the Conference, yet he took his appointments at the hands of the authorities and went to his several charges, as the regular itinerant did. When this writer came into the ranks of the Louisiana Conference he had ceased work in the Conference, but he is known to many of our preachers and former presiding elders as a faithful, modest man who sought to serve his Lord wherever the Church might direct.

He has lived for years in the town of Homer and the memory of his cheerful disposition is sweet to the people of this town. He was faithful to his Church, and loved her doctrines and her system. In the latter part of his life feebleness of body prevented his regular attendance at the services of the church, though it greatly delighted him to be present. Kindly words of encouragement spoken to the preacher help so much. These words were often spoken by Brother Hamil.

He served as a soldier of the Southern Confederacy for four years and came back home, like so many other gallant young Southerners, to build upon the ruins of our fair land. A good man has gone to his reward. One of God's little children has gone home to be with God.

Sure! High Heels Cause Corns But Who Cares Now

Because style decrees that women crowd and buckle up their tender toes in high heel footwear they suffer from corns, then they cut and trim at these painful pests which merely makes the corn grow hard. This suicidal habit may cause lockjaw and women are warned to stop it.

A few drops of a drug called freezone applied directly upon a sore corn gives quick relief and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts out without pain. Ask the drug store man for a quarter of an ounce of freezone, which costs very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

This drug is an ether compound and dries in a moment and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. Clip this out and pin on your wife's dresser.

Energy

THE WORK OF THE KIDNEYS is to filter and cast out waste products and poisons from the blood stream. When the kidneys are overworked, weak or diseased, the waste matter remains in the system and causes pains in side or back, rheumatism, lumbago, stiffness of joints, sore muscles and other symptoms.

When a person's kidneys are out of order, there is lack of energy, force, vigor, zeal and general effectiveness. Kidneys and bladder must properly function for anyone to enjoy good health.

are prompt in action and tonic in their healing and soothing effect on weak, sore, overworked, diseased kidneys and bladder.

Mrs. Mary Henderson, Mt. Carmel, S. C., writes: "Before I used Foley Kidney Pills I was troubled with kidney trouble and my left side hurt me so I could hardly get up in the morning. Pain is all gone now and am feeling fine." 50c and $1.00 sizes.

On Tuesday morning of May 14, a tiny sunbeam came from God to brighten the home and hearts of Rev. and Mrs. F. R. Power and family of Shreveport. Little EDITH ELIZABETH found a glad welcome awaiting her, and soon her wee hands had twined among the heart-strings of father, mother, sisters and brothers and gained a mighty hold there. But God only lent her to us for five short days and on Sunday morning claimed her again. In His great tenderness and love, He transplanted our flower from the sordidness of this old world, to bloom in His garden of peace and happiness, knowing in His infinite wisdom that where our treasure is, there will our hearts be also. Dear loved ones, Edith is not dead. She is just away, and we are so glad that she is with one who can care for her so much better than we can. She is watching for us to come home and is waiting to welcome us there as we welcomed her here. A friend,

IVA MAY McLEAN.

S. PRENTISS CALDWELL was born on April 9, 1895, and died in the Homer Sanitarium, following an operation for appendicitis on Dec. 3, 1917. He joined the M. E. Church, South, when he was eight years old and was a good and obedient boy until death claimed him. He suffered awfully for seven days after the operation. Toward the last his father said, "Son, I wish I could take your place and suffer for you." He said, "No, papa, you couldn't stand it. It is all right with me." Prentiss was a boy that everybody loved. A short while before he was stricken, he went to Deming, New Mexico, to work on the cantonment, and while there they had dances and all kinds of amusements, but he would not take any part in them. He would say, "I was better raised. I can not go back on my parents." About two years ago he saw his baby sister laid to rest. On leaving the little grave he said, "Wiley Maude, good-by. It won't be long." And now his body rests by the side of that little mound. Weep not for him, dear ones, for God has simply transferred the object of your affections to that home beyond, where afflictions are felt and feared no more.

HIS UNCLE.

Another loved one has gone from this world of sin to the glory land of love and happiness. MOLCY ELLEN HUBBARD was born July 31, 1868, near Pope, Miss., where she lived for nearly fifty years. She joined the Methodist Church early in life and lived a consistent Christian until God called her home.

Just as night turned into day,
Our sister's spirit passed away;
Went from us to a home above,
A happy home of peace and love.

In 1894 she was married to H. L. Bowden, of Alabama. No children came to bless their home; so they took to their embrace a little homeless child, who is left, together, with the husband, brothers, one sister, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. The deceased was a devoted wife, a loving sister, and a friend to all. She never turned a deaf ear to any needing help, but was ever ready with heart and hands to aid the sick and distressed. Just before her spirit took its flight, she reached out a beckoning hand, calling father, mother, brother and sister, who had preceded her to the glory land.

One more has gone on before.
To greet us on that happy shore.

Her sister, LULU EVANS.
Pope, Miss.

Just as the night had released mother earth and May 21, 1918, dawned, WM. L. DOTTERY, M. D., in great agony of body, breathed his last and passed into the great beyond. Barely audible, his last words were, "Oh, I am suffering so. I am nearly dead, but I am ready to go." How heart-rending to see such suffering and not be able to alleviate it! Dr. Dottery was born in Pickens County, Ala., on Sept. 16, 1842. He came with his parents in early childhood and settled near Bellefontaine, Webster County, Miss. He was twice married. First, to Susan A. Greer, and second, to M. Baker. Of the first marriage two children, Homer, of Greenville, Miss., and Thomas, of Amory, Miss., remain; of the second, S. B., Okolona, Miss., at whose home he died, and Mrs. Pilgreen, of Carbondale, Ill., survive him. In early manhood he joined the M. E. Church, South. He saw imperfections forcibly on every hand and it debarred him from enjoying Christianity as he should, but he was truly a Methodist and never permitted the doctrines of his Church to be infringed upon in the least. We are so glad our "Heavenly Father knows" the conflicts, difficulties and sufferings through which during life he passed, and with a tender, pitying eye and merciful heart, forgave his inconsistencies and shortcomings and safely anchored his soul where there will be no more suffering, misunderstandings and failures.

His wife,
M. BAKER DOTTERY.

DAVID JOSEPH BAILEY was born in Holmes County, Mississippi, on August 4, 1839, and, after more than a year's illness, fell on sleep at his home near Lexington, Miss., Wednesday, May 22, 1918, at about 6:30 o'clock p. m. He attended school at Sharon, Miss. He joined the Confederate Army in 1861 and served until 1865. The year before going to war, he was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, that is, in 1860. This to him was the great event of life, and from it he projected his life actively into the kingdom of God. His marriage to Miss Crissie Isabella Beard of Sharon, Miss., occurred on December 7, 1863. To them were born four sons and a daughter, whose worthy lives commend his good example. The first time I heard of this man was when a friend told me that our preacher brother was at the local hospital for an operation. I was surprised because our church roll did not indicate that there was a man of this official capacity. I hurried to meet him and found him in great affliction but happy, with kind words for all, and a joyous religious experience. He had given the Church so many years' service as a Superintendent of the Sunday school and exhorter, and had been so abundant in good works that the people spoke of him as a minister. I visited him often alone and would frequently carry his soldier comrades to see him. On the last two such occasions we left him rejoicing after religious services. On May 23, at 11 a. m., at old Oregon Church, we held his funeral service in the presence of many friends and laid his tired body to rest in the cemetery, spreading the flowers of love upon the mound. His children and many whom he helped will rise up to call him blessed.

BEN P. JACO.

Lexington, Miss.

Death came Saturday afternoon, June 1, 1918, at 2:30 o'clock to EDNA ELOUISE STEWART, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Stewart. She was born on July 6, 1917. Her death came as a shock to all of us, for she was sick only a few days. God permitted her to live with the father and mother long enough to entwine her sweet little life about their affections, as a precious child always does. Death at any time is sad. We are sometimes prone to ask ourselves this question: "Why does God come and take our little ones from us?" And the answer that comes to us is this: "He had a place for them to fill in heaven." I sometimes feel like that if heaven is to be peopled thoroughly, that God will have to take the precious little children to do it. Her smiling little face gave an impetus to the lives of others with whom she came in contact. Little Elouise's life was a beautiful life. Her place will be greatly missed in the bome by the father and mother, and none can fili that place quite so well as she did, but God. While her place is vacant and we shall never more hear her sweet voice on earth, we know that she is in heaven, for God said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." We can not understand why she was taken from us so soon. But we know that our Father doeth all things well. And may his rich grace enable those who sorrow to say, "Thy will be done, not ours." Our sympathies are with the grief-stricken parents, for while they cannot call their little darling baby back, they can go where she is. Weep not as those who have no hope, for sbe is at rest. The funeral services were conducted at the parents' home on Seventh Avenue and Sixteenth Street by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. T. Phillips and Rev. H. E. Raley, on Sunday at 3 o'clock p. m., where a large concourse of people were gathered together to pay tribute to the memory of this sweet babe, after which tbe form of little Elouise was laid to rest in the Oak Grove cemetery, to await the resurrection morning.

HILARY S. WESTBROOK.

Meridian, Miss., June 5, 1918.

WILLIAM ROBERT PERSON, the loving son of W. H. Person, departed this life on May 13, 1918, at Portsmouth Naval Hospital, and was laid away in the little cemetery at Mt. Pleasant, Miss., on May 17, 1918. The funeral service was held by his former pastor of Memphis, Tenn., Rev. H. O. Hofstead, assisted by our pastor at Mt. Pleasant, Rev. M. A. Burns. All was said to comfort the bereaved and distressed that could be said by both pastors. The funeral was preached at the village church where our ioved one held his membership. A large automobile bore the flowers to the graveyard. A beautiful tribute to the life and character of the deceased was paid. The most beautiful flowers that eyes ever beheld were given by his friends of Memphis, and also his old home friends at Mt. Pleasant as a symbol of the love that the friends had for our dead soldier boy. At the time Will Bob (as he was called) enlisted in the Navy he was working for Malone & Hyde at Memphis for a splendid salary, but gave it up to serve his country. He was sent to Newport Trainng Camp, where he was soon stricken with meningitis, and then was sent to the hospital at Portsmouth. After two months of serious illness, he recovered of meningitis, and was able to be up, and hoped to be able to start for home, sweet home. But alas! God knew best. He had a relapse and never was any better. After five months of patient suffering he had his father and mother visit him, and was so patient and brave. He saw them leave for home with a sweet smile on his face, which was so Christlike. He was so patient during all of his illness and was always writing to loved ones at home, saying, "Don't worry about me; I'm all right." We are glad to say our boy was reared by Christian parents, and had the sweet and gentle influence of a sainted grandmother, whom he loved devotedly. His parents made the remark so often: "He was a dutiful son, and never gave us a minute of trouble in his life." It is sad indeed to give him up. But we shall soon see him face to face again, for "there is no death. What seems so is transition." Yes! we know we shall see him again. He told his brother before he enlisted in the Navy to come and go with him and fight for our country. "If we get killed we will go to a better world than this one, where all is peace and joy." His last words were: "Tell mother not to worry. All is well." Thank God for such a testimony, and such a life before the people. Yes! his influence will live after him. He was so pure, so noble and so true. The five long years he worked in the city he was prompt in attending Sabbath school and preaching. Weep not, dear friends and loved ones, as those who have no hope,

"For every loved one that is gone,
We shall meet again beyond.
In that land so bright and fair;
We shall know each other there.
What a happy time 'twill be,
When the Savior we shall see,
With our friends and angels blest—
In that land of peace and rest.
When that happy home we gain.
Where the king of Kings doth reign.

consistent member of the same. She was sweet-spirited, meek, and an affectionate and tender mother and a faithful wife and helpmeet in every respect.

Our heart goes out to the husband, children, mother and two sisters whom she leaves sorrowing here. We know that a home is blighted and that desolation is felt. Let us not think of the separation but of a home-going, when finally the safe arrival of the last of her loved ones will make an unbroken family in the Father's House on high. We commend the sorrowing ones to our Father in heaven who doeth all things well and who will comfort as a mother comforteth.

LETTERS THAT INSPIRE CONFIDENCE.

I wish very much that every reader of this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headache, rheumatism, kidney, bladder and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other curable conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this Spring, and before I received all these letters from sufferers, I didn't take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous Spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Shivar Spring,
Box 17-L, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refnnd the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

NOTE.—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as an honorable business man and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman.

KITCHENER'S MOTTO.

The motto on the coat of arms of the late Earl Kitchener was the one word—"thorough." His life was an exemplification of his motto and the conspicuous achievements of his career emphasize the value of thoroughness in the Christian life. Thoroughness in our efforts to build up strong Christian character and in our Christian services for others is fundamental to the progress of the Kingdom. There is, for example, a superficiality in the preparation and teaching of the Sabbath school lessons which no doubt accounts in a measure for the large number of children in the Sabbath school ultimately lost to the Church. The same criticism may be made with reference to the general conduct of Sabbath schools. There are so many musical features and so many special days for which special carols are prepared, that actual instruction in the Bibie is often reduced to a twenty-minute period. This is just one instance where the churches to whom the criticism applies fall in thoroughness in a most vital particular. Every one will admit, also, that if all Christians were thorough in their study of the Scriptures, the encroaching power of worldliness would be halted and the various isms and cults of the day would not find the churches such congenial soil for the propagation of their errors. Much that is below the mark in church life and enterprise would be brought up to standard if the consecration of individuals were thorough and if those who profess that Christ is all did not look outside of Christ for their satisfaction. Men of the world do not expect to succeed unless they are thorough. If Christians will but practice this quality, they will increase personal peace and advance the interests so dear to every child of God.—Christian Intelligencer.

IN LOVING MEMORY.

Time, the tomb builder, is dark, stern, pitiless and pauses not. Remorseless Time! Who can stay him in his silent course or melt his iron heart to pity? On his silent course Time sent that relentless foe called Death, and on March 23, 1918, he touched with icy fingers the cord of life that held Sister A. W. LAWSON to earth and she was no more. Sister Lawson was 40 years old and was the wife of A. W. Lawson. To them were born seven children, the oldest of which had gone on before and was, no doubt, waiting for her mamma on that other shore. And I am sure they are waiting faithfully for the coming of the other members of the family. Sister Lawson was the daughter of Brother and Sister Roderick Bryan. She united with the Methodist Church in early life and lived to the end as a SYLACAUGA, ALA.—"This is a true statement as to the value of Dr. Pierce's medicines. I used one of his great remedies in my own family with good results, namely, 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and found it to be all it is claimed to be. There is no medicine that will come as near doing what it is claimed for it; there's no praise too high for the 'Dis.very.'"—W. H. JOLLY, Box 215.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—"I suffered for two years with an enlarged gland on the right side of my neck. I tried several doctors and they told me I would have to have the gland taken out, but a friend of mine advised me to try Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and after taking ten bottles my neck is entirely well and I not only recommend it to my friends but to every one I see in the condition that I was. I feel as though I can never be thankful enough for what this medicine has done for me."—MRS. DELLA BOYER, 107 Trinity Avenue.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

From May 31 to April 3, I was with Brother Alford on the Enterprise work. We had four services at Concord Church and one at Kidd schoolhouse. We were rained out at Stonewall. I think we had good meetings at both places. Two Cradle Rolls were promised. At the church where most of the work was done they did not have a Sunday school, but I received assurance that they would organize one. Forty-five dollars were raised on the Conference collections.

The Upper Port Gibson District Sunday School Institute was held at Gibson Memorial, June 4. We had 55 delegates in attendance, representing ten Sunday schools. In comparison with the attendance on the whole district, this was very fine indeed—fourteen schools out of the whole district, and ten out of half.

I thought that the program was very fine. Each officer presented his work in a most creditable manner. Rev. W. H. Saunders gave us a great message on, "Giving the Child a Chance." I felt that the cost in time and effort of the whole Institute was small in comparison with the value of this great message. I came from the Institute taking courage and thanking God. I wish to thank Rev. B. F. Lewis for his helpful messages to us.

Four pledged themselves to take the entire Teacher-training Course. This was a result of Rev. J. B. Cain's efforts. He has charge of the teacher-training for the district.

Rev. O. S. Lewis is a royal host. God's blessing on him and his church!

The Hattiesburg District Conference was next visited. I felt as if I were getting home, having spent eight happy years in that district. I arrived at the eleventh hour, but if the first part was anything like the second, it was indeed a most happy and profitable Conference.

The reports on Children's Day in the Hattiesburg District showed marked increase over the report of last year, and I was told that all were planning to make it "way over" what it was last year. I am grateful for this.

"Giving the Child a Chance"—how I hunger to be a small means in the hands of God to give every one of our children a chance to know God! Brethren, if we pay the price in prayer, God will give them a chance. Pray for me and the work.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS,
Field Secretary.

P. S. I hope that many will plan to take the Sunday school work at the Divinity School. I believe that they will find the books both helpful and profitable. J. C. C.

Ever Salivated By Calomel? Horrible!

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver wihout stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

SOME FACTS ABOUT OUR BIBLE.

By Rev. W. R. Williams.

The Bible is the name given to the revelation of God to man, contained in sixty-six books bound together and forming one book. Bible, the book, is from the Greek "Ta Biblia.' The word is derived from a root designating the inner bark of the papyrus plant on which the ancients wrote their books. The Bible consists of two parts called the Old and the New Testaments, separated by an interval of nearly four hundred years. These Testaments are further divided into sixty-six books, thirty-nine of which are in the Old Testament and twenty-seven in the New Testament. These books are a library within themselves, being written in every known form of literature. Twenty-two are historical, five are poetical, eighteen are prophetical, twenty-one are epistolary.

These books contain logical arguments, poetry, songs, hymns, history, biography, stories, parables, fables, eloquence, law, letters and philosophy. There are at least thirty-six different authors who wrote in three continents, in many countries, in three languages and from every possible human standpoint. Among these authors were kings, farmers, mechanics, scientific men, lawyers, generals, fishermen, ministers and priests, a tax collector, and a doctor. Some were city bred and some were country born. Some were rich and some were poor, thus teaching all the experiences of men. It extends over fifteen hundred years, yet the Bible is just one Book, because God was its real author.

He added new revelations as men could receive them. He never had to change what was once revealed. The Bible is a unit because it has just one purpose and that the salvation of man; because the character of God is the same; because the moral law is the same, and because it contains one great scheme of salvation.

The Old Testament was written originally in the Hebrew Shemetic language, except short parts of the book of Ezra (5:8; 6:12; 7:12-26) and Daniel (2:4 and 7:28) and one verse in Jeremiah (10:1). These were written in the Chaldaean language. The New Testament was written in Greek.

There are no Hebrew manuscripts older than the Tenth Century. But we know that these are in the main correct, because we have a translation of the Hebrew into Greek called the Septuagint, made nearly three hundred years before Christ.

Our Hebrew Bibles are a reprint from what is called the Masoretic Text. The ancient Hebrew had only the consonants printed and the vowels were vocalized in pronunciation, but were not written. Of the Greek of the New Testament there are a number of ancient manuscripts. They are divided into two kinds: The Uncials, written wholly with capitals, and the Cursives, written in a running hand. The chief of these are the Alexandrian Codex. So named because it was found in Alexandria in Egypt in 1628. It dates back to A. D. 350 and is now in the British Museum.

The Vatican Codex, Vaticanus, was named from the Vatican library in Rome where it is kept. The Old Testament was translated into the Greek by several Jews at Alexandria who began their labors as far back as the year 286 B. C. It is called the Septuagint. The Vulgate, or translation of the Bible into the Latin by Jerome in A. D. 385-405, is the authorized version of the Roman Catholic Church.

The first English translation of the whole Bible was made by John Wickliffe in 1324 to 1384. As the sum and fruit of all these our own King James Version appeared in 1611. It was made by 47 learned men. It took two years and nine months, with a second session that took nine months. These forty-seven men formed themselves into six companies, two of which met at Westminster, two at Oxford and two at Cambridge. The Bible was the first book to be printed. It has been translated into two hundred and twenty-six languages. There have been issued by all Bible Societies since 1804 something over five hundred million copies.

bears a name that for ninety-seven years has been on the minds if not the hearts of thousands of families. Its use began in 1820, when a North Carolina physician compounded an ointment for treating skin infections. It has been received on its merits and its constant use for nearly a century has made it a family word in every household. It's instantaneous healing effect and its soothing relief to skin infections make it almost indispensable in the home. Gray's Ointment is the first thought in all cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts and stings. Telephone your druggist for it, or write W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., for sample.—Adv.

SELF-HELP.

Every man and woman in the land ought to prize above almost every other quality the capacity for self-help; and yet every man and woman in the land will at some time or other be sorely in need of the help of others, and at some time or other will find that he or she can in turn give help even to the strongest. The quality of self-help is so splendid a quality that nothing can compensate for its loss; yet, like every virtue, it can be twisted into a fault to the point of cold-hearted arrogance, of inability to understand that now and then the strongest may be in need of aid, and that for this reason alone, if for no other, the strong should always be glad of the chance in turn to aid the weak.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Scientific Treatment For Rheumatism.

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. In order to be cured of rheumatism it is necessary to neutralize this acid. RENWAR is a salt combination scientifically prepared to neutralize the uric acid in the blood. There is nothing in Renwar to injure the stomach or affect the heart. It acts solely upon uric acid, completely eliminating it from the blood and thereby relieving your rheumatism. It is harmless but effective. Positively guaranteed by money-back offer. It is a godsend to sufferers from rheumatism. Renwar also corrects constipation. Mr. J. M. YOUR DAY OF OPPORTUNITY.

The young life of this generation faces the most wonderful opportunities ever presented by the world in all its history. This is not a day when opportunity knocks but once. Now she rushes in and crowds—not once, but again and again every day. In her many forms she opens channels of service so varied in character as to challenge every life. Especially are there untold possibilities before the young life of America to-day. One doesn't have to look about for some big thing to do. There are calls from one's country and God's kingdom to be met through many branches of service—National Defense, Red Cross, Y. W. C. A., and Y. M. C. A., the Mission Field, and just now the Centenary. In these times of particular and urgent stress, the cry is desperate for the mobilization of the youth of this land.

This call has struck a responsive chord in the life of many boys and girls. We glory in the evidences of heroism which these war conditions have brought forward in the character of our young people, many of whom have had up to this time no serious purpose in life, and we are thankful that so many are now coming into their own. It should be so.

And yet, throughout our country, in every town and community in North Mississippi, there are scores of young people, especially young women, who are blind to these opportunities and deaf to the calls being shouted at them. It is hard, even now, to get some sufficiently interested in war work to take an active part under the supervision of some one else. It is rather trying on some to attend missionary meetings, and how hard to organize a study class! These are difficult things. Yet, when we consider the exceedingly few young people who are grasping opportunities or assuming responsibilities, proving capable leaders, our hearts fail within us. It is a deplorable fact that they are so very rare.

Why should this be so? Our young people are not lacking in education and praise. Their vigor and enthusiasm are great assets. The seriousness of the times should furnish the great objective, and put a purpose in every life.

To the young people of the North Mississippi Conference, let this be my message to you: Now while this world and the Master need you as they will never need you again; now when your lives in their strength and freshness will count vastly more than they can count after a few years have passed, shoulder your responsibility and measure up to the possibilities which are peculiarly yours. It is our privilege not only to help establish democracy in this world but to aid also in preparing this world for democracy. The world is going to be won for Christ in this generation, and the young people of generations—possibly centuries—to come will envy you the opportunity of living and sharing in the big things of this day.

Do not be satisfied with doing the small tasks only. Choose the biggest thing you are capable of doing, and then grow with and out of that to still larger things. It may be hard to choose which path of scrvice to follow—there are so many. Make this a subject of prayer, and when you have found the way, go to it with your might, and stick through all discouragements. The joy and satsifaction to be found in service and the strength and growth to be gained thereby are blessings which you young people should not miss. Your home church needs your leadership; the missionary cause needs you; humanity and Christ need you and are calling as never before. To serve is infinitely worth while.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, Shreveport District, met in Stonewall on April 23, 1918. The meeting was called to order by the district secretary, Mrs. Elma Drew.

After the devotional service reports were called for. There were nineteen societies represented and the reports were very gratifying.

Miss Gatewood and Mrs. Geo. Sexton gave helpful talks on the "Value of the Prayer Circle to the Auxiliary" and "How to Make Mission Study Interesting."

Mrs. Sexton also gave to us the inspiration she had received at the Council meeting, just held in Knoxville, Tenn. She told of many great things, among them that one of our own dear Louisiana girls, Miss Pauline R. Randle, will go as a missionary to Korea, and asked that we be ready to help her, as "God was looking to us to hold the fort."

At this time we adjourned to meet in the Sunday school auditorium with the preachers of the district, where we heard Rev. W. W. Drake give a message on Missions which will help each who heard him to do greater work this year for their Master, by doing what they can to give his message to others.

We gathered under the beautiful trees where the ladies of Grand Cane, Gloster and Stonewall had spread the table with good things to eat, and while enjoying these we had talks from several ministers and laymen, also from our district secretary, who gave our aim for 1918, which was something like this: "Pledge paid in full by Harvest Day; every auxiliary in the district having a part in it, and a Woman's, Young People's, Junior and Baby society in every church in the district, with every woman, young lady, child and baby a member."

The meeting reassembled at 1:30 o'clock and after a devotional service on "Prayer" led by Mrs. Alexander, of Greenwood, Mrs. Sexton took up her message to us from the Council which was so much appreciated by all.

Mrs. C. K. Sheppard conducted the round table talk on the first vice president's work. Mrs. Drew conducted a round table on the second vice president's work. Each of these women, having worked in these offices for quite a while, gave some most helpful suggestions as well as urged having active vice presidents in each auxiliary.

Our pledge of two hundred dollars above what was paid last year has been made. It is at present $2450.

We had as our guest one known and loved by all—Mrs. T. H. Morris, who is our State organizer and who now resides in the Shreveport District.

We aim high but why not? We have the largest district, a large field and willing workers. God helping us, we will do our best this year.

We closed our happy day with prayer for our work, remembering our dear boys who are struggling on the battle field for us.

Mrs. ELMA DREW.

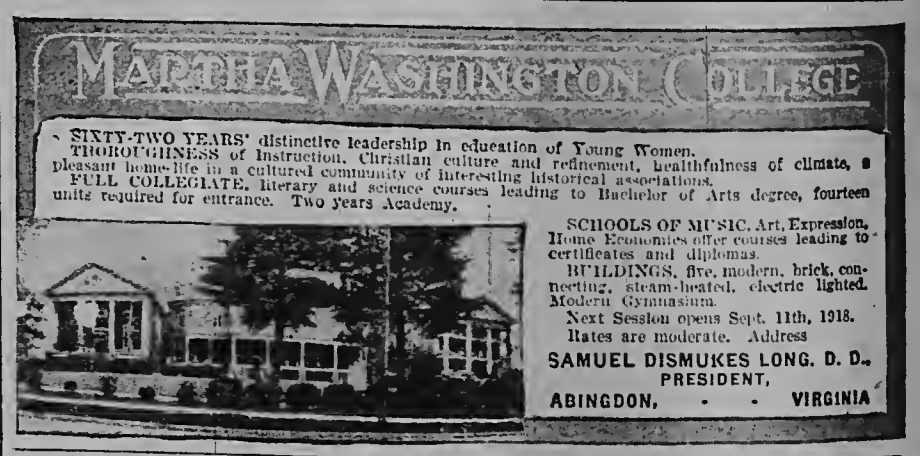
HOW MRS. BOYD AVOIDED AN OPERATION

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.



"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Sometimes there are serious conditions where a hospital operation is the only alternative, but on the other hand so many women have been cured by this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after doctors have said that an operation was necessary—every woman who wants to avoid an operation should give it a fair trial before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

If complications exist, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years experience is at your service.

A WORD FROM VIVIAN, LA.

We closed a good meeting on last Sunday night, Brother Young, our Conference Evangelist, did the preaching for eight days and nights. The people were highly pleased with the preaching and much good was accomplished. Notwithstanding there was during the week a Red Cross drive and other hindrances, five adults and sixteen children applied for membership in the Church. Brother Moll led the singing and conducted the children's services. These brethren did faithful and efficient work.

Another item of good news from Vivian is this: The people have paid the last dollar of indebtedness on their beautiful new church, which is a credit to the Church and its friends. We are hoping to wind up the year with a report for the Annual Conference that will be pleasing to the good people of the charge and approved of our Heavenly Father. I would like to mention a few names here, but their modesty forbids. I will send in about 12 subscriptions to the Advocate next week. B. T. CREWS, Pastor.

JUST A HEART THROB.

By Mrs. Thomas S. Randle.

I must write. I tried not to, for I know I am a poor writer. But my heart is over-flowing with love and gratitude. "The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places" ever since I said yes to my Lord. I did not want to be a preacher's wife. I did all I could for three long, miserable years to make my husband stop preaching, but the dear Lord sent us over near here to the old Downsville camp meeting. Thank God for that meeting and dear old Brother Pipes who led the class meeting!

Just after I had heard my husband preach for the first time, and I talked for the first time and Brother Parvin called on Sister Tom Randle to lead the grove meeting, I had a fight with the devil and told him I would try or die. I did and God wonderfully blessed me. I came to myself hugging a post and singing "Oh, what a wonder that Jesus loves me." I am so glad that Jesus still loves me and, oh, I love him and he has let me enjoy (yes, really enjoy) hearing my dear husband preach for 47 years.

Hallelujah! Praise the Lord! I have not lost my love for Jesus. No! no! It is better and sweeter than ever, for about 20 years after that first blessing I sought and obtained the "second blessing," so-called. Thank God, it was the same old blessing but a little more of it, and I tell you when I fasted and prayed and confessed, my cup ran over and I had to beg Him not to send another wave. I had more than this old heart could hold and it is still running over. Bless the Lord!

My father was a steward for 43 years. My husband's father was a minister—Rev. Richmond Randle of precious memory, who gave his life as chaplain in the Civil War. Thank God, he gave his boys to fight sin in Louisiana where our dear fathers sleep. I believe we have good, warm friends all over this State, and I believe we have a number who "love God and keep his commandments," and that God will hear when with united voices we raise our hearts in prayer to Him, for those we love.

A WORLD ECCLESIASTICISM NOT NEEDED.

Along with the movement for Methodist Unification there is being sounded in certain quarters the note of a world-wide Methodism. The Western Christian Advocate of January 10, 1918, has the following: "The leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church are sounding the slogan for world-wide Methodism. It is not only with a sense of pride that we think of this, but with a greater degree of humility; for a world-wide responsibility is incurred." It is well enough to talk about the humility that accompanies the thought and the desire for the establishment of a world-wide ecclesiasticism. That is the only viewpoint from which the idea can gain currency and wear the appearance of a laudable purpose. But so long as human nature is what it is the pride of this dominance will inevitably gain the ascendency in practice, and then farewell to spiritual life and power. We have stated more than once that here is the danger point connected with the unification movement, and it should lead those who are formulating the basis of union to avoid a strongly centralized organization. No Church has ever stood the strain of a world-wide ecclesiasticism, and maintained its spiritual purity. The Church must have a world-vision, but that is a widely different thing from a world-wide organization.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

TWO BASAL CONVICTIONS.

The religion we profess is rooted in two convictions: (1) That the Jesus of the New Testament actually existed; (2) that the Jesus of the New Testament exists to-day as One in whom the virtues and powers of His earthly life are perpetuated. Deny that Jesus actually existed as He is portrayed in the New Testament, and we affirm that He has only an ideal existence, such as attaches to the character portrayed in the pages of poets and novelists. Admit that the Jesus of the New Testament had an historical existence, but deny that He exists to-day as One in whom the virtues and powers of His earthly life are perpetuated and we affirm that He has energized in this world, subsequent to His death, only as one of "Those dead but sceptered sovereigns who still rule our spirits from their urns," and so that it is impossible to stand in any sort of real contact with Him to-day. These two convictions are equally fundamental. If Jesus had not lived, more particularly if He had not died the just for the unjust, He would not be qualified to be the Savior of the world. It is not enough, however, to be assured that Jesus lived and died. If Christ be not risen, we are the worshipers of a dead Christ and Christianity but an exaggerated form of hero-worhsip. Christianity is a power in the world, because it brings us into contact with the living Christ, from whom we obtain not only forgiveness of our sins, but power to walk in newness of life. —The Presbyterian.

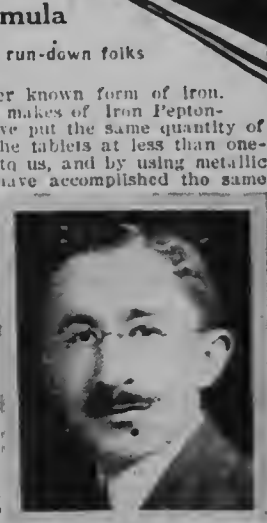
What Nuxated Iron is Made From

Sworn Statement of Composition of its Formula

It increases the strength and endurance of delicate, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks time in many instances.



The Board of Directors have authorized the broadest publication of the sworn statement of the composition of Nuxated Iron, one of the most widely used tonic, strength and blood builders in the world, so that the public may examine it for themselves and judge as to its merits.

It is conservatively estimated that this remarkable formula is now being used by over 3,000,000 people annually in America alone. Among those who have used and strongly endorse it are many physicians formerly connected with well-known hospitals, distinguished U. S. Army Generals (Retired), Judge Atkinson of the United States Court of Claims at Washington and former Health Commissioner Kerr, of Chicago.

Newspapers everywhere are invited to copy this statement for the benefit of their readers. It is suggested that physicians make a record of it and keep it in their offices so that they may intelligently answer questions of patients concerning it. Everybody is advised to cut it out and keep it. A copy of the actual sworn statement will be sent to any one who desires such. It is as follows:

Iron Peptonate (Special specific Standard) Quantity given below.
Sodium Glycerophosphates U.S.P. (Monsanto.)
Calcium Glycerophosphates U.S.P. (Monsanto.)
P. E. Nux Vomica U.S.P.
Cascarin Bitter
Magnesium Carbonate
Po. Ginger U.S.P.
Oil Cassia Cinnamon U.S.P.
Calcium Carbonate Precip. U.S.P.

Each dose of two tablets of Nuxated Iron contains one and one-half grains of organic iron in the form of iron peptonate of a special specific standard which in our opinion possesses superior qualities to any other known form of iron. By using other makes of Iron Peptonate we could have put the same quantity of actual iron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost to us, and by using metallic iron we could have accomplished the same thing at less than one-twelfth the cost; but by so doing we must have most certainly impaired their therapeutic efficacy. Glycerophosphates used in Nuxated Iron is one of the most expensive tonic ingredients known. It is especially recommended to build up the nerve force and thereby increase brain power, as glycerophosphates are said to contain phosphorus in a state very similar to that in which it is found in the nerve and brain cells of man.

As will be seen from the above, two important ingredients of Nuxated Iron (Iron Peptonate and Glycerophosphates) are very expensive products as compared with most other tonics.

Under such circumstances the temptation to adulteration and substitution by unscrupulous persons, is very great and the public is hereby warned to be careful and see every bottle is plainly labled "Nuxated Iron" by the Due Health Laboratories, Paris, London, and Detroit, U. S. A., as this is the only genuine article. If you have taken other forms of Iron without success, this does not prove Nuxated Iron will not help you. We guarantee satisfaction to every purchaser or your money will be refunded.

In regard to the value of Nuxated Iron, Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago, and former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, says it has proven through his own tests of it to excel any preparation he has ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves and strengthening the muscles. Dr. J. W. Armisted, Grove Hill, Ala., graduate of the University of Alabama School of Medicine, Mobile, 1893, says: "In the cases I used Nuxated Iron, I have found more beneficial results than from any preparation I have ever used in 34 years' practice." Dr. R. B. Baugh, Folkville, Miss., graduate of the Memphis Hospital College, Memphis, 1898, says: "I always prescribe Nuxated Iron where a reconstructive tonic is indicated." Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of delicate, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time.

NOTE: Nuxated Iron is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic Iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. Nuxated Iron is not recommended for use in cases of acute illness, but only as a tonic, strength and blood builder. (In case of illness always consult your family physician and be guided by his advice.) If in doubt as to whether or not you need a tonic, ask your doctor as we do not wish to sell you Nuxated Iron if you do not require it. If you should use it and it does not help you, notify us and we will return your money. It is sold by all druggists. Due Health Laboratories, Detroit, Mich.

HAVE YOU BOUGHT YOUR COAL?

A Statement from Headquarters.

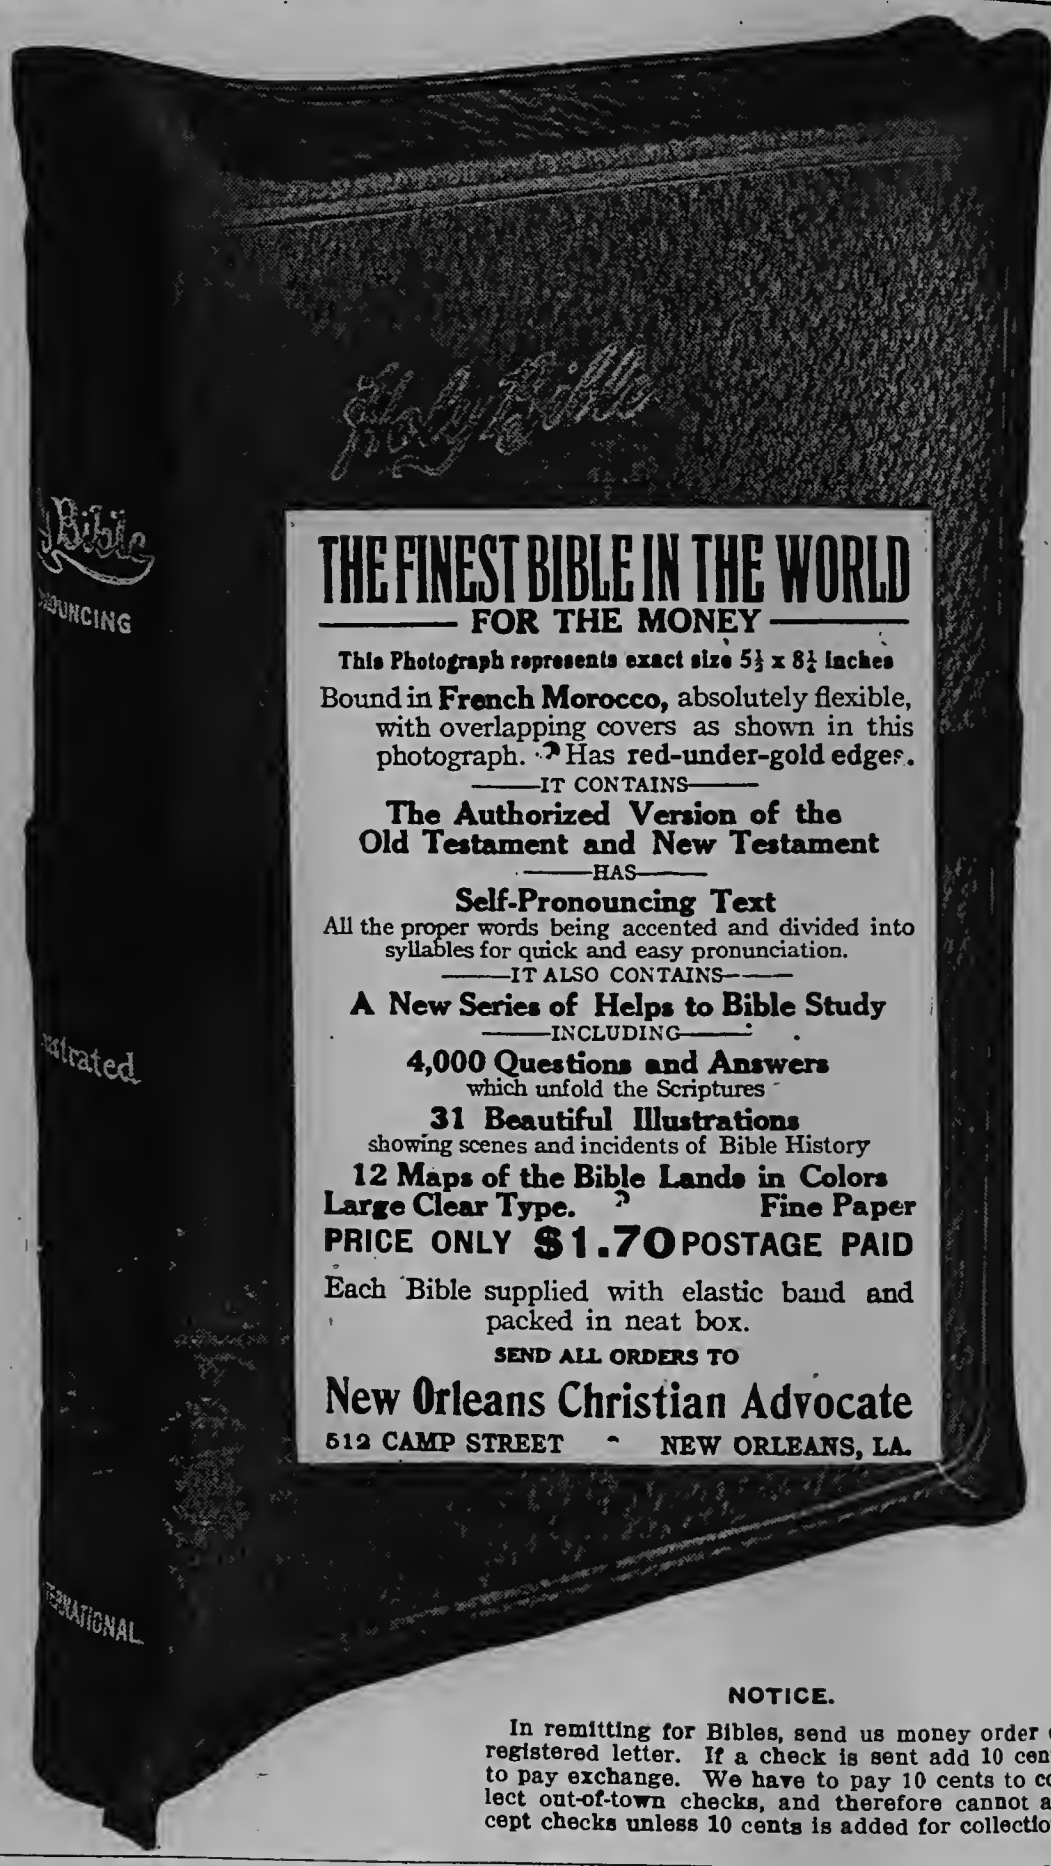
Despite repeated warnings from the Fuel Administration and the campaign of education lasting more than two months, the Fuel Administration of Louisiana declared to-day reports show little response to the "Order Your Coal Now" and "Cut a Cord Now" slogans.

In the cities, particularly New Orleans where coal is extensively used, not more than 20 per cent of the orders for the winter's supply of coal have been placed so far. In the country, the Fuel Administration's Local Committees report little activity towards laying aside a great wood fuel reserve during the summer.

"People in the cities have been dragging along for more than two months while the Fuel Administration has been making every effort to arouse them to the necessity of early buying of coal and storage of wood for use this winter," said Fuel Administrator O'Kelley. "Through the schools, churches, window displays, circular letters, posters, stamps and every other known means of publicity, the message of 'Order Your Coal Now' has been driven home. It is purely up to the people themselves. If they do not order their coal now, there is no assurance that they will have a bit this winter. In the country, if the officials of towns and villages do not heed the 'Cut A Cord Now' slogan and lay aside a great wood fuel reserve, there can be no complaint from them this winter when coal is denied their communities. More and more the acute fuel situation is becoming apparent. A great service can be rendered by every householder and every farmer if they will only order coal now, or get in their wood supply.

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Hattiesburg (Miss.) Dist. Conference convened at 2:30 p. m., June 4, in the Magee Methodist Church. This is one of the most progressive towns on the G. & S. I. Railroad. A most modern and commodious brick school building greets the eye from the south, while in the northern section the State Tubercular Hospital is located. It will be of interest to the brethren to know our Brother J. B. King, wife and son, patients in that institution, are improving, and it is sincerely hoped that they may continue until entirely restored to health.



The opening sermon was very forcefully preached by Rev. F. B. Ormond at 8:30 p. m. Approximately fifty members, clerical and lay, were present during the Conference. The absence of three pastors was noted throughout the session.

Among the visiting brethren representing the extended interest of the Church were: Rev. Robt. Selby, Commissioner, Emory University; Rev. T. J. O'Neil, President, Port Gibson Female College; Rev. B. F. Lewis, Manager, Orphans' Home; Dr. J. M. Sullivan, of Millsaps College; Rev. M. M. Black, Commissioner, Millsaps College; Rev. J. C. Chambers, Sunday School Field Secretary; Rev. J. M. Morse, presiding elder, Jackson District; and Rev. G. G. Yeager, our pastor at Mendenhall. The interests named above were clearly and enthusiastically presented by the respective representatives. Mrs. H. O. Middleton, representing the Young People's Missionary Society, and Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, representing the Woman's Missionary Society, addressed the Conference.

At the 11 a. m. preaching hour Wednesday, Rev. C. F. Emery preached a very edifying sermon on the parable of the "Sower and the Tares."

Rev. C. J. Bushey, a soldier now stationed at Camp Shelby, who desires a commission as chaplain, was elected to Deacon's Orders. License to preach was granted to Brothers C. L. Stewart and S. N. West. K. T. Moore was elected as Lay Leader to succed Rev. D. R. Campbell.

John A. McLeod, K. T. Moore, H. C. Clark, Dr. T. J. Burnham, C. W. Carley, Jas. Hand, H. T. McGehee, and H. V. Waits, were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and F. H. Jordan, D. McGilvray, Walter Holloway, and W. J. Mucklewrath were selected as alternates.

NOTICE.

In remitting for Bibles, send us money order or registered letter. If a check is sent add 10 cents to pay exchange. We have to pay 10 cents to collect out-of-town checks, and therefore cannot accept checks unless 10 cents is added for collection.

The reports from the pastoral charges were very interesting and considerable progress was noted in connection with larger plans and greater effort advanced for the future.

Very appropriate resolutions were adopted endorsing President Woodrow Wilson's policy, especially relative to the prosecution of the war, the secretary being instructed to forward a copy of same to the Chief Executive.

The invitation from Petal to entertain the Conference next year was unanimously accepted.

Resolutions of thanks to the Conference host, Rev. H. E. Carter, and the hospitable people of Magee for their kind and most satisfactory entertainment, were adopted. A very pleasant social feature of the Conference was the bountiful dinner served by the good ladies at the church on the second day.

After a most inspiring sermon on the "New Birth" at 8 p. m., preached by Rev. J. E. Williams, followed by the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, administered by Rev. Paul D. Hardin and Rev. W. M. Williams, the Conference session, which was most smoothly and speedily carried forward under the efficient leadership of our beloved presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Jones, came to a close with a very fervent prayer offered by Rev. Paul D. Hardin.

NEW ORLEANS
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 65—No. 25. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3252.

REV. H. T. CARLEY, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1918. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

Loyalty is a great, fine word. There is nothing of compromise or reservation about it. It expresses more than an amiable sentiment—it stands for a passion. In times of stress like these, it must not be misused or misunderstood.

The price of success is always hard work. A part of hard work is the ability to keep at a task till it is finished. Many people begin well, only to lose interest later on, and finally to give up altogether. Much depends upon a good beginning, but even a bad beginning may be overcome by steady, persistent work. There is great power in perseverance.

Men need inspiriting. They grapple with the temptations and the hardships of life at such close quarters that sometimes they lose the larger vision and forget that God is always on the side of right. Blessed is the man, then, who can make them lift their eyes to the far-off hills whence help cometh, who can put into their hearts the courage of a new hope and the joy of a new faith. He has lifted the heavy burden, and made smooth the rugged road.

Every individual has his own work to do in the world, and he must do it, or it will go undone. In all the relations of life certain obligations are imposed, and if those obligations are not met, there must be loss somewhere. In an organization the responsibility is often thought to be so divided among many that no particular person is responsible. This is not so. In every organization every person in it has a direct responsibility in proportion to the obligations assumed. Be sure to do your part.

The most solemn event in the world is the death of a great man. The possibilities of childhood have been developed, and those tremendous forces that center in a human life have been brought to bear upon the problems of the world. In death those forces are in a way dissipated, and there must be a readjustment. The gap must be filled, the work must be carried on, or the world suffers. In the providence of God the gap is always filled. "He buries his workmen, but carries on his work." We may never feel that God has forgot his world, or that he deals ruthlessly with us.

When autumn comes we should not have to speak of "the resumption of activity." Our activities should go right on through the summer, so that we may continue our steady progress and be ready for greater things as the months go by. If necessary, we should make a little greater effort to be in our places in church and Sunday school and prayer-meeting during these hot days, thereby keeping up our own religious interest and encouraging and strengthening others. It never gets too hot to do right.

THE RETIRING EDITOR—AN APPRECIATION.

The recent announcement by Rev. R. A. Meek, D.D., for some eight years the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, of his resignation of the editorship on account of ill-health, has brought genuine regret not only to his many friends throughout Louisiana and Mississippi, but also to his many admirers throughout the Connection. The newly-elected editor feels impelled, by a real appreciation of his great worth as well as by a sense of duty, to pay tribute to him as a man and as a servant of the Church.

Dr. Meek brought to his work as editor an exalted conception of the function of a denominational religious newspaper, and of his responsibility as an official exponent and defender of the doctrines and polity of his Church. The result of the one is seen in the fact that, under his vigorous editorial management, the Advocate became a positive influence in shaping the religious thought of its readers; the result of the other is seen in his unfaltering and uncompromising devotion, in spite of all odds, to those policies that seemed to him best to represent the distinctive and essential features of our Church. In the maintenance of his views he sometimes encountered opposition that might have made a weaker man afraid; but he never quailed in the fiercest conflict. A splendid courage supported him in the face of every difficulty.

Dr. Meek is a believer in the gospel of hard work. Some years ago the present editor served with him, for a brief period of time, as assistant editor. He had opportunity then to observe a devotion to duty that never, in the slightest degree, faltered in the face of heavy tasks. Dr. Meek never spared himself in his labors. His present ill-health is due perhaps, somewhat at least, to the heavy burdens he has carried.

It is unnecessary to speak of his loyalty to the Church and the purity of his motives. Even casual readers of the Advocate cannot have failed to see in his editorial utterances a passionate zeal in defense of the truth as he saw it, and an utter absence of anything that even looked like self-seeking.

A fine literary style characterizes Dr. Meek's editorial writing. Clearness and force are its most noticeable qualities. He is naturally a good writer; but his painstaking devotion to the acquirement of the technical excellences of style is a standing rebuke to those who excuse their own shortcomings on the ground that the art of good writing is wholly a gift. Words, to him, are not empty things; they are full of life and meaning, and are to be handled carefully and discriminatingly. His editorials would be models for study in a course in effective English.

The Publisher of the Advocate has borne testimony in a previous issue of the paper to his kindliness and courtesy in intimate business and personal relations; this editor adds his tribute to the same gracious qualities of kindness and brotherliness.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate has been signally favored in the number of unusally strong men who have controlled its policies in the past; Dr. Meek now takes his place among these. Earnest prayer will be made by many that a season of rest may soon restore him to health and strength that he may continue his work in behalf of the Church that he loves so much.

THE NEW QUADRENNIUM.

Southern Methodism should enter upon the new quadrennium with hopefulness and courage. The recent General Conference enacted some legislation that, perhaps, seems radical to some. But, as the editor of the Christian Advocate (Nashville) suggests, it is likely that what seems radical now may in the coming years be looked upon as simply progressive. Be that as it may, it is now law, and loyalty demands that we whole-heartedly and determinedly give it a fair trial. Four years from now there will be another General Conference, and, if necessary, changes may be made then.

The following seem to be the outstanding provisions of the recent assembly in Atlanta:

1. The modification of the time limit, by which a Bishop, at the request of the quarterly conference and by a majority vote of the presiding elders, may appoint a preacher to a charge for more than four years.

2. The division of our Church territory into districts, with the request that the Bishops make their homes in the territory assigned to them to the end that they may have real oversight of the work at all times.

3. The provision of full laity rights for women. This measure will have to be passed upon by the Annual Conferences before it becomes effective, the Bishops having "vetoed" the action of the General Conference.

4. The increase of the lay delegation in the Annual Conferences from four to eight.

5. The continuance of a Commission on Unification, with authority to carry on whatever negotiations may seem wise. The action of the Oklahoma General Conference was reaffirmed.

6. The creation of a Commission on War Work, to have charge of all the war activities of our Church, with which Annual Conference activities in war work shall be correlated.

7. The adoption of the great Missionary Centenary Campaign, providing for raising $35,000,000 for missionary work.

8. The provision for a campaign to raise money for our educational institutions. The amount to be raised includes $10,000,000 for our two universities, and $13,000,000 for our other schools and colleges.

9. The appointment of a quadrennial board, which is to make adequate provision for the needs of our worn-out preachers and their families.

10. The substitution of the words, "Christ's Holy Church" for "Holy Catholic Church," in the Creed. By reason of the Episcopal "veto," this action will have to be passed upon by the Annual Conferences.

MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

By W. C. Page.

"Only a pair 'o glasses, bent an' worn an' old,
But to me they are dearer than those o' finest goid.
Just a pair of glasses are not much, you say?
Only—they were mother's before she went away.
Often at the twilight, when her day's work was done,
She would light the candle an' say to me, "Now son,
Find mother's glasses, for she is tired to-night.
Lock fast the door, and draw the curtains tight."

After reading the Scriptures, she would kneel an' pray—
She always did this, after Father went away—
Then, in a low, sweet voice, two hymns she'd always sing;
'Bout the day was past and gone, an' 'bout the Heavenly King.
Then, she'd take her glasses off an' hold them in her hand,
And tell me sweet stories 'bout the Happy Land.
Then, she'd say softly: "Son, you must be good and true;
Always be straight an' honest, never any evil do."

Then she'd kiss me, an' tuck me into sleep,
And ask the Lord to bless me an' keep me pure an' sweet.
Long years have passed since mother went away
I've never forgot her teachings, if tempted to go astray,
I think of how she loved me, an' pray with all my might,
An' beg God to help me always to do right.
Yes, my friends n' bunkie-mate, you may smile an' nod,
But the teachings of my old mother are leading me home to God."

A SHORT SERMON.

"And he was called the friend of God." James ii. xxiii.

In earthly relations "friend" is a sacred word. It is a word that is often misused because people do not stop to think what it means. It should not be used lightly or carelessly. The relationship it expresses is too beautiful and too sacred for that.

One of the greatest achievements in life is to make and hold friends. Some one has said that it is worth a score of years to discover one friend. Shall we think this an exaggerated estimate of the value of a friend? Those that have friends do not think so. Their worth is not to be measured in terms of time and money. Friendship cannot be measured by the sordid standards of the world.

As great as it is to have friends, perhaps it is a greater thing to be a friend. Of course, one may not have a friend without being a friend, too, but perhaps the greater value comes from the giving of self to another in friendship than in receiving from another. Friendship makes claims that reach down to the deepest recesses of the heart. It draws out the finest qualities of the soul. Human friendship does that.

Abraham was called the friend of God. What a distinction! How beautiful must have been the spiritual communion Abraham had with his Friend! He knew his Friend, and was known of him. His heart responded to the drawing of the great heart of his Friend, and he believed God. What a record is that!

We can have no greater privilege than this—to be friendly with God.

LIFE.

The need of the world is life—spiritual life. The need of individuals is life—spiritual life. The earthly mission of Jesus Christ was to bring life and immortality to light. His chief business in fulfilling that mission was to atone for sin and conquer death. He fulfilled that mission and accomplished that work. But spiritual life must be nourished and sustained from its divine sources. Ere the wondrous face of the risen Christ disappeared in the distance above, it looked such intense love and yearning that the life He came to give might be brought to fullness and realization by the obedience and faithfulness of those whom he called.

Yes, the great need of men and women is spiritual life. The need of the world is the thrill of heaven-baptized personalities. The need of the world is that virtue that comes from the holiness and purity of a life hid with Christ in God. It is true to-day as it has been in the past that the love and sympathy that flows from a soul filled with heavenly zeal and possessing that life which Jesus Christ came to bring to light satisfies hearts famishing for spiritual things. How blessed to remember that the most exalted service of the Father is the dispensing of heavenly treasures! How comforting to know that even as Jesus Christ fed the multitudes when upon earth He is to-day giving to those who will seek him the stores of his Spirit! But the test of the Christ religion is the need of a human life for a divine life; the fact that our Christian faith is applicable to every human need of every race, and it alone can give the ultimate happiness that is the object of universal search, and in accord with a good God, shows it.

Oh, hungry heart, embittered by life's toils and burdened with its cares, you are heir to a portion of the Father's possessions! Doubting one, troubled with life's destinies and tormented with its mortal woes, lay hold of the sure portion that is yours from above! The riches of the Father are inexhaustible; they never grow less.—Central Christian Advocate.

IT IS GOD'S FIGHT.

Many a conscientious pacifist is sorely put to it in these days to square his Christianity with his patriotism. Some Mennonites near Utica, N. Y., finding that they could not conscientiously subscribe to the Liberty Loan, found a way out by allowing the Yankton County Committee to "seize" 1,000 of their sheep and 100 head of their cattle and turn the proceeds into the Liberty Loan. But another Mennonite, Robert Kleinasser, of Mitchell, S. D., offered himself for service at the front. This was the first case of the kind recorded in this war, and he was asked why he wanted to go to war. His answer was, "It is God's fight."

When the war began it was not so easy to see this fact, especially as Germany protested so loudly that she did not want war and was only fighting in self-defense. But as the war has developed, the facts as to the real cause of the war have been clearly established from German sources themselves, and the revelation of Ambassador Lichnowsky, and the more recent story of Dr. Muhlon, formerly one of the Krupp directors, establishes beyond doubt the British contention that Germany designed and planned the war and brought it on when she thought the time was favorable.

And all the peace talk which has emanated from Berlin and Vienna since the war began has been shown to be merely intended to mislead and deceive the nations. Germany wants no peace but a German peace, and she will hesitate at nothing to secure such a peace, lying without shame or scruple, and shrinking from no brutality and no infamy which seems to promise to bring victory to her arms or success to her political maneuvers.

And as we think of what German success would mean to the nations—Europe in fetters and the German Empire in the grip of a war-intoxicated oligarchy threatening the whole world with brutal, conscienceless and hellish might—we cannot but say with the Mennonite, "It is God's fight." And as freemen rally around their standards, we cannot but believe that we shall surely win in the world's greatest attempt to defend the right and presenve freedom to the world. "It is God's fight."—The Christian Guardian.

ARCHITECTURE AND CHURCH EXTENSION.

By Rev. J. A. Baylor.

At the meeting of the Board of Church Extension held in Atlanta, Ga., April 30-May 1, the work of the Architectural Department was commended, and it was recommended that it be made a permanent part of the work of Church Extension. A statement from the Architectural Secretary was called for and is incorporated in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Board. The substance of that statement is reproduced here in the interest of a clear understanding of the work undertaken by this new department of the Board, and with the further thought that it may catch the eye of some who stand in need of the service rendered by it.

Since the opening of the Architectural Department on November 1, 1917, there has been, despite the effect of the war, quite abundant evidence of the need for such a department. Letters calling for plans, suggestions, sketches, and architectural advice, have been very numerous, coming from eighteen different States. In some instances inquiries have come also from other churches than our own. In many cases these inquiries have been of such a nature as to entail a considerable correspondence, elaborate sketches, and in some cases the making of plans and furnishing specifications. In every instance it has been the aim of the Architectural Department to secure the adaptation of buildings to the needs of the modern church.

As Architectural Secretary, I have had considerable correspondence with various architects located in different parts of the country. This correspondence has shown that with a few exceptions the professional architects need more exact and complete information as to the purpose of the modern church building, and the needs to be served by it. To furnish such information and to secure the co-operation of competent architects is one chief aim of the department.

A number of carefully considered plans for church buildings, of various grades of cost, have been printed in the form of folders, suitable for sending to pastors and committees seeking suggestions and information. Most of these are the work of different architects who co-operate with the Board to the extent of adapting their plans to the ideas of the Church, and preparing their work in a style suitable for reproduction. A few of the plans are from the Bureau of Architecture of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a few have been produced in our own department. Model plans illustrating an important publication by the Joint Commission on Sunday School Architecture, composed of members of the Board of Church Extension and the Sunday School Board, were prepared by the department and copies of this publication can be secured on request. New material is being added constantly, and in a short time the department will be able to show a great variety of choice designs. Quite a number of parsonage plans have also been produced in folder form.

The number of instances in which pastors, committees and individuals have sought to secure working plans and specifications from the Architectural Department indicates that under normal conditions the department can be made self-sustaining.

The department has the co-operation of a considerable number of architects of large experience in church building. These men are located in various parts of the country, and through these competent men, or in conjunction with them, plans can be furnished for church building enterprises of any kind. We will be glad to co-operate with local architects chosen by committees or pastors in designing plans or adapting them in such manner as to secure the best equipment for modern church and Sunday school work.

The work of this department where it touches the Sunday school is planned in harmony with the ideas of the Sunday School Board of our Church. We seek to maintain a sympathetic and intelligent co-operation with our recognized leaders in this work, in order that in the largest possible degree their leadership may be realized in the building program of our people.

There are many practical questions that arise in connection with beginning and carrying out a building enterprise, such as location, selecting a plan, raising the money, heating, contract, etc. The extensive correspondence of the office with pastors and building committees throughout the Church throws much light upon all these points. In addition, books, pamphlets, and advices from many architects and building specialists come to the office. From all these sources a pamphlet has been prepared touching these vital points, which, together with plans and other literature, can be had on request.

MEN IN MATURE LIFE DRINK MOST.

By A. P. Oakes.

Saloons do not attract young men between seventeen and twenty-four years of age as they do older men, nor are single men so numerous at the bar as married men. These statements were contained in a report made to the conference of the Association of Employed Officers of the Young Men's Christian Association in session in Springfield, Mass., June 9. H. W. Gibson, of Boston, headed the commission making its report, while the section on social influences dealing with the lure of the saloon was written by C. C. Robinson, of New York.

Under the sub-heading "The Saloon," the commission reported as follows: "It is surprising to many to discover that this arch-enemy of man's physical and moral life does not function so strongly in the recreation of young men as among the more mature. In Charles Stelzle's study of 'The Leisure Time of Working Men,' based somewhat on the study made by George E. Bevans at Columbia University, it is shown that of the young men studied between 17 and 24 years of age, 17.8 per cent patronize the saloon; of those between 25 and 35 years old, 32.6 per cent patronize the saloon; of those between 36 and 45 years, 42 per cent use the saloon, and of those 46 and older, 30.4 per cent make the saloon a regular form of utilizing leisure.

"This study also shows that twice as many married men go to the saloon as single men. This is partially attributed to the higher idealism of the young men and also to the fact that unmarried men spend a good deal of time in the company of their sweethearts, who naturally would not visit the saloon with them. The saloon seems to be most popular in the years between 35 and 45, the dull, drab years of middle age when the idealism of the former days no longer sways the emotions.

"This particular study brings out two matters which should be weighed by the Association workers with reference to preventing the young men whom we influence from looking to the saloon and similar resorts for their pleasures in middle life.

"The use of public libraries is greater by the 17-24 year group than by any other group of working men, whereas the lowest interest in the Church and religious matter is among this same group of younger men, and the highest percentage of interest in religious matters is in the group 46 years of age and over, the latter far outstripping any other group in this particular.

BURDEN-BEARING.

Christ, the great burden-bearer, took upon himself the burdens which humanity unaided could not bear. He became our example, and expects us to bear one another's burdens and thus fulfill the great law of love under which he came to the rescue of a crushed world. To-day there are sorrowing hearts that need our sympathy, and tired hands that will let drop their unfinished task if we withhold help, and feet that limp in the perilous path of duty. It is ours with chastened spirit to lift up, to relieve, to cheer the heavy-hearted. To do this we need Christ in our own lives, because our strength is weakness without him; our courage may become cowardice without the kinship of the Cross. As individuals let us seek the neighbors who are lonely and leaven their lives. As a nation let us find the fallen and overborne, and, sharing their woes and lightening their loads, love them into liberty and larger life. Looking not on our own things, may we look with compassion on the things of others with the mind in us which was also in Christ Jesus, who made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant. As fellow-servants of the Crucified One let us suffer with those who suffer and serve by unselfish sacrifice.—Arkansas Methodist.

The love of Jesus reproduces itself in the lives of His working and suffering children. In some shape they are ever giving themselves to God and for their fellow-men.—Liddon.

THE APOSTLES' CREED.

By Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D.D.

In the Advocate of May 30, Brother Geo. H. Thompson notes "Some Doings of the General Conference at Atlanta." Among other things he says: "The writer labors under the impression that the phrase, 'Holy Catholic Church,' did not find its way into the ritual by General Conference action, but by way of a commission chosen to act with a like committee from the Methodist Episcopal Church in providing a common ritual and a common hymnal for the two Churches. That was less than sixteen years ago."

A bit of history may not be out of place. The phrase, "Holy Catholic Church," was a part of the Creed when first formulated in the third or fourth century A. D. This is according to reputable historians. A recent writer dissents, and tells us that the original wording is "Holy Church." Of this he furnishes no proof. But, admitting that he is correct, it is still true that "Holy Catholic Church" is of very ancient date, and has been retained in the Creed by the Anglican Church from its beginning. The Methodists, of course, got it from the Anglican Church when they adopted a ritual. This was done in 1784, when, at the "Christmas Conference," the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized.

The words "Holy Catholic Church" were retained in the ritual of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by authority of our first General Conference, held in 1846. The Creed was so printed in the Disciplines of 1846 and 1850. From 1854 to 1902 the words "Church of God" were substituted for "Holy Catholic Church." By what authority the change was made I have been unable to determine. The records of the General Conference, as far as I have examined, fail to show.

At the General Conference of 1902 the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the Book Editor be directed to have printed in the Discipline, at some suitable place, the proper form of the Apostles' Creed, in order to uniformity in the use of it.

JAMES ATKINS,
J. H. WEAVER,
S. B. TURRENTINE,
W. W. VICAR."

That resolution authorized the Book Editor to restore the ancient, if not original text, and this Dr. J. J. Tigert, who was elected Book Editor, did, except in one particular. The ancient creed, after the words "dead and buried," read, "he descended into hell." These words had never been used by any body of Methodists, and the Book Editor felt free to leave them out.

From the above we infer that all of the trouble over the word "Catholic" grew out of the unauthorized work of some unnamed man. Had the Creed remained as first authorized by the General Conference of 1846, with the foot-note explaining the meaning of the word "Catholic," it is likely that the Annual Conferences of to-day would not have been called upon to pass judgment on the subject.

NOTES FROM THE JACKSON DISTRICT.

It hasn't been so easy to gather up news for this write-up. The brethren are pursuing the even tenor of their ways, and say that nothing out of the ordinary is happening on their charges. However:

Galloway Memorial has made a record Children's Day offering, doubtless the largest that has ever been made in the history of any church in the Mississippi Conference. The day was observed successfully and $82.22 was sent to the treasurer of the Sunday School Board. Also about one hundred members have been received into the Church since Conference; twenty-five or more of these were on profession of faith.

An interesting occasion in many of the churches here of late is the unfurling of service flags. A beautiful service of this nature was recently held at Capital Street under the auspices of the Epworth League, and in connection therewith a letter was addressed to each young man for whom there was a star on the flag, bidding him God-speed, and assuring him of the Church's interest and prayers in his behalf.

Church affairs have been progressing at Canton under the leadership of J. D. Ellis. A new League with fifty members has been organized; $310 has been paid on the church debt, and they have money on hand to purchase a carpet for the church.

R. E. Rutledge reports 80 per cent of the Conference collections secured from the Vaughan charge. He has recently been appointed assistant manager of our Orphans' Home, and his son, E. J. Rutledge, has been made junior preacher on his work, and looks after it in the absence of his father.

A. S. Oliver is constantly planning and executing one good thing after another on his work. He now has a new church enterprise on foot for Eden. He declares that the church will be built before the end of this Conference year. Oliver is serving his fourth year at Eden, and has made a wonderful record in the Lord's work there.

The chickens of Eden must think they are in Paradise. At the district conference recently held there one young frier boldly walked into the church and appeared at home among all those preachers. Poor deluded chick!

Our penitentiary chaplain is the right man in the right place. He is winning his way into the hearts of the unfortunates under his charge, and doing them good. He says he always has good crowds of men to preach to, and that few women attend. But T. W. Adams always attracted men to his ministry.

J. L. Neill thinks he will be in the Y. M. C. A. work in France before the end of the year. We haven't a finer man in our Conference for such service.

ISOM.

ANSWER THAT LETTER, OR WRITE ONE.

A business man remarked that a certain preacher deserved special credit for the prompt manner in which he answered correspondence. He had written a letter that concerned business that was of large interest to himself and of some concern to the preacher, and the next mail brought the reply. The promptness of the brother surprised the busines man because, he said, it is a common fault that church people attend to business matters tardily.

To answer a letter is a little thing. To write a letter informing some one of something that will help them is a little thing. But such kind of little things helps to lighten the burden others are carrying. A certain Methodist in New Orleans attends no Methodist service because a certain pastor failed to answer a second letter asking for a church certificate. Hundreds of Methodist families come to New Orleans from the country every year and many of them are lost to the Church because their former pastors fail to write to some preacher in New Orleans, giving their names and location.

It is a small thing to toss a letter aside unanswered, but the destiny of a life, or the happiness for a time, of many may depend upon your having answered that letter. Take your pen in hand. Clean up your desk and lighten the load on your conscience because of your neglect, if you are guilty. Run down the list of your friends who have moved away and write a letter to the pastor of the Methodist Church in the town or city to which they have moved and give their location. By so doing you may save a soul and be the cause of the doing of great good.

COMMENCEMENT AT MILLSAPS.

By request, I am sending impressions from the recent Commencement of our great college; it is with unfeigned pleasure that I comply with the request. From the foundation of the institution, it has been my pleasure to be present at nearly every closing exercise, and for the past eighteen years, as a member of its Board, to have been at every one. However the occasion may have impressed others, it was filled with a spirit of enthusiasm, which to this writer was unusual, notwithstanding the war conditions which are so depressing everywhere. Instead of an air of gloom, there was an atmosphere of hopefulness and buoyancy which was actually contagious. Over against the large service flag hanging from the rostrum, with its 253 stars, there were the faces of students and friends, radiant with the suggestion that while those over the seas were doing their part in the great world conflict, the "home fires" would only burn the brighter for the alma mater.

While there were some animated discussions within the Board of Trustees, their sessions were harmonious and all questions were finally settled, it was believed, for the greater good of the college. The question of the new dormitory elicited most interest, but because of unsettled conditions as to material, labor, and government restrictions, it was left with a building committee for their judgment and final action, with an appeal to the loyalty of friends of the college to wait awhile with patience, if need be, and in the meantime encourage the building by liberal responses to the appeals of the Commissioner. The opinion prevailed that it was best to secure a large per cent of the subscriptions before starting the dormitory.

The teaching force of the college has been interfered with somewhat because of enlistment of some of the teachers, but the vacancies were all provided for and the session which opens in September will find a full force of instructors.

It could not have been otherwise than that there should have been very conspicuous absence of older boys and young men, yet the enrollment reached the splendid figure of 224, almost as good as the best by comparison with other sessions. Twenty young men and women were awarded diplomas from the different departments. It was not my privilege to hear the sermons by Dr. Dobbs on Sunday, but those who heard were full of his praises. On Tuesday morning our new Bishop Ainsworth delivered to the graduating class a forceful, impressive address, which must of its very nature bring forth a rich fruitage in the lives of those who shall heed its message.

Relying upon its record, Millsaps turns her face to the future without a note of discord or symptom of pessimism. Speaking for the Board of Trustees, I would report hearty endorsement of the work being done and recommend the college to the Methodists of Mississippi as worthy of their most earnest support.

E. O. Watson was elected Secretary of the War Work Commission.

The following were elected as the Executive Committee: Bishop W. R. Lambuth, E. O. Watson, Bishop W. F. McMurry, F. J. Prettyman, and Ed. F. Sheffey.

The following were appointed as a Committee on Chaplains: Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Bishop John M. Moore, Dr. Geo. E. Booker, and Dr. E. O. Watson.

The Excutive Committee was instructed to get data concerning budget of funds needed for prosecuting the work and report to a future meeting of the Commission. The time and place for the next meeting of the Commission was left to the decision of the Chairman, Bishop Lambuth, and the Secretary, Dr. Watson.

The Executive Committee met in Washington, D. C., May 29, 1918.

The Secretary reported the opening and furnishing of an office, 40-41 Washington Post Building, Washington, D. C., and this action was approved.

Mr. John Victor, of Lynchburg, Va., President of the Peoples' National Bank, First Federal Reserve, and Treasurer of the Virginia Conference, was elected Treasurer.

A meeting of the War Work Commission was called to meet at 9:30 a. m., Friday, June 7, in the assembly room of the Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Liberal subscriptions have already been made to the prosecution of the war work, notably subscriptions of J. J. Gray, Mt. Pleasant, Tenn., of $25,000, Bishop W. R. Lambuth, of $1000, Ed. F. Sheffey, Lynchburg, Va., of $1000, and John R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn., of $1000.

It was decided to fit out our chaplains, some twenty in number, who are expecting to go across immediately, with necessary equipment for their work. It is estimated that the necessary equipment of chaplains not provided by the Government will range from $600 to $1000.

The Secretary has begun the work of chaplain selection and endorsement, in co-operation with the Federal Council of Churches, and of securing chaplains and searchers for the Red Cross.

The new Chaplain Act has been signed by the President and the War Work Commission office bas been notified that 60 chaplains are required to supply the quota of our Church.

The Secretary will at once enter into correspondence with our chaplains, camp workers, nurses of our Church, Y. M. C. A. secretaries, and others, with reference to lines of service. Steps are being taken through correspondence and otherwise to organize the Annual Conferences in correlation with the general War Work Commission. As these arrangements are perfected and funds come in, help will be rendered in many phases of camp and community work in or adjacent to the camps needing such.

It is contemplated that Bishop Lambuth sail for England at an early date, and thence he will go to France and take up such lines of action as we can prosecute to help and bless on that side.

The Commission is alive to the stupendous task and great opportunity of the Church, and asks the co-operation of all throughout the Church.

"Brethren, pray for us."

E. O. WATSON, Secretary.

OUR GREAT MISSIONARY CENTENARY.

By Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

It is high time that we were beginning to plan wisely and energetically for our great Missionary Centenary by which we hope to honor and glorify our risen Lord. The world war with its huge loss of life and treasure and its temptation to despair is really a great challenge to our faith. Now comes Satan with that last desperate effort to defeat our Lord by suggesting that Christianity has failed. Men have abandoned Christian principles of arbitration after two thousand years of Christ's teachings and have surrendered themselves to barbarism in their appeals to the sword. In none of the past twenty centuries have the methods of war been so cruel and destructive as the methods of scientific warfare which have been adopted. Whole generations are being swept out of existence and all the means of commerce are either being destroyed or used as means of destruction.

Not since the Reign of Terror in France, a century and a quarter ago, has Satan been so daring in his assaults on the faith. Then when Satan declared that the faith was nothing, nothing to comfort a despairing world or to reconstruct a ruined world, the response came. We have lost everything but our faith. Faith was to create a new world. Men clung to their faith as the most real and enduring thing in the world by which there was to be created a new world wherein dwelleth righteousness. Christ was never so real and present to his Church as when his disciples went forth in faith to sow the seed of life. "The good seed were the children of the kingdom." The modern missionary era, which began in the very midst of the Reign of Terror and of the Napoleonic Era was the answer of faith. The hundred years since Waterloo, after England had fought Napoleon for twenty-three years, have been the most fruitful years in the religious life of England and America. All the great missionary societies that have blessed the world had their origin just a hundred years ago. They did not even wait, in many instances, for the wars to cease.

Now the great Methodisms of the United States and Canada are planning to celebrate the vigorous and triumphant faith of our fathers which have borne such wonderful fruit in the last hundred years. It is proposed to have representatives of all three Churches at Lake Junaluska, from June 26-30, to consider plans and methods so as to go at this great work in the wisest and best way.

I bespeak the largest possible attendance of our Bishops, our presiding elders, our preachers and our laymen. Let us begin right to plan for the certain realization of the great undertaking of many millions to be laid upon the altar of Christ.

Come in the spirit of intercessory prayer and let the place be a very mount of God.

CENTENARY COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The recent Commencement exercises of Centenary College marked the close of what was, in some respects, the best session the school has had since its removal to Shreveport. In view of the loss of a number of students on account of their enlistment in the military service of the Government, the attendance was unusually good; in the High School department, there was a decided increase; in the college department, as was naturally expected, there was a considerable falling off. But the spirit of the student body was good, and the work was very satisfactory.

The declamation contest and the graduating exercises of the High School were held in the Noel Memorial Church on Thursday evening, May 30. The declaimers all did well in their contest; the medal was awarded to Mr. Percy E. Roberts, of East Feliciana Parish. After an inspiring patriotic address by Dr. Jasper K. Smith, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Shreveport, eight graduates of the High School were given their diplomas by President Wynn.

The annual Commencement sermon was preached on Sunday morning, June 2, at the First Methodist Church, by Dr. Sam R. Hay, of Dallas, Tex. Those who are competent to judge spoke of it as a great utterance. On Sunday evening, Rev. W. W. Holmes, of New Orleans, preached the annual Y. M. C. A. sermon in the Noel Memorial Church. It was a most timely presentation of vital, practical truth.

The graduating exercises were held in the Noel Memorial Church on Monday evening, June 3, in connection with which the Alumni Association program was given. Rev. S. J. Davies, who has decided literary gifts, read the alumni poem. A beautiful feature of the program was the presentation of a service flag, containing 53 stars, representing former students of the institution who are now in the service of our country. The presentation speech was made by Rev. A. G. Shankle, pastor of the First Methodist Church.

The Commencement address was to have been delivered by Col. T. Sambola Jones, of Baton Rouge, but a telegram from him, received at the last minute, stated that urgent duties in connection with affairs of State made it impossible for him, very much to his regret, to be present. Dr. Hay was pressed into service, and an address was delivered by him which fully sustained his reputation as a thoughtful and eloquent speaker.

Mr. Homer E. Turner, of Shreveport, a son of Rev. A. W. Turner, of the Louisiana Conference, was the only graduate. President Wynn, in appropriate words, gave him his diploma conferring upon him the degree, Bachelor of Arts.

After the exercises, a reception was held in the banquet hall of the church, where light refreshments were served, and talks were made by visiting alumni and others. An optimistic spirit prevailed. The next session is expected to show marked advance over the past in several directions.

Two of the professors, B. D. Battle and P. M. Brown, Jr., have been called into the military service, but provision was made to fill their places.

A RED FLAG.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Possibly some people of ultra-conservative tendencies may think that I am always seeing red; but if I stood beside a railway track and there was a broken rail, I would certainly wave a red flag to stop an approaching train to save human lives. If I did not do so, I would be a criminal.

Likewise, if I see human souls endangered and fail to warn them of their peril and they perish, I should be regarded as a criminal in the sight of God and man. The Bible tells me that their blood would be required at my hands. It is far better for me to see red now than to have to look on the red blood of lost men in eternity. If the fear of criticism should cause me to hesitate to sound the note of warning, I should justly be adjudged by men a moral coward. So, I come now to wave a red flag.

The papers are publishing to the world that some Y. M. C. A. men and Red Cross workers in their public addresses, delivered before various assemblies, are telling their audiences that our soldier boys who die on the battle field, by virtue of that fact alone, will go to heaven. This false doctrine is being preached to our soldiers, and some of them may be deluded, die in their sins and lose their souls.

A young lawyer of my town, having offered himself for Y. M. C. A. service in France, wrote his brother to that effect, and his brother replied: "I am glad you are going to enter upon that great work, but some of the Y. M. C. A. secretaries are telling the boys that if they die on the battle field they will go to heaven. If you cannot do better than that, you had better quit before you begin; for nothing but repentance of sin and faith in God through Jesus Christ can save the souls of men."

At the meeting of the State Teachers' Association in Jackson, Miss., a man, who had been sent to assist in the organization of Red Cross in preparation for its recent campaign, delivered an address to the teachers of the State during the course of which, as I am reliably informed, he said: 'No mother need shed a tear over the death of her boy on the battle field in France, because he will go directly to heaven." There were not only Christian teachers present, but also preachers, pastors of evangelical churches—yes, preachers of the gospel, yet no protest was made at the time, nor, so far as has been reported, was there a word of adverse criticism or comment later.

Such teaching is nothing less than Mohammedanism, pure and simple. Mohammed taught: "The sword is the key of heaven. Whoso falls in battle all his sins are forgiven; at the day of judgment his wounds shall be resplendent as vermilion and odoriferous as musk." We have proclaimed to the world that we are waging the warfare of Christian civilization against the forces of barbarism; indeed, one of the armies against which we are fighting, and which has largely contributed to the atrocities of the war, is composed of the blood-thirsty Turks, the followers of Mohammed. Shall we, then, by our silence sanction this false doctrine of these heretical teachers who are posing themselves before the world as Y. M. C. A. secretaries and Red Cross workers? Shall we, without a word of protest, permit them to bring among us, and particularly among our soldiers, many of whom must die and be buried beneath the soil of France in defense of the world's Christian civilization, a revival of Mohammedanism from the blighting forces of which, in the sixth century, the heroism of Constantine IV saved the civilization of Europe? As an inconspicuous represntative of the Church, without which the Y. M. C. A. and Red Cross could not exist, and upon which they depend for support, I raise my voice in protest that these splendid and necessary organizations are permitting these irresponsible teachers to run around loose among our people and soldiers, spreading over the nation the pernicious doctrines of Mohammedanism which had their beginning in the "Dark Ages."

I would not be misunderstood as offering one word of criticism against the Red Cross or the Y. M. C. A. Both are humanitarian agencies and should receive the undivided support of Christian men and women; but my conviction is that, in the name of the Church which has responded to every call of our national authorities by marshalling her inspirational forces, the Christian men and women of Christian America have a right to demand that both these worthy organizations eliminate from among their authorized workers these dangerous teachers of Mohammedanism, so that our boys who must die on the battle field may not die with their minds beclouded with delusion, but in the triumphs of the Christian religion and enter the Christian's heaven through faith in Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world.

"No person amounts to much in this world who has not at some time fought a battle."

PUBLIC SCHOOLHOUSES AND DANCE HALLS.

Under the above caption, the Advocate of this date refers to an article of mine which appeared in a recent issue of the Vicksburg Herald. If one could get comfort out of the fact that others are guilty of the same offense, I might so refer to your statement, that "New Orleans is dance wild," for truly the dance devil is abroad in the land, and your criticisms are timely. Almost every function, in these parts, winds up with a dance (except funerals) and there seems, as you suggest, a burrying to get to that part of the program—dances for Red Cross, dances for Y. M. C. A. drives, dances for K. C. funds, etc., ad infinitum et ad nauseam. That this mania for dancing—wild, indiscriminate dancing—can be controlled, at least to a degree, is illustrated in our own county of Warren. Outside the city of Vicksburg the schools have been consolidated into four, at central points; at one of these a trustee demanded that the seats be fastened to the floor, and when met with the statement that they were to be left so as to be moved for dancing purposes, he replied most emphatically, "Not while I'm on the board," and I am informed that the community stands with him. Asked not long since why I objected to dancing, I replied: "In a pastorate of forty years I have found the ballroom devotee of little value as a church worker, and not very conspicuous at prayer meeting, and judging the tree by its fruits I am forced to the conclusion that whatever else may be said for the dance mania it is not productive of growth in grace or in the knowledge of Jesus Christ."

Hats off to the new editor, and congratulations to the Publishing Committee! Now let Sam Steele come to the help with those reminiscences, those Dixie stories, those colloquies with Uncle Sie, and echoes from that war garden, and all's well. Oh, I might add another paragraph or so, but the reading public is like the average church-goer—wants things cut short, abridged! So "good luck, good bye."

"ALLELUIAH."

By Sara Du Bois.

He sat on one of the benches in the park, unmindful of all the beauty about him. His heart was cowed and his face was pinched and sad. The shoes which barely covered his feet were in keeping with the coat he wore, which, however, showed marks of past gentility.

"Good-morning, Mr. Man," said a sweet, childish voice, almost at his elbow. He straightened himself up suddenly, a deep flush covered his face. He was not used to being kindly spoken to, and the very tone of the voice thrilled him.

"Run away, little girl," he cried, "I am only a common tramp and you must not talk to me."

"But you seem so sad when everybody else is glad. Don't you know what day this is?"

"I do not know what you mean," he said bitterly. "I only know I am old and sick and there is no one to care for me."

"Oh, but you do not know then that this is Easter. Why, the beautiful, beautiful day when Christ rose from the dead! Why, don't you know, Mr. Man, that He loved the world so much that He suffered the shame of the Cross that your sins might be forgiven. That's what mother says, His love is so great it covers everybody."

"It is not for me," was the answer. "I have been a great sinner and have no claim to His love. I have no part in His plan of salvation."

"I cannot tell what you mean by that," the child eagerly continued, "but I do know it was for sinners He died and not for the righteous. There was a sheep once that wandered away off from the fold, and He left, oh, a whole flock, nearly a hundred, and when He found the poor one all bleeding that had wandered off, He didn't drive it home, but He took it right up to His bosom and carried it there."

"Yes, I've heard that story, but I cannot believe there is hope for me."

"No hope for you when God so loved the world that He gave His only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have everlasting life? Oh, Mr. Man, how can you doubt the words of the Christ on this glorious Easter morn, which reminds us that he rose from the dead."

"But it is not for me, it cannot be for me," he said eagerly.

"'Whosoever' must mean you since it means everybody. Why, don't you know, He said He didn't want anybody to perish, but if you won't come to Him, how can He save you?"

His hands gripped the bench upon which he sat, his eyes were full of tears.

"You might pray," she said; "He always hears prayers and father says He is ever so much more willing to give than we are ready to receive. I must go now, that is our bell for service, but oh, Mr. Man, do not forget whatever happens, God is always waiting to love you."

"Waiting to love him!" All these years he had been slighting His gifts, living selfishly and aimlessly, and now a cheerless old age had come with nothing but hunger and misery for him. Did Christ really care? How he had slighted the beauty about Him!

The birds of the air proclaimed His love, yet he, miserable man that he was, had forgotten His Maker.

The Alleluiah chorus from a near-by church came to him. "For now is Christ risen indeed, and become the first fruits of them that slept."

"He had been sleeping in sin, he would now awake in Christ Jesus."

He wept tears of penitence and joy. He rose to his feet a regenerated man. And a little child had led him into the paths of righteousness.—Christian Intelligencer.

When hard-hearted Pharaoh sinned and the plague of lice was upon him the magicians said, "This is the finger of God." They were ashamed of the lice, and well we may know that sin will bring us to shame, and, somewhere along the crooked path of a sinful life we will meet the "finger of God."

CHRIST'S PRESENCE WITHIN.

Our immediate obligation is that of being witnesses for Jesus Christ. How many of us know him? How many of us have had a talk with him to-day? How many of us dare trust our future into his hands? How many are willing to take that pierced hand and walk by his side until he calls you up higher, going where he sends you, speaking what he gives you to speak, carrying the burden that he lays upon your shoulders, enduring the ache of heart, if need be, that should come, taking the providences of God as they come? "You are to be witnesses for me," he says. How many of us can certify in the presence of a congregation that there is such a person as Jesus Christ? When did he talk with you last? When did you realize, as the two disciples did who are spoken of in this story, that as you are walking in the pathway of life you have found that there was a silent person walking by your side, and you discovered the Man of Sorrows, the Man of Galilee, was with you?—Bishop Thoburn.

NOTICE TO PREACHERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES.

I sent out recently a circular letter to all the preachers of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences asking for a list of the drafted men from their communities who were sent to Camp Shelby, with their church affiliations. So far I have received less than twenty replies from both Conferences.

Brethren, these are your boys and the Camp Pastors' Association of Camp Shelby is anxious to line them up with the Church of their choice as early as possible after their arrival in the Camp. We are seriously handicapped in this effort until you give us this information. I realize that I am asking you to take some trouble, but I believe the preachers of Mississippi are sufficiently patriotic to be willing to go to the necessary trouble to assist us in this matter. May we count on you?

ROY H. KLEISER,
Chairman, Camp Pastors' Association for Camp Shelby.

MORNING IN THE HEART.

Morning in the heart is a more wonderful thing than morning in the heavens. God can give daybreak along the horizon to anybody. Indeed, day succeeds night with such clocklike regularity that we lose sense of the wonder of it. But morning in the heart is a still greater thing. It may come at midnight and amid pain. Sometimes pain is God's call-boy to "stab our spirit wide-awake." But whenever it comes God always gives it. He may use human ministrants, but he is the renewer of the morning of the heart. Thank God for day, whether it comes over the hills of difficulty, or mirrored in the river of doubt, or flashed back to us from the eyes of our friends. Morning in the heart is a miracle. There are few greater that God can give. —George Clarke Peck.

COST OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The cost to maintain the Sunday schools of the United States is about $30,000,000 a year, and practically all of the money is given by children. At any rate, with some help from adults who are officers and teachers, all Sunday schools are self-supporting, and draw little upon the finances of the church of which they are an important part.

"Whoever will take one step to please God will soon want to take another."

The Blood and the Brain.

Among the many important physiological facts that should be as well known by people generally as they are by physicians, is the dependence of the brain for its proper action on the vitality of the blood. If this is impaired, the blood affords an imperfect stimulus to the brain, and, as a necessary consequence, languor and inactivity of the entire nervous system follows, and a tendency to headache or faintness makes its appearance.

It is probable that no other medicine ever produced has done more in the way of revitalizing the blood, making it pure and rich, than Hood's Sarsaparilla, which should certainly be given a trial where there is any reason to believe that the blood is defective in quality or deficient in quantity.—Adv.

— REFLECTED IN —

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

BENNY AT THE BIRDS' BANQUET.

Benny Bruce was always kind to every living thing;
He liked to feed the pretty birds that gathered round to sing.
Now, one fine day the little birds, and large birds as well,
Resolved to spread a banquet on the moss in Fairy Dell.

Till he caught a string of speckled trout sufficient for a meal;
And the Cuckoo cooked them well till they were brown within the pan,
While Mistress Magpie made a pie as only Magpies can.

The Wren ran for the rennet, and she made a custard fine;
"A dish of junket's good dessert," she said, "for folks that dine."
Quoth the Guinea Hen: " A guinea will be just tho proper fee
For all excepting Benny Bruce; he'll be invited free."

You should have seen that jolly crowd around their mossy table!
Benny Bruce ate quite as much as ever he was able,
Yet the Swallow swallowed even more than Benny, so they say;
Said Benny (to himself), as he was finishing his plateful,
"I've learned one thing: that even birds can prove that they are grateful!".

THE TEST.

"But, father, it's not wrong."

"No," said the man slowly, "It's not."

"Then I may go!" exclaimed the boy, happily. "It will be loads of fun."

"Son, you are old enough to decide for yourself, and I won't say you may or may not go. I would rather leave the decision entirely with you."

"But you don't want me to go?" said the boy, reluctantly.

"You've heard my objections, but as you say, it's not wrong, and you are to decide for yourself."

"I wish you would not put it that way. I want to go so much; it will be such a jolly crowd and they will have a splendid time. Please say you think it will be all right."

"Son, I don't want to preach to you, and I don't want to prejudice you in your decision, but I want to remind you of one thing. This is not a question of good or bad; it is a decision between good and best. If it were a question of right or wrong, I know you wouldn't hesitate; in fact, I think there would only be a little temptation for you. It is in choosing the best that the test comes.

"So many of us are satisfied if we just crawl out of the muck of wrong, and don't try to climb up the hills of better and best. The world, as a rule, is satisfied with the merely good. So the sacrifice—for in choosing the best we usually have to make some sacrifice—seems to be unnecessary. But every time you have a chance to choose, and you choose the best, your character grows a little stronger, finer and higher. And when you decide that merely good is sufficient, your character softens a little.

"Sometimes men are made famous in a moment by the hard choice of the best; famous men have been ruined by failing to take the highest way. The law may make you choose the good, but only with the help of God can you choose the best."

There was silence in the room for a few minutes, then the boy heard a shrill whistle of his chum, and hurried out to answer it.

The man sat and wondered; but the boy did not go.—The Youth's Companion.

"HOW OLD MUST I BE?"

"Mother," said a little child, "how old must I be before I can be a Christian?" And the mother replied, "How old will you have to be before you can love me?" "Why, mother," said the child, "I always have loved you. I do now, and always shall." Then the mother asked, "How old must you be before you can trust yourself wholly to me and to my care?" And then, "How old will you be before you can do what I want you to do?" And when the child whispered, "I can now, without growing any older," the mother said, "You can be a Christian now, without waiting to be older. All you have to do is to love and trust and try to please Jesus. Don't you want to begin now?"

That day the child gave her young heart into the keeping of Jesus Christ. Christ was always deeply interested in little children, for he said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Apples of Gold.

SMART ALECK AND THE OWL.

It is a pity, when a boy is smart enough to stand at the head of his class and take the prize and be exempt from examinations, that he isn't smart enough to know that he doesn't know everything. That was Aleck May. The other boys and girls didn't mind Aleck's being head and taking the prize, but it fretted them somewhat that Aleck should pretend to know everything about everything. So they couldn't help being tickled when the owl "put one over," as they said, on Aleck.

A lot of boys and girls from the third grade were walking along College Street on their way from school when Aleck cried out: "Oho! Look at that stuffed owl in Jarvin's window! Ain't he a sight?"

"Not much; he doesn't look all right," answered Aleck scornfully. "Look at his legs. They are not straight; the bird man has just stuck slanting sticks in for legs. How could he walk on those things?"

The other children were silenced, not knowing much about owls. No more did Aleck; but a little thing like that didn't silence him. "And will you see how the bird man has twisted his head almost around to the back of his neck!" Aleck continued in the same scornful tone: "Why, it would break his neck if he were a live bird."

Just then the great horned owl in Jarvin's window slowly turned its tufted head around to the front and fixed its yellow eyes on Aleck. The girls screamed, and the boys backed off a little; but Aleck stood still, his lower jaw dropped, his eyes almost as big as the owl's. "Great Jiminy Crickets, if the fellow ain't alive!" he exclaimed and set out quickly for home to escape the jeers of the crowd.

Aleck did not escape. For weeks to come he had to stand being asked about owl's legs and heads by the boys and girls in the third grade.

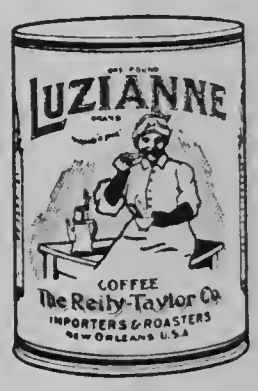
But Aleck showed his sense in two ways: he took the teasing in good humor, and he learned to be much slower about claiming that he knew everything. Could you beat that?—Elizabeth Preston Allen, in The Visitor.

WHEN MARIE'S EYES WERE OPENED.

Marie had big, bright, brown eyes that could see the birds and the flowers and the trees, and that could see to read and to go about, yet there were many things that those bright eyes did not see at all. At night, somehow, the eyes could not see the chair where all Marie's clothes should have been neatly placed. If they had, her tired mother would not have had to pick up the clothes from the floor before she went to bed.

In the morning they did not see the place in the bathroom where the towel should have been hung; at breakfast they did not see the napkin ring. They did not see the clock said there was plenty of time to help mother before school.

One day Aunt Margaret came to visit, and she felt so sorry about those bright, blind eyes that she began to help them to see.



"Suppose we tidy up this room before mother comes in," she whispered one day. Marie was going out to play, and had not noticed how the room looked, but she joyfully clapped her hands as she saw her mother's delight when the room was done.

When once the eyes began to see things that ought to be done, they soon began to hunt for things to do to make people happy. And if you have seeing eyes yourself, I need not tell you how much happier and more beautiful the world became for Marie and for every one about her.—Exchange.

BY WAY OF BEGINNING—PERSONAL.

With this issue of the Advocate I assume responsibility for its editorial management. I am not unmindful of the magnitude of that responsibility; but I have no disposition to evade it. I crave the indulgence of my readers only in so far as inexperience and the necessity of working under pretty high pressure deserve it.

In view of the short length of time for which I have been elected to serve, it would, perhaps, be unbecoming in me to undertake to announce a policy; I shall content myself, therefore, with declaring a purpose and expressing a hope. It is my purpose to devote all the energy I possess to the task of making the paper genuinely useful in promoting the welfare of the Church I love, which to me represents the highest form of evangelical Christianity in the world. It is my hope that through this ministry I may be able to develop and strengthen, somewhat at least, the personal religious life of my readers. What a joy it would be to lighten some burden, comfort some heart, clear away the mists from some tear-dimmed eye!

I rely upon the prayers and sympathy of all.

The Red Cross is one of the noblest of the organizations whose activities in relief of suffering on the battlefield have made them dear to the heart of humanity. The immense sums that have been called for to aid it in its work have been quickly given by the people, and there has been no question as to the proper distribution of these funds. Men and women of all creeds and of no creed, and little children, have responded nobly by their willing and generous contributions.

We would not, under any consideration, say one word that would, in any way, hurt or discourage those who have been so ready to meet every demand that might be made upon them in connection with this great work. But we do want to suggest that it is possible that means have been used in raising money for the Red Cross that cannot be commended by the great Christian Church, the teachings of whose Founder are the inspiration of deeds of mercy everywhere. For example, practically all the great religious denominations of this country have made decided pronouncements against the modern dance; and yet it is no uncommon thing to read in the daiy newspapers reports of Red Cross dances, with statements of amounts that have been raised by them.

Apart from opposition on moral grounds to dancing, and we are unalterably opposed to it on those grounds, we are convinced that a little reflection would enable anyone to see the great impropriety of raising money for such a cause in any such way. Some time ago the newspapers published the story of some French officers who declined to take part in a dance because their hearts were heavy with the thought of their brother-soldiers who were bleeding and dying in France. That is it—merry-making to raise money for the hospital and funeral expenses of those we love! Let us not cease to give money to the Red Cross; let us give it more and more freely, and as long as it shall be needed. But let us eliminate dancing as a means of getting that money.

CHURCH WORK AND THE WAR.

If there ever was a time when the Church needed to enter upon its work with determination and earnestness and hopefulness, that time is now. We have never before seen such a world as we are now in. The resources of all the great nations of earth have been thrown into the struggle for or against Christian civilization. It is a struggle in which the right will win, if the forces of righteousness put all their strength into the conflict. And we believe they will.

The Church faces a serious situation. The ordinary activities of life have given place to extraordinary. The usual has been submerged in the unusual. New methods of work and new ways of approach become old overnight.

But there is nothing in the situation to discourage us. Never was the world's need of God more evident; never were religious forces more efficiently organized; never were men more obedient to the divine imperatives.

The world's crisis constitutes the Church's opportunity. Now is the time to throw indecision and hesitancy to the winds, and with a tremendous earnestness and an invincible optimism, to bring up the reserves and begin a drive that will win the world for our Lord and his Christ.

DATE OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE CHANGED.

The Advocate is authorized to announce that the time of holding the Louisiana Annual Conference has been changed to November 13. This was done by Bishop Kilgo, at the request of the presiding elders, who felt that the Conference should not be in session during Thanksgiving week. Bishop Kilgo will be holding the North Mississippi Conference on November 20, and was, therefore, unable to fix the Louisiana Conference at that time. Doubtless this change will meet the approval of all the brethren, as such moving as may be necessary can be over with by Christmas.

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

It would be hard to overestimate the value of such gatherings as the Efficiency Conference recently held at Grenada, Miss., the North Louisiana Efficiency Conference, held at Shreveport, La., and the Seashore Divinity School, to be held at the Seashore Camp Ground, June 25-July 4. They furnish in full measure the information, the inspiration, and the recreation that are necessary to keep the preacher at his best.

The Seashore Divinity School, in spite of the abnormal condition of affairs, has succeeded in arranging a program of unusual excellence. Such men as Dr. Henry N. Snyder, of Wofford College, Dr. Ozora S. Davis, of Chicago Theological Seminary, and Dr. Cadmen M. Cobern, of Allegheny College, are worth going a long way to hear. In addition to these eminent scholars, Rev. A. L. Dietrich, who is well known as a specialist in Sunday school work, will conduct a class in teacher-training. A new feature this year will be addresses at an afternoon hour by selected representatives from each of the patronizing Conferences.

It is to be earnestly hoped that as many preachers as possible will take advantage of the opportunity to enrich their own lives and increase their efficiency in the work of the pastorate by attending the School. And laymen also will find much that will help them in their special fields of labor.

The expense of making the trip is perhaps the chief thing that keeps a good many preachers from enjoying the benefits of the School. In many cases this difficulty might easily be removed by a little effort on the part of the congregation. This suggestion, previously made in the Advocate, is worth repeating: Give your pastor a vacation and present him with a purse sufficient to cover the necessary expenses. This will be not only a generous expression of appreciation, but also a wise investment. Your preacher will come back to you better prepared to minister to your needs in the pulpit and in the pastoral relation.

GEORGE ADAM SMITH IN NEW ORLEANS.

It was the Editor's privilege to attend a luncheon at the Hotel De Soto last Saturday in honor of Rev. Sir George Adam Smith. The luncheon was given by the churches of New Orleans, and was attended by a large number of ministers and laymen who wished to see, and hear, and do honor to this scholar of world-wide fame. George Adam Smith, to leave off his titles and degrees, is perhaps best known in the United States by his Expositor's Bible, which has had a very wide circulation among all classes of people. He is a chaplain in the British army, and wears the chaplain's uniform. He is a forceful speaker, though not what is ordinarily called eloquent. He weighs his words carefully, and speaks with deliberation. In his brief address he used a telling phrase in characterizing President Wilson's delay in declaring for war—"pregnant patience." We need to think of that phrase a little to realize how full of meaning it is.

We also had the privilege of hearing Sir George preach on Sunday evening at the Third Presbyterian Church, under very unfavorable circumstances—just as he arose to announce his text, the lights went out and remained out during the rest of the service. He did not, however, seem to be embarrassed, but gave a simple gospel message from Heb. 12:1-2. It was difficult to catch all he had to say, but we came away with the feeling that in the bosom of the great scholar and critic there beats a passionately sympathetic heart, full of love for God and man.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We extend our thanks to Rev. O. L. Savage, of Webb, Miss., for two renewals, and good wishes, which we reciprocate fully.

Rev. J. M. Morse, presiding elder of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference, requests us to announce that Bishop Kilgo has appointed Rev. J. L. Nelll as Educational Secretary of the Board of Missions.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions recently sent in: Rev. W. G. Burks, Blue Mountain, Miss., 2; Mrs. Carrie Anderson, Meridian, Miss., 2; Rev. J. D. Harper, Opelousas, La., 3.

The special attention of Louisiana Methodists is called to the notice of the change in the time of the meeting of the Annual Conference, from November 27 to November 13. Now is a good time to begin getting the Conference collections in hand.

Rev. W. M. Sullivan, the hard-working and successful pastor of our church at Columbia, Miss., announces the payment of the indebtedness, amounting to several thousand dollars, on the building. He hopes to secure Bishop Kilgo for the dedication services soon to be held.

The Monroe District Conference, Louisiana Conference, is announced to be in session at Mer Rouge this week. We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation from the wide-awake presiding elder, Rev. A. S. Lutz, to be present and regret that it is impossible for us to accept it at this time.

Protestant denominations are co-operating in union communion services in many of the camps and cantonments throughout the country, according to the report of a representative of the Federal Council of the Churches. Grape juice is used in place of wine, and war bread in place of white bread.

worth, Mississippi Conference, sends us a renewal subscription, for which he has our thanks, and the encouraging news that his work is prospering. He has just closed a good meeting at Foxworth, in which he was assisted by Rev. J. V. Bennett, of Brookhaven.

The Seashore Camp Grounds are being put in readiness for the annual session of the Divinity School, whicb begins on June 25, and for the Camp Meeting, wbich follows. Keller Lodge will be under the management of Rev. H. W. Van Hook, which is a guarantee that tbe guests of that hostelry will be well cared for.

Rev. H. G. Roberts, our pastor at Lambert, North Mississippi Conference, brings us under obligation by sending us three new names for our mailing files, with check to match. He reports that things are moving along nicely on his charge. He has fifty per cent of the Conference assessments in hand. A good record!

From a personal letter we learn that the Centenary College Summer School, at Shreveport, La., has a good attendance. Rev. John F. Foster, who more than once has rendered most efficient service in helping with the work during the regular session of tbe college, is performing the same kind office for the summer school.

A note from Rev. J. A. McCormack, our pastor at Merryville, La., states that his eldest son, John, was recently operated on in the sanitarium at De Ridder, for appendicitis. He stood the ordeal well, and at tbe time of writing the indications were that be would soon be on the road to recovery. We pray tbat it may be so.

Rev. U. G. Foote, D. D., Rev. F. M. Freeman, and Rev. A. J. Gearheard, all pastors of Methodist churches in the city of New Orleans, are on speaking tours this week throughout the State in the interest of tbe War Savings Stamp Campaign. The government has no more faithful and efficient supporters than our Methodist preachers.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of tbe New Orleans District, has rented a cottage on the Seashore Camp Grounds, where his family will spend the summer. Brother Holmes will remain in the city, that be may at all times be in close touch with the work of his district. Mail addressed to him at 1127 Fern Street will reach him as usual.

From various sources we learn that our new Bishops, in keeping with the suggestion of the General Conference, have announced their episcopal residences as follows: Bishop McMurry, China; Bishop Moore, Brazil; Bishop Du Bose, California; Bishop Ainsworth, Texas. We have seen no announcements from Bishops Darlington and Cannon.

We thank Brother E. E. Williamson, of Crew Lake, La., for his check for the renewal of his subscription to tbc Advocate, and for his kind words. Among other things, he says: "I have been reading the New Orleans Christian Advocate for about thirty years, and can say that it should be in every Methodist home." Needless to say, we agree with him fully in this sentiment.

The Editor attended the New Orleans Methodist Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning of last week, and was given a most cordial welcome to the city by those present. The reports from the various pastors indicated that Methodism is a vigorous force in the civic and religious life of the city. We appreciate very much the honor of being elected to membership in the Meeting.

In a personal communication to the editor, Rev. John W. Ramsey, of New Augusta, Miss., states that the work of the Church is moving smoothly up his way. He expects soon to enter upon his revival campaign, when he expects great things of the Lord. May be be abundantly satisfied! Through Brotber Ramsey's efforts, a union meeting will be held at New Augusta, participated in by the Methodists, the Baptists, and the Presbyterians.

Rev. Jas. E. Selfe, our pastor at Covington, La., who is serving his first charge in the regular itinerancy, is showing himself splendidly adapted to the work. In an unusually difficult field, he has looked faithfully after all the interests of tbe Church. His Conference collections are largely in hand, and in other directions the results of his energy are evident. This information was given to the Advocate by one who is in a position to know the facts.

Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr., of the Louisiana Conference, has been released from his charge at Donaldsonville that he may enter the army Y. M. C. A. work. He is now in the training camp at San Antonio, Texas. He writes us that his family will live at 428 East Boulevard Street, Shreveport, and that mail addressed to him there will be forwared by his wife. Brother Henderson is one of our most faithful ministers, and we feel sure he will be a great blessing to our soldiers.

June 28 has been designated as National War Savings Day. Every citizen will be expected, on that day, to pledge himself to save and buy War Savings Stamps to the utmost of his ability. We must not fail to support the government at this time. Methodism has pledged its loyalty in ringing resolutions, such as those adopted by the General Conferences at Atlanta. But words without deeds are empty things; it takes money to win the war. Buy all the War Stamps you possibly can.

All our people should heed the warning of the Government Fuel Administration, that unless provision is made during the summer for the fuel supply, there is likely to be suffering next winter. The government is giving us fair warning that it is going to need the railroads more than ever to haul necessary supplies, and if we find it difficult to get our coal after a while, we have nobody to blame but ourselves. Those who use coal, should order their supply now; those who use wood, should join the "cut a cord" movement.

Rev. Alonzo Early, pastor of our church at Amite, La., in remitting for his subscription, adds this interesting item: "A number of the members of the Amite Methodist Church surprised their pastor one night last week when they came in on him and his family loaded with good things to eat. It was a good 'pounding' of the old-fashioned sort. The evening was spent in singing and talking on general topics. It was a pleasant occasion, and long to be remembered." It goes without saying that this preacher is in favor with his people.

The new editor regrets very much that he was not in when Rev. P. H. Howse, of Ellisville, Miss., stopped at the office to extend greetings. He was accompanied by his son, who is with the Coast Artillery, stationed at Jackson Barracks. While at the office, Brother Howse left two new names for our mailing files. He also asked that we send him a list of subscribers at Moselle and Ellisville, that he might look after the renewal of subscriptions that are expiring. We thank Brother Howse for his work in behalf of the Advocate.

The Church press generally has noted with regret the resignation of Dr. R. A. Meek from the editorship of the Advocate. The Texas Christian Advocate, in its issue of May 30, says this: "We regret to lose Dr. Meek from our journalism. We have not agreed with Dr. Meek on all matters. But the New Orleans Advocate was an interesting paper under the editorship of this good man. We pray for a speedy recovery for Dr. Meek and that soon he may be able to resume his work in the Church which he so much loves."

Dr. J. M. Sullivan, in a recent letter to the Editor, says: "I am now out on my summer campaign in the interest of Millsaps College, and am very much encouraged with the prospect. I have recently attended the Corinth District Conference, which had a splendid session. Millsaps College is gaining a strong hold in this part of the State. Our greatest need now is the completion of the new dormitory. Brother Black is certainly making an enthusiastic and successful Commissioner." This is encouraging news. Now, as never before, our people should patronize and support our Church schools.

Rev. E. K. Means, the popular pastor of our church at Monroe, La., has recently been in New York as the guest of the Munsey Company, in whose publications his inimitable Negro dialect stories appear. It may not be known to some that Brother Means is considered, by competent critics, to be one of the best delineators of Negro character that the South has produced. He is accompanied on his trip by his wife. Before returning, they will visit Washington, D. C., and Brother Mean's old home in Kentucky. His appreciative congregation has given him a month's vacation.

Rev. William H. Giles, of Primrose, Ga., accompanied by his young wife, passed through New Orleans on Tuesday of this week on his way to Donaldsonville, La., where he goes to fill the pastorate made vacant by the entrance of Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr., into Y. M. C. A. war work. Brother Giles is a recent graduate of the Candler School of Theology, Emory University, and comes to us highly recommended. He began right by subscribing for the Advocate. We extend to him and his charming wife a cordial welcome among us, and pray that they may be greatly blessed in their work.

"Our Main Street Church, at Hattiesburg, Miss., is greatly bereaved in the passing of one of its best and most useful men," writes Brother P. D. Hardin, the pastor. He continues: "Brother Arthur J. Crowe, the president of our Board of Stewards, and one of the assistant superintendents of the Sunday school, died last Sunday morning, June 9, while undergoing an operation at an infirmary in this city. Tuesday morning, June 11, after appropriate services held in the church which he loved so well, his body was tenderly laid to rest in the City Cemetery, there to await the resurrection morn." We extend tender sympathy to the bereaved ones, and pray that God's grace may sustain them in this time of sorrow.

On Sunday, June 16, Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, dedicated Poitevent's Chapel, a new building recently completed on the Covington charge near Mandeville, La., of which Rev. Jas. E. Selfe is pastor. This church was built at the expense of Mr. Eads Poitevent, and presented by him to our Methodism. The following trustees were elected: Eads Poitevent, W. W. Wallace, S. P. Russ. Mr. Poitevent has also built two churches for the Negroes in the same community, Methodist and Baptist. This is a generous recognition by Mr. Poitevent, not only of the great economic value of religion in maintaining good order and promoting thrift in a community, but also of the genuine spiritual needs of people. After the donor has passed on, this that he has done will remain as a monument to perpetuate his memory. May he receive a blessing from a deed that, doubtless, will bring a blessing to many others!

Rev. A. F. Vaughan, the beloved pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, of this city, has been accepted as a candidate for the chaplaincy in the U. S. Army, and is now in the chaplains' training camp at Louisville, Ky. The Carrollton congregation regret to lose Brother Vaughan, but they honor him for his ready response to the call of duty and great opportunity. As a mark of appreciation, they gathered at the parsonage on Wednesday evening of last week, and, after appropriate remarks by representatives of tbe different departments of church work, presented him with a generous purse and various other tokens of their love and esteem. A touching feature of tbe gathering was the presentation to Brother Vaughan, by the Boy Scout troop of which he was leader, of a purse as an expression of their love for him. For the present, tbe Carrollton Avenue pulpit will be looked after by the presiding elder, with the assistance of preachers locally available.

God's Word has its silences, merciful and beneficent; but Satan's word has its silences, too, not merciful and not beneficent. Satan's word tells of flowery paths, of alluring pleasures, of seductive companionships, of jovial nights and days; but Satan's word is silent concerning the hidden precipices, the gnawing remorse, the degrading bondage, the deathless despair that lie in wait for the footsteps of those who walk in evil paths. Flashing lights, costly paintings, merry music send out their welcome to the passer-by, from halls of fair-seeming which are wholly devoted to the service of evil; but no voice from within, no legend on the wall tells of the ruined lives, the scattered households, the broken hearts, whose history found its first tragic meaning beneath these lights.—H. C. Trumbull.

Mrs. MINERVA COLLINS departed this life at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Henry, West Monroe, La., where she had just moved about ten days before, aged 72 years 2 months and 15 days, having been born in Mississippi on November 27, 1845. Her parents, Evan and Elizabeth Sanford, moved with her to Louisiana—then the new country—when she was about six years of age, and settled among the Indians in Ouachita Parish, near Indian Village, where she was reared and where she in turn reared her own family. On November 30, 1865, she was united in marriage to Peter Collins, which consummated an earlier friendship. To this union were born thirteen children—nine boys and four girls—ten of whom, all mature men and women, survive. Her husband preceded her by several years to the grave, and she remained a widow the remainder of her life. Some time after her husband's death she moved with her family to Eros, La., where she continued to reside until she moved to West Monroe in February, 1918.

"Aunt Minerva," as friends familiarly called her, was truly loved, and will be greatly missed by people of all ages who knew her. She was a quiet, reserved, home-loving woman, ever feeling that her chiefest duty was to plan for the comfort and administer to the myriad wants of her family circle. Her dominating motto was, "Anything worth doing at all is worth doing well;" so she did her best in everything she did, from dusting a room to counseling her boys and girls. Her religious life began early. She heard the divine call and gave her heart and life to God in her sixteenth year and became a charter member of the Indian Village M. E. Church, South, organized by her uncle, Rev. Moses Sanford, under a brush arbor, and was loyal and faithful to her Church all her long life. She had strong convictions and was not swayed by new isms and cults. Indeed, she had but little patience with such. She had an abiding faith in her Church and its ministry. Not being of an impulsive temperament, her religious experience did not manifest itself in shouting or public demonstrations, but in quiet acts of faith and self-denying service. A daughter remarked at the time of her death: "Mother was the most self-denying person I ever saw. She never thought of herself, it was always of others." Another daughter wrote: "Her timid temperament prevented her giving public expression to her happy assurance of Divine acceptance, but a summary of her daily life convincingly attests her purity of heart and undoubted loyalty to her Lord and Master. As I review our frail little mother's life, its just reproduction grows more and more impossible."

She lived to see all her surviving children members of the Church of her choice, and a number of them quite active Christian workers. Her last illness was of but few days' duration. She had already passed the three score and ten milepost. When she knew the end of her earthly pilgrimage was drawing near she said to a loving daughter: "The Lord is with me." Leaving this as her parting testimony, she soon departed with Him and entered peacefully and triumphantly into rest.

LAFAYETTE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Lafayette District Conference had a very interesting and spiritual meeting from the 27th to the 29th of May, in Abbeville, La. The Conference closed at noon on the 29th to enable the preachers to have special services in their churches on Thursday. This was the day set apart by President Wilson as a day of humiliation, fasting, and prayer in behalf of the Allied Cause.

The Conference was missionary in spirit. The Woman's Missionary Society of the district met in Abbeville at the same time. They added to the spirit of the Conference. The presiding elder emphasized the necessity of the missionary spirit on the part of preachers and laymen as well.

Among the many points of vital concern discussed, the question of the Conference benevolences took a leading place. This discussion arose when a challenge was read by the secretary from the Shreveport District relative to these Conference claims. Each preacher present pledged himself to do all within his power to get these claims.

The preaching was done by H. W. Bowman, H. N. Brown, H. W. Rickey, and R. W. Tucker. These brethren did splendidly, including the elder. The preaching, in fact every phase of the Conference, was thoroughly patriotic. The spirit of optomism prevailed.

We were royally entertained by the people of Abbeville. Brother Perritt and his wife had arrangements well in hand.

C. E. FIKE, Secretary.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference of the M. E. Church, South, convened in the Union Church, at Eden, Miss., on May 28, 1918, and lasted two days.

Rev. J. M. Morse, presiding elder, sat in the chair, and directed the proceedings with painstaking care and reasonable dispatch. Eden proved a delightful place for the meeting, and Rev. A. S. Oliver a courteous and pleasing host.

The preachers and delegates enjoyed the sojourn, and the hospitable people expressed regret that the Conference came to a close so soon.

Rev. A. S. Oliver, pastor, is in deserving favor with his people, and is doing a work that is progressive and substantial. Under his wise and consecrated leadership a Methodist house of worship is in sight, and constructive work will soon begin.

The writer of these lines was entertained at the pleasant home of Mrs. Peaster, where there was such an abundance of palatable edibles that the temptation was great to go the entire limit.

If the sun rises a half-hour late at Eden on account of the haughty hills in close proximity, its bright beams light up a peaceful valley where a quiet town nestles, surrounded by rich fields of waving corn and growing cotton. Within a few miles the yellow Yazoo River meanders, a symbol of what may reach the pocket of the husbandman who cultivates generous delta soil. Lakes and bayous are within walking distance, where agile trout and nimble perch appeal to the proclivities of the angler.

Each session of the Conference was opened with devotions, led by Rev. C. W. Crisler, and his talks were spiritual and splendid.

Mr. A. P. Hamilton, of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, had charge of the singing.

The attendance was good, many delegates being present, and all the pastors except two. The people of Eden turned out en masse.

Some brethren from abroad were present, with countenances like Revs. Robt. Selby, J. L. Neill, T. J. O'Neil, J. C. Chambers, C. L. Oakes, J. L. Green, W. Fred Long and I. W. Cooper.

Mmes. S. F. Riley and Sam Ewing added grace and profit to the assembly.

Many committees were appointed by the Chair, and at the right time reports were read. Extracts could be made from the reports, but space would hardly permit.

The Conference recommended that the salaries of our excellent professors at Millsaps College be increased to an amount sufficient to meet the needs of the present, because the cost of living has increased more than fifty per cent.

One session was devoted to a Sunday School Institute, and the following took part: Virgil Howle, Prof. D. M. Key, Revs. B. F. Lewis, J. F. Campbell, J. C. Chambers.

Rev. Jno. E. Gibson was granted license to preach.

The delegates to the Annual Conference were elected as follows: J. M. Sullivan, C. S. Bennett, D. M. Key, J. A. Lindsey, Virgil Howie, J. P. Bennett, L. A. Magruder, W. H. Till.

Alternates: P. H. Hale, M. S. Enochs.

Rev. B. A. Williams was recommended for admission on trial into the traveling connection.

The Conference renewed the license of its local preachers, and made some recommendations to the Annual Conference for orders.

Sermons were preached by Revs. M. A. Massey, Jno. D. Ellis, J. C. Chambers, I. W. Cooper, W. H. Lewis.

In 1919 the Jackson District Conference will meet at Pelahatchie, by which time we hope for a righteous peace, and that Kaiser Bill will have learned humanity's lesson.

"Wallop him with peas and beans,
Paste him with potatoes,
Hammer him with cabbages,
And soak him with tomatoes."

The Jackson District Conference was composed of circuit automobile riders, station pedestrian preachers, Doctors of divinity, college professors, high school teachers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, et alii, and a more splendid assemblage would be difficult to find.

The reports by pastors and consecrated laymen were splendid, and notwithstanding Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, Turkey, the Devil & Co., we expect a prosperous year.

JNO. D. ELLIS,
Secretary.

LISTEN TO THIS! SAYS CORNS LIFT RIGHT OUT NOW

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone, which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn, the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts out with the fingers.

It is a sticky ether compound which dries the moment it is applied and simply shrivels the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

On April 9, I had the pleasure of being with Rev. W. W. Nelson, on the Scotland charge. We held a service at New Hope and then the clouds wallowed all over the face of the earth and we had to miss the other appointments. I hope it may be my good pleasure to visit this work at another time.

April 10 was spent on the work of Brother Murray, at Bayou Pierre. At Unionville we organized two Wesley Bible Classes with 33 members, a Cradle Roll and a prayer meeting. At Pleasant Valley we organized one Bible class. At Sweetwater we have the promise of a Cradle Roll.

This was a most profitable visit to us. The people were most kind, indeed, and Brother Murray was most kind and thoughtful. From the outlook, there is a great future for this charge.

Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday were spent at the Newton District Conference. Brother Linfield gave us a good hearing and we felt that the Sunday school work was being stressed. Some valuable papers were read by the brethren and most helpful and interesting sermons were preached.

Wednesday afternoon was given over mostly to the discussion of things relative to the war. The conference adopted the strongest resolutions endorsing the war and the Government I have heard of up to this time. Brother Linfield led off with a discussion that was even stronger than the resolutions. The Newton District is right at the front when it comes to patriotism, and, thank God, from the reports of the preachers they are going to give a better account along many other lines, too.

The Meridian District Conference was delightful, indeed. The brethren were most kind. The fellowship was delightful. Dr. Chapman makes a pleasant host, indeed. The homecoming of Bishop Du Bose was a tender occasion. His messages were both inspiring and helpful.

Rev. H. B. Watkins says tbat we need no longer be glad that Central is about to get ready to lay the foundation—they have laid it and are on their way to the top.

I ask for a continued interest in your prayers. To save the children we must pray our way through.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE,

Wiggins, Miss., June 5-7.

The Mississippi Conference Epworth League met here last week and spent two busy days with us. While not all of those on the program came, others were present who filled in most acceptably. The attendance was almost as large as last year at Columbus. Considering that so many of our young men of the League are in the army or navy, we felt that we had a very good attendance.

The first feature of the Conference was the "Get-Acquainted Social," the night of June 5. On account of a failure in railway connections, the League President, Brother W. D. Hawkins, and a good many Leaguers from various places were delayed in reaching here until 9:30 p. m. Not at all daunted by the lateness of the hour, the Social was held in the Methodist Church and a delightful hour was spent. Fruit punch was served by the Wiggins League and an effort was made to let all comers know they were heartily welcome.

Unfortunately, Rev. John R. Jones, presiding elder of the Seashore District, was delayed in reaching the Conference until 3:30 a. m., Thursday. In his absence, the pastor of Wiggins Church conducted the communion service at 6 a. m. Nearly fifty persons partook of the sacred emblems and we were conscious of the presence of the Holy One.

President W. D. Hawkins, in a very fitting manner, opened the business sessions of the Conference at 9 a. m. Thursday, and from then until the close, Friday night, the time was filled with discussions and addresses that were helpful, instructive, and uplifting. Devotional services were led by Rev. John R. Jones, on Thursday. Dr. W. H. LaPrade, of Biloxi, gave two most helpful addresses on the Gospel of St. John.

Rev. S. A. Neblett, of Cuba, delighted us all by his presence, addresses, and help given in many ways. The impression he made will be deep and lasting. Miss Phala Hawkins gave a most convincing demonstration of Junior League work and left everybody hungry for more. We all wish she could have stayed longer. Rev. I. W. Cooper was also present and gave a stirring address on "Opportunity."

The consecration service Friday morning was led by Brother Hawkins. It was the crowning service of the entire Conference for deep spiritual influence. We were made to see clearly what it means to surrender wholly to the Lord, and every person there responded to the appeal by consecrating himself to the service of God to go where He might lead. Some five or six declared for the foreign field and some for home mission and deaconess work. Others, still, were undecided and will wait for the leading of the Spirit. Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, of Tupelo, urged the need of definite training and gave an interesting description of Scarritt Bible and Training School.

The Conference closed with a touching good-bye service and all felt, with deep emphasis, the meaning of "Blest be the tie that binds." Much more could be said, but that will be left for a more gifted pen. Our pastors are losers in a large degree who were not present. Let me express the hope that next year at Laurel many of our preachers will be on hand to enjoy the messages and to help the work along.

THE MEETING OF ONE THOUSAND LAYMEN.

A notable meeting of one thousand laymen of the Methodisms of the United States and Canada will be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., June 26-30, to consider plans for celebrating properly the great Centenary of Missions.

A wonderful program has been arranged, covering prayer services, surveys of the home and foreign fields, addresses, illustrated lectures, and recreational features. Some of the themes to be discussed are: "One Hundred Wonderful Years (In Retrospect)," "One Hundred Wonderful Years (in Prospect)," "Africa," "Christian Stewardship," "Eastern Asia," "Latin America," "The Mass Movement in India," and other questions of thrilling interest relating to the Missionary Centenary. Men in prospect to occupy the platorm are: Dr. John R. Mott, Mr. Fred B. Fisher, President S. D. Chown, Dr. Frank Mason North, Bishops Hendrix, Lambuth, Candler, Atkins, Denny, Warne, Oldham, Moore and McMurray, Dr. W. B. Beauchamp, Dr. C. L. G. Bates, Dr. W. G. Cram, Dr. W. E. Doughty, and others just as prominent in missionary work. These are leaders in Methodism's great army of advance. One of the rare features of the meeting will be the illustrated lectures by Dr. S. Earl Taylor. Thus it may be seen that one may expect at that meeting to receive the best messages which the best Methodist mind and heart of the United States and Canada are qualified to deliver.

It should not be forgotten that this meeting will be held at a place where nature will be wearing her most attractive smile, where high mountains, placid lake, musical streams, and mountain breezes will join with the almost unparalleled platform attractions in making the occasion one to live in memory.

"Who Will Win This Battle?"

Your kidneys are the filters of the body. If they become inactivo and fail to climinate the waste matter, they aro apt to throw the whole mechanism of the body out of order, thus toxic poisons can accumulate in the system and be as deadly as snake venom.

Besides causing the minor ailments of rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago and backache, neglect of the kidneys is apt to develop into more serious diseases, such as diabetes or stone in the bladder.

Rid the body of toxic poisons—clean the bladder and kidneys and cure the twinges of rheumatism with Anuric and you win the battle of life.

Anuric was first discovered by Dr. Pierce, and has benefited thousands of sufferers as well as appeased and climinated the ravages of the more serious kidney diseases. Now procurable at any good drug store, or send Dr. V. M. Pierco, Buffalo, N. Y., 10 cents for trial package.

HARTFORD, ALA.—"When I commenced the treatment of Anuric I was in bad shape. My back ached all the time and oh! how my back would ache at night until I would have to get up. I could never sleep all night. But since I have taken the Anuric Tablets my backache is all gone and I can lie down and sleep good and sound all night. Oh! how much better I do feel—no one knows but myself. My advice to all sufferers of kidney troubles is to give Anuric a trial and they will find relief from their trouble."—MRS. B. G. COKER.

BISHOP CANNON INTERVIEWS THE PRESIDENT.

Bishop Cannon, the Chairman of the National Legislative Committee, had an interview with President Wilson the early part of this week. In this interview, Bishop Cannon emphasized:

(1) The need for equal protection for our soldiers and sailors in France from intemperance and vice that they now enjoy in America.

(2) The desirability of the prohibition of foodstuffs in the maufacture of intoxicants.

(3) The appeal of our constituency for the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all kinds of intoxicating liquors during the period of war and demobilization thereafter.

Shortly following this interview with Bishop Cannon, the President had an interview with Senator Morris Sheppard on the same subject, the recognized leader of the prohibition forces in the United States Senate. Following these interviews and a correspondence with Senator Sheppard, Mr. Hoover, reflecting the views of the President, made a public statement opposing the prohibition of the use of grain and fruits in the making of beer and wine as long as the sale of distilled spirits is permitted, the reason given being that such action would force the nation to a whiskey basis. Mr. Hoover further declared, still reflecting the views of the President, that if the American people want prohibition, they should prohibit by legislation to that end.

The position of the administration has thus been clearly and positively set forth. The responsibility for the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war is now laid by the administration upon Congress, the legislative body of the nation. Now is the time to appeal directly to your Senators and also to your Congressmen for prompt action on this great question. Whatever your people may already have done, urge them to write and wire immediately to their Senators and Representatives, insisting upon the passage of a complete war prohibition measure. If our constituents do their part, victory is in sight.

Take the Old Standard GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC. You know what you are taking, as the formula is printed on every label, showing it is Quinine and Iron in a tasteless form. The Quinine drives out malaria, the Iron builds up the system. 60 cents.

REV. J. H. BELL RESIGNS.

Dear Mr. Editor: Rev. J. H. Bell, who was accepted for war work by the Y. M. C. A. and assigned to Camp Shelby, has found that he cannot take up the work as he had expected and wished to do. Brother Bell went to the Blue Ridge Y. M. C. A. school, and made other rather expensive preparations for the work, but after getting on the ground he found the work of such a character that his physical strength would not permit him to undertake it, and last week he resigned his place. This puts him back as one of our regular Conference evangelists. Let the brethren open the way for him in their revivals this summer. He has held some great revivals in our Conference, he understands the revival work, and will be a blessing to the Church.

JACKSON DISTRICT PASTORS, ATTENTION!

Dear Brethren: The season is on in which most of the revivals are held. I hope that you will plan for, pray for, and expect a revival in every church. Hold revivals at churches and schoolhouses. We need to be much in prayer. Observe the quarterly fasts. God has not forgotten to be gracious. We are laborers together with God.

DEATH OF A GOOD WOMAN.

Our hearts were made sad by the death of Miss Beulah Kent, which occurred on the 8th inst. at the Perkins House, DeQuincy, La. She was a sister of J. B. Kent, who was once a member of our Conference; also of Mrs. F. N. Sweeney and Mrs. J. S. Rutledge, wives of Methodist preachers. She was a sweet Christian girl and took delight in visiting the parsonage home. We miss her.

J. S. RUTLEDGE.

MARRIED.

On June 8, 1918, at the residence of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. T. H. G. Cook, in Cochrane, Ala., by Rev. A. H. Williams, pastor of the Methodist Church at that place, Lieutenant BENJAMIN T. SANDERS of the United States Army and of Nacogdoches, Texas, and Miss MARGUERITE E. COOK, of Cochrane, Alabama.

Ugh! Calomel Makes You Deathly Sick

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it doesn't straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.

ATTENTION.

St. Mark's Hall is greatly in need of children's clothing for its supply department. Look through your children's clothes and see if there are not some garments which can be discarded, and send at once to St. Mark's Hall, 908 Esplanade Avenue, New Orleans, La. This is an urgent call, so please give it prompt attention.

Miss Gibson also writes that they are in need of supplies of all kinds, but especially clothing. There are enough interested women in the Methodist Church in Louisiana to supply all these needs, so let us get busy right now and not wait for the other person to do what we know is our duty.

While our represntatives are trying to continue their work during these hot, sultry days, let us do our part in holding up their hands and putting cheer into their hearts. They are bearing the brunt of the burdens; may we hasten to lighten their load by promptly and generously complying with their request.

ITEMS FROM ST. MARK'S HALL.

The month of May was one of unusual interest, being spent in preparation for the closing of winter activities, and in making plans for summer work. Vacation school will begin in July and volunteer helpers are needed.

After an absence of two months Miss Gibson, Head Resident, reported for duty May 17. In the midst of arduous duties for the Centenary she attended a number of interesting conferences at which she represented the Gulf Coast work. Among these were the meeting of the One Hundred at Memphis, the Board of Missions, Nashville, the Woman's Missionary Council, Knoxville, and the General Conference at Atlanta. She visited six Wesley Houses, and brings back with her new enthusiasm for the work at St. Mark's Hall.

On May 23 a surprise reception was given Miss Gibson by her Italian friends. It was a happy occasion for all present.

Clinic.

The total attendance is higher this year than last. Owing to there being a larger number of clinics, the crowd is more evenly distributed. The number of sick children has been unusually large. Gifts of vegetables, fruit and flowers have been brought by grateful patients.

Closing of Sewing School and Cooking Classes.

Sixty-five persons, including half a dozen mothers, gathered for the closing exercises of our sewing and cooking classes. The exhibit was interesting to visitors and pupils. Songs and stories and a beautiful patriotic selection by the three graduates composed the program. "Hoover's Helpers," the white-capped cooking class girls, were then introduced, after which they served lemonade and oatmeal cakes.

Boy Scouts.

Troop 3, forty-six in number, did splendid war service in the Third Liberty Loan Drive. They sold 194 bonds, totaling $28,700. The troop also took part in an athletic contest at Spanish Fort and in the Red Cross Drive.

Boys' Club.

The older boys, from 12 to 16 years of age, known as the Boys' Trust Club, are very loyal to their organization. They spend their evenings in athletics, indoor games and singing patriotic songs.

The chair-caning class is popular and self-supporting. The boys would appreciate games or books which your boys have discarded. Have you any? —St. Mark's Bulletin.

UNIVERSAL POLYGAMY TO REPEOPLE WORLD.

Polygamy for all the world as a result of the tremendous slaughter of the men of this generation, is the ambition of the Mormon Church to-day, according to Dr. E. L. Mills, of the Joint Centenary Committee. Reports from their semi-annual conference, Dr. Mills thinks, suggest that they are only waiting for the end of the war to start out on a world campaign designed to put polygamy on the map everywhere.

An exhortation by Joseph F. Smith, in his presidential address before the conference, that all widowers who are not too old should feel it their duty to marry again, is considered by Dr. Mills as significant.

"Just as soon as the war is over," said Dr. Mills, "they are going to make a tremendous drive to spread polygamy all over Europe, because they realize, of course, that the tremendous surplus of women over men in all the belligerent countries will offer such an opportunity for their propaganda as they have never had before."

"It is easy to find evidences of preparation on their part for a world campaign on a new scale," Dr. Mills continued. "For the first time in their history, they are branching out as a world religion. Heretofore they have built temples only in Utah. This year they will finish two new and elaborate temples—one in the Hawaiian Islands and one in Alberta, Canada.

"Another evidence that the Mormons are preparing for a world campaign on a vastly larger scale than ever before attempted is to be found in the activity of their press bureau, which is sending out items designed to break down prejudice against Mormonism and to familiarize people with the idea of polygamy."—Centenary Bulletin.

FRUITS OF THE NORMAL DEPARTMENT, SALTILLO, MEXICO.

Miss Lelia Roberts writes: "A young man who married one of our graduates is mayor of Saltillo, another is an alderman, and another is General Secretary of Education in this State. One of our graduates was appointed by the Governor as a member of the commission that reformed the educational laws in this State. Ten teachers, trained either in our Normal Department or our Church, are employed in the public schools of this city, and eight are teaching in this Institution, making eighteen in Saltillo alone. In eight States of the Republic they are holding good positions as instructors of young people."

PRAYER MEETINGS, ANCIENT AND MODERN.

To show the difference between the prayer meetings of to-day and those of the past, the Northwestern Christian Advocate quotes two descriptions. The first is by Baillie, an English writer, who set down the following report of an assembly of divines in 1643:

"We spent from nine in the morning until five in the afternoon graciously. After Dr. Twisse had begun with a brief prayer, Mr. Marshall prayed large for two hours, most divinely confessing the sins of the assembly in a wonderfully prudent and pathetic way. After that, Mr. Arrowsmith preached an hour and Mr. Seaman prayed near two hours; then a psalm. Mr. Henderson then brought them to a sweet conference concerning faults to be remedied and the need of preaching against all sects, especially Anabaptists and Antinomians. Dr. Twisse closed with a short prayer and blessing."

The following is the description of a present-day prayer meeting:

"Brother A——, the pastor, opened the prayer service (the mid-week meeting, he called it) with two or three songs, after which he prayed for three minutes, then came the Scripture lesson (five verses), upon which he commented for seven minutes. After a few songs he called for voluntary prayers. After another song he called for sentence prayers; and then, seing that the audience was becoming weary, he announced: 'We will now change the order of the service and throw the meeting open for testimony. Let the testimonies be short and crisp and to the point.' A few responded with sentence testimonies. After that there was one more song, and the meeting was dismissed. Time, forty-seven minutes."—The Youth's Companion.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages, and for grown-ups. —Adv.

THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used anually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best.

The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs.

Every utensil and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills.

The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtue.

ATHENS COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

By a Student.

Commencement began in reality at Athens College, Saturday afternoon, May 19, when the 4 o'clock train came in from Birmingham, bringing the mothers and fathers of several seniors. According to the program, it began on Sunday morning, when the baccalaureate sermon was delivered by Dr. P. B. Wells, of Birmingham. His subject was "Christ and the World War." Sunday evening the service was in charge of the Y. W. C. A. A very interesting review of the year's work was given by the president, Miss Julia Whitman. This was followed by reports from the Finance, Social Service and Missionary committees, each chairman showing progress in her department.

The recital Monday morning, under the direction of the Music Department, was an unusually enjoyable one. The intense interest manifested by the college girls in every number was a compliment to the good work done by the students of voice, piano and violin. The recital was followed by the Art and Home Economics exhibits. One of the most interesting features of the Domestic Art exhibit was the Red Cross work. The girls have done an unusual amount of this work in addition to their regular courses.

Monday evening the most artistic program of the entire year was presented in the form of a pantomime of Longfellow's beautiful poem, "Hiawatha." The entire production was a harmonizing of beautiful costumes, appropriate music, scenic effects, individual effort and dramatic action.

The graduating class from the academy was addressed Tuesday morning by Hon. Frank Dominick, of Birmingham. He spoke on "The Things That Are Most Worth While in Life." The college graduating class was very fortunate in being addressed Tuesday evening by Dr. H. M. Dobbs, of Dallas, Tex. His subject was "Leadership in the World Crisis." He showed forcefully the requirements for leaders in this time of struggle and the place that we as college women are expected to fill.

FROM REV. A. A. BERNARD.

Dear Dr. Meek: Within the last two weeks things have been happening in our quarters. We went right out of a quarterly conference into our District Conference. That was a quarterly conference that I appreciated. We had good reports—ran up our financial standing and found ourselves somewhat in arrears. Our "Beloved" braced up, looked wise and said something. Spell that word, something, with a capital letter. He proceeded to tell us of various and sundry places that were paid-up or "over the top." Then the president of my Board braced up, looked wise and did something, and by the close of the first day of the District Conference, Ponchatoula was paid up and a little over the top.

All this is leading up to what I want to say. We had a great District Conference. Vaughan, Joyner, and Breithaupt were there. Vaughan showed us his visions, and some day some of us are going to see those visions materialized in brick and stone on the Ruston hills, monuments of our faith inspired by his leadership—monuments no less in number and grandeur than those George Muller coaxed from the heart and hand of God.

Joyner came to us with his message of missions, and gave it to us, all aglow, fresh from off the heart's sacred altar. We know what he stands for, and shall never forget how he stood for God and the Church and us in turbulent Mexico. He knows what it means to be led before rulers; he knows what Christ meant when he said, "For it shall be given you in that hour what ye shall speak." He knows what absolute self-abnegation and implicit importunity mean as the martyr's hour draws nigh—but God delivered him. His message is no play to the crowd—it is born of the love of God.

Brelthaupt was there. We hallooed "muchly" before he came about making him hie it out into the dusty rural sections where such "thunder" is not wont to be made, but when he came we forgot all about this, for some reason, and devoted our attention to the work of the greatest arm of the Church. Maybe some of us were not in the dugout when the thing burst, but Booth certainly made a hit when he flung a grenade to the effect that so many Sunday school workers were wont to speak of the Sunday school as the biggest thing in the Kingdom, the Church to the contrary notwithsanding. It was an easy thing for him to prove his conclusion, that such views, no doubt, could be held as the greatest reason why so many young men and women have no obligated inclination toward the Church and her claim; holding that, since they have qualified in the finals of the greatest thing in the Kingdom, the Church need make no claim on their time.

I have just heard one such worker say that there is only one organization in the world that looks after the interests of the souls of men, and that is the Sunday school. Mirablle dictu! Booth made the accusation, and within a week the worker confirmed it. I am glad to see the stand Breithaupt takes—he knows what the Church is, and also he knows what the Sunday school is. With him, there is no unconscious exaggeration for the sake of emphasis.

It seems to me that we should never forget the relation of the Church to these Institutions. The relation that Christ bears to the soul, as vine and branches, is the same that the Church bears to the Sunday school, League, and Y. M. C. A.—that of vine and branches: sever the vine and all is dead.

You should have heard McCain! He had things to say about the spiritual state of the Church. The Church will read those resolutions regarding dancing, card-playing, lotteries, and picture shows. Just now the picture shows are an enigma as regards their trend concerning religious matters.

And now for a final word: I got the book you sent me—Harris' "Bishop Wilson." What a man! What a servant! What a preacher! I read it at one sitting in one afternoon, with a little intermission. If there is anything more to be had on the life and work of this servant of God, and undoubtedly there is, we ought to have it as early as practicable.

From it I drew an inspiration that I have seldom or never received heretofore. The Bishop's wisdom and prophecy have far outstripped that of the various self-constituted leaders of our Zion. His going out, like the ebbing tide, holds us in the grandeur of its passing.

Doctor, we shall greatly miss your weekly visits. We have known where to find you on every great issue. We want you to know how strong our attachment for you has become. We pray that he who succeeds you may be as faithful and as worthy as you have been. A. A. BERNARD.

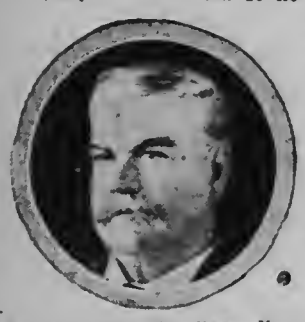
THE WORST ATHEISM.

"If I live as if there were no God—no God to protect, no God to console, no God to punish—what am I but the fool that said in his heart, 'There is no God?' What is the atheism of the lips compared with the atheism of the life?"—A. R. Wells.

These City Physicians Explain Why They Prescribe Nuxated Iron

To Make Healthier Women and Stronger, Sturdier Men

NOW BEING USED BY OVER THREE MILLION PEOPLE ANNUALLY



By enriching the blood and creating thousands of new red blood cells, it often quickly transforms the flabby flesh, toneless tissues, and pallid cheeks of weak, anaemic men and women into a glow of health. Increases the strength of delicate, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time in many instances.

IT is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually in this country alone are taking Nuxated Iron. Such astonishing results have been reported from its use both by doctors and laymen, that a number of physicians in various parts of the country have been asked to explain why they prescribe it so extensively, and why it apparently produces so much better results than were obtained from the old forms of inorganic iron.

Extracts from some of the letters received are given below.

Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York Physician and Medical Author, says: "There can be no vigorous iron men without iron. Pallor means anaemia.

"Anaemia means iron deficiency. The skin of anaemic men and women is pale; the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone, the brain fags and the memory fails and they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. When the iron goes from the blood of women the roses go from their cheeks.

Dr. Ferdinand King, New York Physician and Medical Author.

"In the most common foods of America, the starches, sugars, table syrups, candies, polished rice, white bread, soda crackers, biscuits, macaroni, spaghetti, tapioca, sago, farina, degerminated corn-meal, no longer is iron to be found. Refining processes have removed the iron of Mother Earth from these impoverished foods, and silly methods of home cookery, by throwing down the waste-pipe the water in which our vegetables are cooked, is responsible for another grave iron loss.

"Therefore you should supply the iron deficiency in your food by using some form of organic iron, just as you would use salt when your food has not enough salt."

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago and former House Surgeon, Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, in commenting on Nuxated Iron, says: "It has been my particular duty during the past six years to assist in keeping Chicago's five thousand blue-coats in good health and perfect fighting trim so that they would be physically equpped to withstand all manner of storms and the ravages of nature's elements.

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago and former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital Chicago

"Recently I was prompted through an endorsement of Nuxated Iron by Dr. Schuyler C. Jaques, formerly Visiting Surgeon of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, New York, to give it a trial. This remedy has proven through my own tests of it to excel any preparation I have ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves, strengthening the muscles and correcting digestive disorders."

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), N. Y., and the Westchester County Hospital, said: "I have strongly emphasized the great necessity of physicians making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on year after year suffering from physical weakness and a highly nervous condition due to lack of sufficient iron in their red blood corpuscles, without ever realizing the real and true cause of their trouble. Without iron in your blood your food merely passes through the body, somewhat like corn through a mill with rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind.

"But in my opinion you can't make strong, vigorous, successful, sturdy iron men by feeding them on metallic iron. The old forms of metallic iron must go through a digestive process to transform them into organic iron—Nuxated Iron—before they are ready to be taken up and assimilated by the human system.

"Notwithstanding all that has been said and written on this subject by well-known physicians, thousands of people still insist in dosing themselves with metallic iron simply, I suppose, because it costs a few cents less. I strongly advise readers in all cases, to get a physician's prescription for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—or if you don't want to go to this trouble then purchase only Nuxated Iron in its original packages and see that this particular name (Nuxated Iron) appears on the package. If you have taken preparations such as Nux and Iron and other similar Iron products and failed to get results, remember that such products are an entirely different thing from Nuxated Iron."

Dr. Schuyler C. Jaques Formerly Visiting Surgeon, St. Elizabeth's Hospital, New York.

Dr. Schuyler C. Jaques, formerly Visiting Surgeon of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, of New York City, said: "I have never before given out any medical information or advice for publication, as I ordinarily do not believe in it. But in the case of Nuxated Iron I feel I would be remiss in my duty not to mention it. I have taken it myself and given it to my patients with most surprising and satisfactory results. And those who wish quickly to increase their strength, power and endurance will find it a most remarkable and wonderfully effective remedy."

Dr. T. Alphonsus Wallace, a physician of many years' experience in this country and abroad, says: "I do not make a practice of recommending advertised medicinal products, but I have found Nuxated Iron so potent in nervous, run-down conditions, that I believe all should know of it. The men and women of today need more iron in their blood than was the case twenty or thirty years ago. This because of the denaturalized diet which now is served daily in thousands of homes and also because of the demand for greater resistance necessary to offset the greater number of health hazards, to be met at every turn."

If people would only take Nuxated Iron when they feel weak or run-down, instead of losing themselves with habit forming tonics, bitters, stimulants and alcoholic beverages, there would be fewer pale, sickly, nervous people, thousands of whom are in reality in need of iron to enrich the blood corpuscles and get them to the tissues, to ward off the millions of disease germs that are almost continually around us. It is surprising how many people suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it.

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the while have most surprisingly increased their strength and endurance simply by taking iron in the proper form. And this, after they had in some cases been going on for months without getting benefit from anything. Many an athlete and prize-fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance which comes from having plenty of iron in the blood; while many another has gone down in inglorious defeat simply for lack of iron.

Manufacturers Note: Nuxated Iron, which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians, is not a secret remedy but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser, or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists and general stores.

THE RIGHT OF WAY

MISSIONARY CENTENARY

And now we are banded together in aggressive unity for a new and extraordinary advance in our world business. There is really no good chance for debate about the timeliness of our Centenary Movement. We are simply listening to the challenge flung to the Church by the Lord of Hosts, listening to the agonized plea from the life of an almost breathless and terribly smitten world. We must answer. The vision has come. If we are disobedient to it, we cannot as Methodists live in good conscience before God again. When faith makes a great venture, the daring itself is proof of spiritual timeliness. There is the most perfect harmony between our Centenary plan, the needs of the world, and the will of God. They are plans which are involved in our patriotism for God's kingdom.—Dr. Wallace McMullen, Fraternal Messenger from the M. E. Church to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South.

That was a thrilling and historic hour when the General Conference gave its unanimous endorsement to the Missionary Centenary. This action represents the high-water mark of missionary enthusiasm and calls the Church to its most daring venture of faith and consecration. The Conference had previously given three evenings to programs beginning with an illustrated lecture by Dr. S. Earl Taylor, Secretary of the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, which set forth the needs of the world and the responsibility of Methodism in a most striking and convincing way.

The Conference had also set apart an hour for special prayer to precede the consideration of the Centenary. When this hour arrived, 10 o'clock, May 13, a hush fell upon the great body. It was most fitting that Bishop W. R. Lambuth should be in the chair. He called on Rev. W. W. Pinson to lead the devotions, and a number of missionaries to state in a sentence the greatest needs of their fields. It was significant that their plea was for prayer and spiritual power rather than for material things. There was evident a deep sense of the divine presence brooding over the body and fusing all minds and hearts into a unity of purpose and desire.

The report of the Committee on Missions concerning the Centenary was then read by Dr. A. F. Watkins. It set forth in eloquent terms the call of a needy and stricken world, the sole hope of the world in the Gospel, and the duty, opportunity and danger of the Church in this great crisis. It was a ringing call to the Church and should be read and heeded by our entire membership. It opens with a picture of the frightful conditions that have "drenched the world in blood," and adds:

> "In the midst of this wreck and despair is the Church of God to pursue the even tenor of its way, with no heroism to match that of the soldier boys who have buckled on the sword and gone forth to give their lives in order that the world may be free? Is the Church to say that the government is doing all that America needs to do for the broken and despoiled and despairing peoples of Europe and the rest of the world? Does our Church have no distinctive work to do for them?"

Referring to the proposal to raise $35,000,000, including the regular income of approximately $10,000,000, in the next five years for the seven items of Home Missions, Conference Missions, Church Extension, Foreign Missions, Woman's Work (home and foreign), and work made necessary by the war among soldiers in camp and field and hospital and for the stricken lands after the war, this report says:

> "It is a gigantic task. It is big enough and comprehensive enough to arouse the admiration and enthusiasm of the biggest and the least man among us. The One Hundred on a World Program were of the opinion that it could be accomplished by much prayer and much preaching on stewardship. They have, therefore, made Intercession the first item of their program, Stewardship the second item, and the raising of the great Centenary fund the third item. They believe that such a program will cause the fires of a holy Christian enthusiasm to break forth into a bright flame in our own land and will be the cure for the sordid materialism naturally following a great war."

It was moved by Dr. T. E. Sharpe that "in order to give all possible emphasis to this important matter, probably the most important that will be before us, we adopt it by a standing vote, and make it unanimous, that we may realize that we have indeed voted this great program." This was carried, and when the vote was called for the entire body rose as one man. It was a thrilling scene. Still standing, the Conference broke into song and sealed their comradeship in the high venture by a universal handshaking.

THE hour has struck for mighty things. The time is at hand when the Church must step forth in power and with a holy enthusiasm. We appeal to all our people, small and great, to rally to this Centenary Movement and demonstrate that the Church of God has been established for the healing of the nations. The task is great, but our great Leader declared that all things are possible with God. We therefore recommend:

1. That the World Program of the Committee of One Hundred be adopted by this General Conference as the program for the whole Church, and we hereby commit into the hands of the Centenary Commission the task of carrying through that program.

2. We request that each Annual Conference, in lieu of the usual Missionary and Church Extension Anniversaries, set aside one day of its next session to the Centenary Movement, and that, beginning at 10 o'clock on said day and continuing throughout the afternoon and evening, the Conference session be devoted to promoting this program.

Signed: PERRY S. RADER,
Chairman.
R. F. BURDEN,
Secretary.

Thus the fourth and highest body that has voted on the Centenary Program voted unanimously. It is a most significant fact that there has never yet been a negative vote on the question. Great questions have been proposed and discussed, unusual tasks have been set forth, unusual ventures of large dimensions set on foot, but always with an unanimous vote. God's Spirit has evidently moved upon all hearts. His call to larger things has been heard by all, and the Church at last faces a task and an opportunity big enough and compelling enough to commend her united efforts. Our hope of success is in the continuance of this unbroken unity of spirit, of purpose, and of effort. That we are "all of one accord" is the prophecy of a new Pentecost of power.

It will be noted that the program outlined in the Memphis meeting is made by act of the General Conference the program of the Church, and that the carrying out of this program is put in the hands of the Centenary Commission. This program includes three distinct features put in the order of their importance, viz.:

1. The cultivation of the spiritual resources of the Church, with special emphasis on prayer.
2. The promotion of the recognition and practice of stewardship of life and substance.
3. A definite campaign to raise in the next five years $25,000,000 in addition to the regular income of ten millions.

A special Committee on Conference to consider the feasibility of correlating the campaigns for missions, education, and Superannuate Endowment Fund, presented the following report, which was adopted:

> "That we find that there is no inherent conflict in interest between these respective calls; that it is not practicable to place the campaigns under the direction of one board or committee; that the Centenary movement is not intended to interfere with the normal work and movement of the Church in other fields.
> "But that, in the interest of efficiency, and in order that there may be carried on but one popular campaign in the Church at the same time, and without prejudice to existing campaigns, we recommend that the right of way be given to the Centenary Movement during the first two years and to the educational campaign during the second two years of the quadrennium, and that during these two periods, as far as possible, the full power of the Church be delivered in these respective campaigns.
> "That, as the campaigns for the two universities and for the Superannuate Endowment Fund are now, in a sense, general campaigns, they may be carried on throughout the quadrennium without embarrassing other campaigns or being embarrassed by them."

This was regarded as a most happy arrangement to avoid confusion and overlapping of appeals and to guarantee the best results for all interests concerned. Indeed, it was pronounced "as perfect a plan as could be put into the English language" by one in high authority. While this limits the active campaign of the Centenary to the first two years of the quadrennium, it gives to this cause a clear field for those two years, so far as any extraordinary or general campaign is concerned. It will require a prompt, persistent and united effort to do so great a thing in two years. Let all the Church rise and say, "this one thing we do," and let all of us keep the lines clear and hold this great goal in view without complication and without confusion, according to this action, and the thing can be done. Then the Church will have found her strength and mobilized her forces for other great things.

This is the real call to the Church, to discover herself, and to get a true estimate of her resources. She is like a sleeping giant, with a measureless strength unused and unrealized. God calls as by his ancient prophet: "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion, shake thyself from the dust. Arise, sit on thy thront, O Jerusalem, loose thyself from the bonds of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion."

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 65—No. 26. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3253.

REV. H. T. CARLEY, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1918. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

AN OPEN LETTER

To the Preachers and People of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences.

My Dear Brethren: In the providence of God, I sincerely trust, it was deemed proper by those to whom was committed the appointment of the Bishops to their fields of labor that I should have the charge and oversight of your Conferences. In this capacity I greet you in the name of our Lord and Master, and assure you that I shall labor among you as brethren with a single purpose, and I know I shall be happy in and blessed by your fellowship. Unto this end I pray daily and shall continue to pray.

I trust you will not take it amiss for me to use this public method of addressing you, and calling your minds to a few matters which should engage our thoughts and our efforts. It is natural that tragic conditions should intensify our attention and put our minds in abnormal states, and the war that wages in the world furnishes an unprecedented example of such a condition. Our hearts are bleeding and all our deepest emotions are stirred. In our duty to our country in this hour it is our sacred privilege and holy task to demonstrate a Christian type of patriotic devotion and fidelity, and this we will do with all our hearts. However, let us not forget that our duty to God has not been increased by these inexpressible strains that have come upon us. They are mistaken who declare that the world needs Christ and salvation more today than ever before, and intimate that the end of the war will bring circumstances that will put new values in our holy religion. Let us never forget that the need of the Savior and His salvation does not arise out of the relation of nations to nations, or of men to men, but solely out of the sinful attitude of men to God. Men have sinned. This is the most dreadful indictment that can be brought against the human race. They have rebelled against God, and this conflict is the only conflict of eternal destiny, and out of it the need of salvation arises, and to establish peace between God and the sinner is the solitary reason of the incarnate Christ and His cross. No circumstances that may arise between men and men can modify this issue, and this truth should be firmly fixed in the minds of all who profess the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and especially in the minds of all who have been called to preach His gospel. The battle of the eternities has never ceased for one single moment since Adam plunged the race into sin, and so the task of the Church is the unbroken task of beseeching sinners to be reconciled unto God. This is its one supreme work. All other tasks fall naturally into their place when God and men are at peace, and no task and no part of life are right unless they all rest on the conscious peace of God in the human heart. These are the eternal verities, and I may as well confess to you now that from them I shall not be swerved by any philosophies or tragedies or programs of life. To get men right with God is the heart of our ministry.

I am also convinced that this fundamental truth is not as definitely fixed in the minds of the professed followers of the Master as it should be. We have suffered a fearful distraction of mind, faith, and labors. In many instances we have put second things in the first place and magnified incidents at the expense of essentials. This must prove fatal, and we may discover when it is too late that all our earthly distresses have their taproot in this fatal error. Now that all the philosophies of men, all the political doctrines of men, all the schemes of men, and all the wanderings of theological adventurers are shaken and uncertain, it becomes us who know in our souls the eternal certitudes of salvation and who rest upon a foundation that can not be moved, to cry aloud and proclaim salvation through Jesus Christ as we have not done before. It is no time for speculations. The world is going to pieces and His gospel is the only thing that will stand the shock without a tremble, and even the down-fall of the universe will not disturb the faith of the saints. I beseech you, brethren, that you devote yourselves wholly to the Lord Jesus Christ and that you speak no word of doubt about salvation in the ears of dying men. There are many things we do not know, but one thing we must know if we preach the gospel, and that is that God for Christ's sake has forgiven our sins and made us sons and daughters unto God Almighty, and let us tell these things to the people.

Many various projects for the promotion of religion and religious activities have been invented by busy men, some sincere, but, I fear, some not sincere, and they would turn our attention to their schemes. Trained leadership, large material resources, acquisition of human wisdom, new forms of worship, larger equipments, and many other like things are proposed as the vital needs of the Church for its work and success. Let us not be carried away by these cunningly devised schemes of men. The Holy Ghost is the solitary administrator in the Church of God, and no human invention can take the place of holiness of heart and life among the people of God. I do not undervalue the incidental things, neither do I overvalue them. They have their worth as incidental matters, and as such deserve just appreciation, but an unholy Church, a Church that is not established in a personal and experimental knowledge of God's saving grace, has no power and can have no power. There are no grounds to believe that an unconverted Church has any commission to preach the gospel at home or abroad.

Here is the heart of our weakness. I am convinced after studious observation and enquiry that likely one-half of our people have never been converted or have fallen into spiritual indifference; and with sorrow I admit that it is possible for men to be in the pulpit who know far too little about union with Christ and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. Do not charge me with criticism in saying these things. I am not criticising, but I am warning and exhorting. We take people in the Church in the most careless way and leave them to drift along as best they may in the way to heaven, and do not the wolves devour many of them? Have we not become wickedly liberal in our definitions of conversion? Do we not entertain very loose notions about sin and deliverance from it? Are not nine out of ten of our homes prayerless homes? What shall we do? Shall these abide and we as preachers be able to live, yea, even be happy? Shall we reduce church membership to the basis of membership in a religious club for decent associations and the promotion of beneficent deeds? Shall we be satisfied when we get a name on our rolls? Shall we sit silent when our people absent themselves from worship in the church while they crowd theaters and dance halls and other places of worldliness? Our duty is plain. First, let us all examine ourselves with all possible severity and not be content with anything less than a positive and certain peace with God, and let us do these things at all cost to ourselves. Then let us deal with the flock under our charge in all frankness and all love. This means we will have to tell many of those who are prominent in our churches, and tell them face to face, that they are unsaved men. But what is our business if it is not to bring the flock safe into the fold? The hour has come when before God we must meet men in all the severity of truth, or else lose our own souls for infidelity to them. This is not a trifling matter. Doom quivers in every syllable of it.

Now will you, laymen and preachers, unite with me in this supreme work, and pray constantly for your own spiritual salvation, and then the salvation of each other and of sinners? Will you start a revival in your own homes, whether they be parsonages or residences? Our youngest child is in the army. Of course my heart follows him every moment day and night, but my deepest cry unto God is for the preservation of his faith. Whatever may befall, O God, keep his faith in Christ as his Savior. Dare we as Methodists have any other concern above the concern of the salvation of our children? Is it not high time multitudes of Methodist homes were having a religious cleaning and renovation? Be this as it may, let us pray and labor for a mighty awakening among our people. God bless all of you.

JNO. C. KILGO.

LIVING TO ONE HUNDRED.

The work never gets all done up. The new day brings its troop of new duties. We can never sit down and feel that all the burdens have fallen from us. Sometimes we get tired of that, but there is quite another side to the matter. If the work never all gets past us, neither do the opportunities; if there are new duties every day so are there new hopes and new ambitions. Or at least there ought to be. There is no reason in the world why a man should not keep on doing new things, attacking new propositions, dreaming new dreams, right up till he is one hundred years old at least. Most of us would easily live that long if we filled up every day with the elixir of something new and fresh and stimulating. But we so easily let ourselves get dull and self-centered and unambitious, and settle down as if there were no new days or rosy dawns or fresh opportunities left anywhere in life. The doctors may say what they like, but the one way to a happy old age is to keep hopefully, enthusiastically busy.—Christian Guardian.

OUR SERVICE FLAG.

By J. F. Dorroh.

(On the walls of the Methodist Church at Madison Station, Miss., hangs a Service Flag on which gleam twenty-one stars for the young men of the community who have gone forth to fight for their country. The following verses were inspired by that fact.)

For one who from his heart with shame
His sins unnumbered would confess,
Hear Thou this prayer, prayed in the name
Of Motherhood's unselfishness,
Who sacrifices life's chief joys
For freedom's sake: God bless our boys!

Twenty and one the blue stars gleam
Upon our Service Flag to-day;
Twenty and one young soldiers dream
Of home and loved ones, far away;
Twenty and one the dear stars shine,
Each for a friend of yours or mine.

Twenty and one they went away,
Gaily waving a fond adieu;
Sons of the sires who wore the Gray,
Sons of the wearers of the Blue;
But, Blue or Gray, OUR soldier draws
His sword to-day for a common cause.

The weeping willows wave and toss,
There lilies white their vigils keep,
While o'er them gleam the Southern Cross.
Tell me, dear stars of God's own blue,
What flower befits our heroes true?

There is a flower of beauty rare
Within whose cup a spirit dwells,
The white rose of a mother's prayer,
Hope's deathless, radiant Immortelles;
Fed by faith's dew, and sun and shower,
It blooms on earth, Love's perfect Flower.

To Heaven ascends its rich perfume,
As holy incense from the shrine,
Bridging the intervening gloom
Betwixt the human and Divine;
Within our hearts the Rose of Prayer
Blooms for each star that glitters there.

We pray for these, we pray for those,
Who with their swords their pledges seal,
And place between us and the foes
A living wall, ringed round with steel:
Oh, Thou, with all Thy powers Divine,
Help them to hold the western line!

Upon Thy promises we hold,
And all our hopes are centered there;
As did the Patriarch of old,
We wrestle with the Lord in prayer;
And we will NEVER let Thee go
Till Thou Thy blessing shall bestow.

Thou who of old reached forth Thine hand
And smote the dark Egyptian horde,
Walk close beside in "No man's land"
And steel anew the patriot's sword,
Until each heart shall banish fear
And know and feel Thy Presence near.

For them—the twenty and the one,
In Love's, in Friendship's name I plead,
Not for my merits—there are none—
But for the mother-hearts that bleed
And mourn for all their vanished joys
That passed with these—God bless their boys!

WALKING BY FAITH.

In these days it is imperative to remember that we walk by faith, not by sight. If a man gives up his faith under the stress of the present crisis, how then shall he walk? Faith and sight are not alternatives. The only sight we have is included in faith. If a man gives up his faith, he surrenders the only means of vision. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Or as Professor James Moffat translates, "Now faith means we are confident of what we hope for, convinced of what we do not see." What we hope for is a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, and personal participation in this blessed fruition of the purpose of God. The things not seen of which we are convinced by faith include the invisible God, whose gracious and ever active sovereignty is perpetually at work overruling the dark deeds of human sin and directing and shaping events toward the ultimate realization of the divine purpose. To give up faith practically means giving up everything which ministers to patience and courage and hope. This is no time to give up faith. It is a time to exercise faith, to pray for its increase, to feed it by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—The Christian Intelligencer.

HOW SHALL CULTURE BE SPELT IN JAPAN?

By Robert S. Stewart.

Japan has made blunders and mistakes as she has felt her way along from first-century conditions to the twentieth, making the journey in the space of the last 50 years. But with all her errors it can be said the desire of Japan to measure up to the highest standards of civilization and be able to look the world in the face unashamed is the most intense emotion of the empire to-day. They have caught the vision of a city afar off and they are working toward it with a rapidity that has given to them in the last half-century the most remarkable economic and educational history of all time.

If the character of this people has thus been correctly suggested, the importance of Christian missions in a land so alive will at once appear. The psychologists tell us that the adolescent stage is the time to expect conversions and when a youth has passed through those years unsaved the probabilities of his ever finding Christ are distressingly reduced. Japan is a youth passing through a wonderfully virile adolescence. At present her character is malleable, but it is rapidly being molded. Her future moral relation to the world is still undetermined and represents one of the great problems of missions and statesmanship.

There is no question, however, as to the intellectual position which these people shall occupy. This, at any rate, is no longer undetermined, and you may expect her to go to the limit of intellectual culture and stand in the vanguard of scientific application and achievement among the powers of the earth. There is a passion for learning among the student classes. Her young men are seeking knowledge under conditions of hardship and burdens that are heroic. They are investing every resource of intellectual and physical energy in an effort to excel. I know a little Japanese widow in Tokyo whose income is $8 a month, but upon that tiny stipend she supports herself and her son while she is giving him a university education. He is working for his degree in a great Tokyo institution and is studying heavy text-books printed in Chinese, English and German, all of which languages he reads easily. He is a representative of the Japanese student body which, supported by the extreme sacrifice of parents and armed with dogged purpose, is going to excel and make of that nation increasingly a world power. Count Tolstoy recently criticised the American people severely as not being a reading people, except for the light matter of newspapers and magazines. He based his judgment upon the fact that we have no bookstores in this country such as Europe has. However true this may be of America, it cannot be said of Japan, for every village large enough to boast of a school has an abundance of book stalls. In the city of Tokyo there is one section where you may find a solid mile of bookstores stretching along the street in practically an unbroken line. Other sections of the city are proportionately supplied. And in these stores you may find not only Japanese books and magazine publications dealing with every question of politics, economics, literature, science and philosophy stirring in the world, but also a conglomerate mass of English, American, French and German publications, upon themes good, bad and indifferent. The Japanese bookstores remind us of the parable of the one who cast his net into the sea and drew it in filled with a multitude of fishes, both good and bad, except for the fact that they have not cast the bad away but have retained the vilest French romances together with American and European rationalism, atheism, etc. Bishop Kilgo recently said that even as the United States is the melting pot of the nations, so Japan is the melting pot of the literature, philosophy and religion of every age and people.

So I repeat that, whatever may be the moral character of the future Japan, we may expect confidently to see her ranking among the first powers of earth in intellectual culture. But the great problem which the Church has to solve is whether this culture shall be spelled with a "c" or a "k;" whether the Japanese shall have a real civilization or mere intellectualization.

Matsuyama, Japan.

AN EIGHT-HOUR DAY FOR MINISTERS.

That most preachers work hard for little pay is generally accepted as fact, and pleas for better remuneration for the clergy are of frequent occurrence in the pages of the religious press. The Lutheran (Lebanon, Pa.) remarks that while some ministers may take it easy, most of them fully earn their salaries. "Where," it asks, "is the faithful minister who knows of such a thing as an eight-hour day?" If he did work on an eight-hour basis, to carry out the following routine of labor, his year, as estimated by the industrious statistician quoted by The Lutheran, would be 534 days long instead of 365:

156	Sermons, study, and reflection	156 days
156	Sermons, writing (780,000 words)	78 "
52	Sundays	52 "
3	Hours a week given to church finances	20 "
1	Hour a week for funerals, weddings, and christenings	6 "
1200	Half-hour parochial calls	75 "
6	Half-hour sick and distress calls a week	20 "
600	Miles, walking to pay calls	25 "
1	Hour a week, conferences with church officers	6 "
1	Hour a week attending church and Sunday school organizations	6 "
½	Hour a week preparation for Bible school	3 "
1	Hour a week, denominational conferences	6 "

We are reminded that this leaves no allowance "for much-needed recreation, which is as necessary to the workman as eating and drinking." The workman being mentioned, The Lutheran thinks it well to open the eyes of people who may not know that "laborers and citizens of all kinds are much better paid that preachers." So it presents another little table, comparing workingmen's wages with the average income of ministers, outside of the large cities, belonging to various denominations. The contrast, it is remarked, "would seem vastly more striking were ministers' salaries compared with those of baseball players, prize-fighters, football coaches, actors, actresses, and circus clowns." Here are The Lutheran's figures:

Denomination of Minister—	Average Salary
Southern Baptist	$334
Disciples	526
United Brethren	547
M. E. Church, South	681
Northern Baptist	683
M. E. Church, North	741

Presbyterian, South	857
Congregational	880
Reformed Church	923
Presbyterian, North	977

HOW NIGH IS THE BLESSING.

"And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." The answer to your prayers may be nearer than you think. It may already have started by the down line and on the wings of every moment may be hastening toward you. God will answer you and that right early.—F. B. Meyer.

RELIGIOUS FORCES AT WORK IN THE CAMPS.

What the Church is doing religiously for soldiers and sailors is revealed in a comprehensive study by the Rev. S. M. Cavert under the direction of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches.

This survey included the work done in the 30 large National Army and National Guard camps, 165 Regular Army camps, posts and aviation fields, and 46 naval stations—a total of 241 military or naval posts.

At the beginning of the war there were only 41 chaplains in the naval service—to-day there are 150. When the war began there were 67 chaplains in the service of the Regular Army and 144 in the federalized National Guards; to-day there are approximately 750 regular chaplains.

In the United States of America the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. is maintaining work at 275 different stations in military or naval camps of the country; manning these posts are over 3,000 secretaries, 450 of whom are designated for exclusive religious work. In its work overseas the Y. M. C. A. has over 3,600 secretaries, most of whom are in France, but considerable numbers are in Italy, Russia and Mesopotamia.

The Y. M. C. A. has 77 hostess houses either under operation or now under construction in the training camps of this country. These make their distinctive contribution by offering to the mothers, sisters and sweethearts of the soldiers a place for meeting the men in a social way. The Y. M. C. A. also maintains club work for young women in training camp communities in 83 different centers for the sake of organizing them for more effective service. For carrying on the hostess houses and club work there are in the United States 435 secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. In France the Association has 50 secretaries at work in 16 different sections; in Russia, 6 workers in 4 different centers.

The Knights of Columbus have organized their work in about 80 of the largest camps of the country and in this connection have about 250 secretaries.

The work of the camp pastors is an important factor in the service of the Christian forces of the country and one which has not received as much recognition as in many cases it deserves. The camp pastors are ministers appointed by various denominational commissions to constitute a connecting link between the men in training camps and the churches in the adjacent communities. Their work is not intended in any way to duplicate or rival any work of the Y. M. C. A. or the chaplains, but to be supplementary to both.

In some cases the camp pastors have been definitely assigned to units that were without regular chaplains, in which case they have been known as "voluntary chaplains."

There are at the present time about 400 of these camp pastors, appointed in the main by 10 of the largest Protestant denominations and perhaps 100 others appointed for at least part of their time by smaller religious bodies. Some of the most prominent ministers in the churches are serving in the capacity of camp pastors.

In the training camps of this country the Salvation Army has erected 11 special buildings in the vicinity of training camps for the purpose of extending their work to reach the enlisted men as far as possible. In addition to these 11 buildings the Salvation Army in this country maintains 4 special dormitories for soldiers and sailors and a large number of rest rooms. It has also been recognized by the Government as an agency for carrying on special work for the American Expeditionary Force.

No description of the work of the churches can hope to be adequate that does not recognize the large part that the local churches, particularly in the vicinity of training camp communities, have rendered. In hundreds of churches the whole program has been reorganized to center around the new opportunity created by the presence of soldiers and sailors. In some cases special buildings have been erected near the camp to deal with the situation, or local churches have been reinforced by the denominations as a whole. There is hardly an important military or naval center in the United States in which several of the churches have not opened social rooms, providing special attractions for soldiers, in addition to their large efforts to welcome the soldiers to the regular religious services of the church.

Co-operation between denominations has resulted in the erection of inter-denominational buildings in some of the large cantonments. The church headquarters within Camp Upton is the result of the co-operation of 7 Protestant bodies. Near Camp Dix there is also an inter-denominational church carried on by 4 denominations. Other important camp communities in which there is a similar work are Camp Devens, at Ayer, Mass.; the League Island Navy Yard, at Philadelphia; Camp Kearny, at Linda Vista, Cal.; and Camp Cody, at Deming, N. Mex.—Bulletin, Federal Council of Churches.

Below will be found the decision of the judges as to the winners of the prizes offered by the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training.

One hundred and sixty-six (166) manuscripts were entered for the contest. They came from all sections of our Church, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The judges, as announced, were Rev. Drs. Jno. A. Kern, of Virginia, A. C. Millar, of Arkansas, and Frank Seay, of Texas.

They have given careful and repeated study to the grades of the papers, and the list as published below has their unanimous vote. We only regret that there are not enough prizes to give one to each contestant.

In addition to the above, a series of sonnets on the ministry was sent in by Professor Henry G. Barnett, of Southern College, Florida. The judges united in the opinion that these sonnets were deserving of high mention for their unusual poetic worth. They would have no doubt received a prize but for the conditions of the contest, which were that the manuscripts should be judged for their practical efficiency in leading young men to think upon the ministry as a possible life-work.

In accordance with the conditions of the contest, as announced, a copy of such of these manuscripts as are published will be sent to each contestant.

Strong souls within the present live,
The future veiled, the past forgot;
Grasping what is, with hands of steel,
They bend what shall be to their will:
And, blind alike to doubt and dread,
The End, for which they are, fulfil.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT CONCERNING COURSE OF STUDY.

Dear Mr. Editor: I am inclosing copy of a letter sent to me for circulation among the chairmen of Conference Examining Committees. The chairmen of the four classes are requested to notify all the undergraduates in their classes.

Cordially yours,
JNO. F. FOSTER.

Dallas, Tex., June 6, 1918.

My Dear Brother:—As Secretary of the Committee on the Course of study, I am authorized by the Bishops to announce in lieu of the book we had hoped to get from Professor Andrew Sledd, the two following volumes:

The Synoptic Gospels—Hall.
John—Riggs.

These two little volumes are in the Messages of the Bible Series, published by Scribner.

For the present year all four undergraduate classes are to study the Four Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles. The Bishops are not announcing any volume covering the Acts of the Apostles but are expecting the Correspondence School and the chairmen of the Annual Conference Committees to guide our young preachers in their study of the Acts. You will understand that the examination at the Annual Conference is to be on the text of the Scripture itself, and these two volumes that are here announced are to be used as an aid to the understanding of the New Testament.

The Bishops were delayed in making this announcement in hope that Prof. Sledd might have his book ready. Since we are so late in making this announcement it will not be practicable for the Correspondence School this year to offer courses covering these volumes. The young brethren will have to do their work privately.

Your friend and brother,
EDWIN D. MOUZON.

WHY DON'T THEY GO?

So you are not going to church this morning, my son?

Ah, yes; I see. "The music is not good." That's a pity. "Is that what you go to church for, to hear the music?" we demand.

"The church is so far away; it is too far to walk, and I detest riding in a street car, and they're always crowded on Sundays." This is, indeed, distressing. Sometimes when I think how much farther away heaven is than the church, and that there are no conveyances on the road of any description, I wonder how some of us are going to get there.

"And the pews are not comfortable." That's too bad—the Lord's Day is the day of rest, and we go to church for repose. The less we do through the week, the more rest we clamor for on the Lord's Day.

"And the sermon is too long always." All these things are, indeed, to be regretted. I would regret them more sincerely, my boy, did I not know that you will often squeeze into a stuffed street-car with a hundred other men, breathing the incense of whiskey, beer and tobacco, hanging on a strap by your eyelids for two miles, and then pay fifty cents for the privilege of sitting on a rough plank in the hot sun for two hours longer, while in the intervals of the game a scratch band will blow discordant thunder out of a dozen misfit horns right into your ears, and come home to talk the rest of the family into a state of aural paralysis about the "dandiest game you ever saw played on that ground."

Ah, my boy, you see what staying away from church means. It develops a habit of lying. There isn't one man in a hundred who could go on the witness stand and give, under oath, the same reasons for not going to church that he gives to his family every Sunday morning. My son, if you don't think you ought to go, you wouldn't make any excuses for not going. No man apologizes for doing right.—Bob Burdette.

"The world pays more for pleasure than it does for bread."

A WORD PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

By Bishop W. F. McMurry.

I will sail from San Francisco on September 18 for the Orient. Mrs. McMurry and the children will not accompany me. The Missionary Secretaries advise that no provision has as yet been made for a residence in the East, and that I am needed in this country in the Centenary Campaign, as early after the first of the year as the work in the field will permit me to return. The success of this campaign means a new day for our Church in China, Japan and Korea, and it must not fail. Dr. Rawlings, our Foreign Missionary Secretary, insists that I can render the best possible service by taking the "askings" from the field, which are on file in the office of the Board, carefully examine them first-hand, and return with information to be used in the Centenary "Drive."

In response to the cordial and insistent request of friends in St. Louis, I have arranged for my family to abide in that city, at No. 4905 Argyle Place, for the time being. Here Mrs. McMurry will be surrounded by thoughtful and considerate friends, and be in easy reach of those to whom we are bound by ties of the flesh. I sincerely hope that the Church in my native State, and in this "important city" of that State, may have no occasion to regret the return of a son whose heart has never said "farewell."

Many of our people are thinking and praying about the great Missionary Centenary, to which the Church is so fully committed. It has occurred to me that some of those who are planning their contributions toward the $35,000,000 Centenary Fund, would prefer to do a specific thing. Am I not correct in this? Why not write me about it? If you will be good enough to do this, I will receive the information in confidence, and during my examination of the field, try to locate the particular thing that needs doing, and which you would delight in doing, and bring to you on my return, for your consideration, all possible information concerning it.

Write me what you have in mind—no matter whether you have or have not reached a conclusion as to place, person, thing or amount. I promise to do my best to help you to a wise conclusion, and without disclosing your plans until you are ready. Use me in this way, or in any other way that will strengthen the Church in the East.

Would it not be a fine thing for me to receive several hundred letters from men, women, churches, Sunday schools, Bible classes, and Epworth Leagues, each one stating the purpose to do a definite thing in connection with this Centenary celebration, and indicating to some degree the scope and character of the service to be rendered, and requesting information by letter from the field, or on my return, as to the best investment to make?

Maybe you have in mind the building of a church or a parsonage; or it is possible that the school or the hospital appeals to you. Teachers, preachers, and other workers are to be provided. The list of imperative needs is long and varied.

Let me hear from you at No. 4905 Argyle Place, St. Louis, Mo., until the 12th of September, and after that, care of the Methodist Publishing House, 10 Woosung Road, Shanghai, China, until further notice.

PROGRESS ON METHODIST HOSPITAL, MEMPHIS.

The Methodist Hospital now owns and is operating the Lucy Brinckley Hospital in Memphis. The transfer of all the property, real and personal, was made June 21 in fee simple. The agreement entered into obligates the Methodist Hospital to continue to operate the Lucy Brinkley Hospital as an annex in the present building for women and children until such time as it deems it advisable to sell and use the proceeds in the erection of a similar building on the grounds now owned by the Methodist Hospital. The right to sell is vested in the Methodist Hospital Board, thereby making the entire property a valuable asset to that institution.

The Methodist Hospital further agrees to assume all liabilities outstanding against the Lucy Brinckley Hospital, which amount to about $18,000. The value placed upon the property transferred, both real and personal, is $138,000, which will make the net value a little more than $100,000.

The Lucy Brinckley Hospital has had a useful and honorable career, and it was making money at the time the transfer was made. It is indeed a live piece of property and the work that it has been doing is high class and will aid greatly in advancing the work contemplated by the Methodist Conferences that have joined together to build the new hospital.

The owning and operating of the Lucy Brinckley Hospital as an annex to the Methodist Hospital will not interfere with the plans that are being worked out for the building of a new $300,000 hospital. This branch of the work is being carefully gone over by the Building Committee, and as soon as labor can be secured and material delivered they will begin to break ground. It is thought that when the crops have been finished labor will be obtainable and it will be a good time to begin. All the outstanding indebtedness against the lot for purchase money has been paid and there is a good balance in bank ready for the new building.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY FROM THE VIEW-POINT OF A BUSINESS MAN.

By J. R. Pepper.

The Church desires to do all the business it can with all the people it can.

The Church must do a wholesale business.

The Church must invest enough of its capital and men to do a wholesale business in an enterprising way.

The rim of the earth is the only limit to the business of the Church.

If the Church is to touch the other man, and the other man is to touch the other man, then the Church of necessity must reach the utmost limits of the globe before it ceases its effort.

GOD AND DUTY.

Those who are perplexing themselves about questions of duty may learn a salutary lesson from considering that their times are in God's hand. It is the ordinary plan of divine Providence to make the path of duty plain little by little. We cannot determine to-day what we ought to do next year, or even next week. Much anxiety would be avoided if men would simply follow the light they have.—Henry A. Boardman.

—REFLECTED IN—
TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

THE MOTHERS OF THE AMERICAN ARMY.

It is difficult to keep the human element uppermost in the mind as we think about this war. Flesh and blood seem of so little value. It is gathered up en masse and the individual and his interests are lost to sight, only as his welfare contributes to that of the whole. Are men worth more than cannon balls and of more value than targets for rifle practice? If human life is the flower of creation, why destroy it with ruthless prodigality? America answers these questions. There are some things of more value than human life. For instance, personal honor, the requital and protection of the weak, defenseless, and the innocent. Better for a man to die than to save his own miserable life at the expense of another whom he could have protected. The sacrifice of the Christian in behalf of another is far more to be desired than the survival of the strong man through his fitness to survive by his ability to lord it over his weaker brother. Think of it as we will, the mind returns to the thought that the individual cannot be lost in the crowd, that the human element after all is fundamental.

The character of our army is of vital importance. We are interested in it as a whole, but we do not forget the indivdual private lost in the great mass of men. Is he your boy? Then he is worth more to you than the entire army. However, that army is made up of indivldual units. Our boys and our neighbors' boys determine the character of the American army. When anyone has anything to say on that subject we are interested. Recently Dr. John R. Mott spoke before the National War Works Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, delivering a remarkable report and survey of the human conditions in the army of America and her allies. His words will hearten every father and mother in the land. They must realize that the best friend the boy from a Christian home has, and others as well, is the organization of which Dr. Mott is the head—the Young Men's Christian Association. It is doing more for the boys than will ever be fully realized. Our debt is increasing every day the war continues. He stood in defense of the moral character of the army when he said:

"Right here let me pause to say that I support to the full what has been said as to the character of the American army. I know that army. Moreover, since this war began I have seen every other great army on both sides of this struggle and have seen them intimately, with the exception of the Turkish army and certain armies of the Balkan States; and I am free to say that with the possible exception of the Canadian army—and I am not sure I should make that exception—there has gone forth to those European shores, or risen up in those European Islands and on the European continent, no body of men averaging as high, as judged by every test, as this army of American young men—the flower of the manhood and the boyhood of this republic.

"I was talking with the provost marshal at one of the leading ports before I sailed, and he said, 'That last lot of 8000 American soldiers that landed here and crossed through the city—I gathered only four or five bottles from the whole crowd.' I was talking with one of our leading generals at the front one day, and he told me of an interview that he had with one of the Roman Catholic chaplains. He said that this Roman Catholic chaplain told him that the week before he had had 2000 confessions, and only three of those confessing told of having stained their garments.

"I was having luncheon two or three days later with General Pershing, and with great eagerness he ventured to say that, in his judgment, not in the history of mankind has there been a body of men averaging higher in personality and character going forward on a more important errand and animated by purer motives or higher principles. I wish the whole American people could have looked into his eyes and have heard his vibrating voice as he spoke with such intimate knowedge and conviction.

"Now, what a colossal trust has been imposed upon the Young Men's Christian Association to help maintain these ideals, these motives, and this spirit!

"I was talking with General Edwards, one of our generals overseas, and I was asking him to explain why it was that our young soldiers, not acquainted with war, had conducted themselves so splendidly as they had. Just the hour while we were in his office I had heard the report how they had been caught between the barrage of the enemy and our own, through some mistake, and they had been punished for hours without being caused to waver. I said, 'General, how do you explain it all?' He reflected a moment and gave this answer, which I shall ever treasure: 'Mr. Mott, I trace it to the tradition of the American mother.'

"What a splendid answer! Who can measure the anchoring, the conserving, the inspiring power of American mothers as now being evidenced under the impossible strain of this war?

"Again I say a colossal burden of responsibility rests upon us to be true to these mothers, to perpetuate and carry forward their ministry."

Any boy anchored, by a fond memory to his mother in the home in some town, or village, or city, or on some wide-stretching farm can never go far wrong. In the hour when all his strength is demanded of him he will not fail to rise to heroic heights. Big guns may count and an inexhaustible supply of ammunition may be indispensable, but, after all, the human element has most to do in securing success and guaranteeing victory. The temper of the mother proves the endurance of the boy.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE WONDROUS FIGURE OF THE AGES.

Who is this wondrous figure that looms up through the ages, to whom the world now turns in its distress and cries, "To whom else can we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life?"

He is the Pearl and Crown of humanity, the loftiest specimen of manhood the race has ever produced. What Mount Blanc is, lifting its crystal domes and frosted towers nearly 16,000 feet above the Mediterranean Sea, compared to the other snow-clad and cloud-kissed mountains of the Alps, that Jesus Christ is compared to other men who have risen as mountain-heights above their fellows through the ages. Compare Him to Confuclus, Buddha, Zoroaster, Mohammed, He rises as high above them as the heavens are above the earth. He is more than man, or super-man. He is the fullest manifestation of deity God has ever given to the world, the effulgence of divine glory, the image of divine substance. Gazing upon Him with inexpressible enthusiasm and unutterable rapture, we can exclaim Ecce Homo, and with the same breath and with equal truth we can reverently cry Ecce Deus. He is the Son of God, a union of the divine and human, a blending of heaven and earth. Browning, the poet-philosopher, says that a full acceptance of Him brings wisdom and the solution of all perplexing problems.

"I say, the acknowledement of God in Christ,
Accepted by thy reason,
Solves for thee all questions in this world and out of it
And hath thus far advanced thee to be wise."
—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

IMPERIAL PLANNING.

We must plan imperially. And why? Because all our thinking to-day is imperial thinking. It is larger than our village, larger than our country, Conference, State. Yes, to-day it is larger than our Nation. Our people on the street car, in the back lot, in the mountain canon, are talking of the Marne, of Rheims, Belgium, Berlin, as if they were their neighbors. To begin to plan according to a supra-national Church program therefore is simply in line with our necessary, every-day life.

If ever the quaint words of Traherne were true they are true to-day: "You never enjoy the world aright till the sea itself floweth in your veins, till you are clothed with the heavens and crowned with the stars, and perceive yourself to be the sole heir of the whole world." That is an exultant thought. But it is a reflection that belongs to times of contemplation and peace. But especially to-day when the whole world is in the welter and flood of blood, when there is no longer any boundary to our relationships, when the brotherhood of man is emphasized as it has never been, we as a denomination in our program of life and action simply must do imperial thinking, praying, and planning.

Indeed were there now no jubilee of our missionary enterprise throughout the planet, the logic of the world situation would command Methodism to awake, arise and meet the challenge of the time. Were there no Centenary, we would have to do just what we are doing, just the same. The age, the war, the world, Providence, destiny, all call to us to take upon our soul the whole world, to look at it as of ourselves and to do for saving its soul what we are doing to save its very existence.

Blessed be God for the chance to build our Church program according to the pattern of the times.—Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City).

A REQUEST FROM THE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The Mississippi Conference Epworth League, at its recent session at Wiggins, Miss., decided to make a list of the League boys who have gone into the service of their country. The secretary would appreciate a list of such boys sent from each Chapter.

AN ENGLISHMAN ON PROHIBITION.

Sir Frederick Smith is Attorney-General of England and a member of Parliament. He lately visited this country, and since his return home he has written of America for the London "Evening News." As quoted by the "Alliance News," after admitting that he had not believed it possible for prohibition ever to be attained throughout the United States, he proceeded, among other things, to say:

"To-day I am less confident. I came to the same conclusion both as regards the United States and Canada, and, therefore, the subject of the two countries may be treated together. I ought to say that I started with the strong belief that in these countries large bodies of men would not permanently submit to prohibition. It is too soon yet to predict with confidence whether or not a reaction will follow upon the present very remarkable movement. But I have seen many things which have very much surprised me, and which lead me to think it by no means improbable that in these two countries the movement may become almost or quite general and may permanently, or for a long time, succeed.

"In the United States we frequently addressed what are known as Rotary Clubs at the luncheon hour. Such a club is one consisting of members selected almost from every known profession, trade or industry in the place. It contains, therefore, a large number of interesting and versatile people, and on great occasions 600 or 700 people will assemble at their public luncheons. In Canada luncheons of a similar kind are given by what are known as the various Canadian Clubs, the members of which are not selected so as to represent different trades, but are chosen as public-spirited citizens, who meet at lunch to discuss or hear addresses from strangers upon matters which concern Canada. I have known the audience at a Canadian Club luncheon number as many as 1000. Neither at the Rotary Clubs nor at the Canadian Clubs is any alcohol served or permitted. And I am bound to say, though not a specially friendly critic (for I do not like the system), that none of the members seemed very much to resent the drought, and that their abstinence in no way diminished the warmth of their enthusiasm. Indeed, I think it only fair to state that I derived the impression from all those luncheons that the majority of those present had accustomed themselves quite easily to abstention from alcohol.

"I have said that the same general observations apply to Canada. The task of extending the area of prohibition in the Dominion has been rendered easier by the formation of the Coalition Government, because the Liberal members are all vehemently in favor of it, and their influence has proved decisive. I cannot state of the two countries any decided conclusion, but it is right that I should add that it seems to me far more probable than I could ever have believed, that both these countries will in the near future become what in the current phrase is known as 'bone dry.'"—The National Advocate.

PROHIBITION MEASURES IN CONGRESS.

Mr. Edwin C. Dinwiddie, the Legislative Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, has issued the following interesting summary of recent prohibition legislation:

Since the beginning of the Sixty-fifth Congress, in April, 1917, down to the present date, there have been one hundred and eight bills and resolutions introduced which pertain in whole or in part to prohibition of the liquor traffic. Of these over sixty-seven have been introdueed in the House and forty-one in the Senate.

National Prohibition Constitutional Amendment.

Prohibition for Hawaii.

War Time Prohibition.

Prohibition of sale of liquors to men in the army and in the navy.

Prohibition of sale of liquors in National Parks and Forest Reserves.

Prohibition of exportation of rum to Africa.

Prohibition for the army and navy.

To extend State penal laws concerning intoxicating liquors to lands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

Concerning the manufacture of denatured alcohol, and also production of industrial alcohol.

Protection of officers operating under search and seizure laws.

A number of bills relating to internal revenue and special tax receipts, including increase of tax; forbidding the issuance of special tax receipts except after the advertisement of request for the same; rebate of tax on liquors destroyed by fire; disposition of liquors in possession of U. S. Court officials, etc.

This Congress having decided to consider only war measures, or measures which in some way affect the carrying on of the war, many of the prohibition bills have not been reached by the various committees, but the record of achievements along prohibition lines in this great war Congress is a gratifying one. This record of achievements will doubtless be added to by other measures which, as stated, have to do with the morals of our troops abroad and the citizens at home as well.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

By Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, Secretary.

The Meridian District Conference opened Tuesday night, June 11, with a sermon by the Rev. H. A. Woods, our pastor at Lauderdale. It was not the good fotune of the writer to hear the sermon, but its echoes were in the air the next day, and, judging from these, it was well worthy the honor of its place in the beginning of a great and good district conference.

Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock one of our newest and best Bishops, Horace M. Du Bose, began the proceedings of the conference by reading and expounding the first chapter of Titus and leading in prayer. At 9:30 o'clock the conference was called to order by the Bishop and the writer was elected secretary, with Rev. L. E. Alford, assistant.

This was one of the best sessions of a district conference ever held within our bounds. First, because of the presence there of our own well-loved Bishop, whose great intellect and greater heart lend dignity and fellowship to any occasion he attends. Next, because of the fact that Wayneshoro is the place where the Bishop spent his youth and early manhood, which, added to the natural hospitality of the good people and pastor of the little city, made each of us feel that this was his home-coming almost as much so as that of Bishop Du Bose. Then the goodly fellowship of the brethren was altogether in keeping with the 133d Psalm. Though there were spirited speeches and debates on leading questions, every word spoken was seasoned with the salt of good judgment and anointed with the oil of love.

Reports from all the charges were heard the first day and they resounded with faith and vision. Finances were in advance of other years, the spirit of consecration is leading onward and upward and the spiritual outlook is of the best. In practically all reports the Sunday school had pre-eminence. Children's Day (now become Sunday School Day) has been observed in nearly all the charges and the collections reported are very encouraging. Epworth League work is not all that it might be, but there are not lacking indications of a better day for this great movement.

Quitman was chosen as the place of meeting for next year.

The second day was given largely to the representatives of our various institutions and organizations.

Brother A. L. Dietrich brought us a glowing message on the tremendous importance of the Sunday school work, showing that the hope of the Church depends upon the conservation of its childhood and youth, and that the Sunday school is the institution through which this must be done.

Brother J. C. Chambers, whose work in the Conference as Sunday School Field Secretary has made a fine impression, spoke in his unique way on some of the more important phases of his work. He is an entertaining and instructive speaker, a good man in a large place.

Brother W. D. Hawkins spoke impressively on the importance to the Church of the pastor's taking a lively interest in the work of the Epworth League.

Brother M. M. Black spoke in the interest of Millsaps College with his usual earnestness, zeal and intelligence. We were glad to hear that he has brought the subscriptions for the college dormitory so nearly to the goal.

Hon. T. L. Bailey addressed the Conference in the interest of the War Y. M. C. A. Work.

Mrs. Reilly, Field Secretary for the Orphans' Home, represented in a most inspiring way the work and plans of that great institution. Mrs. McQueen and Mrs. Thompson spoke in the interest of the Woman's Missionary Society.

Brothers C. W. Cochran, S. M. Graham, J. W. Beeson, W. D. Hawkins, J. B. Holland, D. W. Heidelburg, and S. H. Terral were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and Brothers D. S. Harmon, A. L. Dietrich, S. J. Creekmore, and J. R. Huggins, alternates.

K. Y. Yum, of Korea, and J. H. Fleming were licensed to preach, and K. K. Allen, our pastor at Matherville, was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial.

The following were appointed Licensing Committee: Geo. H. Thompson, H. B. Watkins, W. J. Ferguson, B. L. Sutherland, and E. C. Gunn.

The most spirited debate of the session came when the Committee on Memorials and Resolutions in their report requested the Annual Conference to sustain the General Conference in its action on the questions of laity rights and the change of the Creed. A substitute was offered asking that the Annual Conference vote against that part of the action of the General Conference having to do with a change in the Creed. About this substitute the battle was waged. Great speeches were made by Brothers Watkins, Chapman, and Allen for the substitute, and by Brothers Thompson, Graham, Dietrich, and Dickens, against it. When the vote was taken it resulted in a pronounced majority against the substitute and for the resolution.

We missed the shining dome, the friendly handshake, the smiling countenance and the magnificent address of the Rev. Robert Selby, who was kept away from the Conference by the rather well-known law of physics that no body, great or small, can occupy two places at the same time.

The preaching of Bishop Du Bose was such as surpassed any we had heard even him deliver. While there were evident flights of the highest oratory, there were also notes of deepest spirituality in all his sermons. Hearing him in such utterances as those delivered at Waynesboro, one is constrained to say that so long as our great Church is under the direction of over-shepherds of such breadth of vision, such surpassing eloquence, such a spirit of love and fellowship and such an under-current of spirituality and consecration, she is in but little danger from the storms without and the foes within.

The hospitality of the people of Waynesboro and the entertaining qualities of their pastor, Rev. C. M. Chapman, cannot be surpassed. Each of us came away feeling that his had been the best home of all, his the goodliest fellowship, and himself the recipient of the best expression of old-time Southern and Christian hospitality.

RENWAR RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanitarium treatments, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should anyone doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." For sale by druggists, price 50c; or by mail on receipt of price from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Adv.

Health

THE MAN WHO SUSPECTS that he has kidney trouble and neglects to take measures promptly for his relief is taking a dangerously unwise risk. If the kidneys are not properly performing their function of purifying the blood stream, waste products and poisonous acids remain in the system and cause nervousness, rheumatic pains, backache, languidness, sore muscles, swollen joints, stiffness, puffiness under eyes and other weakening symptoms.

restore and regulate the healthy and normal action of kidneys and bladder, bringing clean blood, sound nerves, clear head, good digestion, active brain, and all 'round vigorous health.

M. W Taylor, Calvert, Ala., writes: "My ailment is kidney trouble. I tried three different remedies, but none gave me such relief as Foley Kidney Pills." 50c and $1.00 sizes.

WHY BETTY DIDN'T LAUGH.

"When I was at a party," said Betty (aged just four),
"A little girl fell off her chair, right down upon the floor.
And all the other little girls began to laugh but me;
I didn't laugh one single bit," said Betty, seriously.
"And why didn't you laugh?" said mamma, full of delight to find
That Betty, bless her little heart! had been so sweetly kind.
"Why didn't you laugh, my darling, or don't you like to tell?"
"I didn't laugh," said Betty. "'cause 'twas me that fell."

THE FOOLISH ROSE.

While I was walking in the garden one bright morning a breeze came through and set all the flowers and leaves aflutter. Now that is the way flowers talk, so I pricked up my ears and listened.

Presently an elder tree said, "Flowers, shake off your caterpillars."

"Why?" said a dozen all together, for they were like some children who always say "Why" when they are told to do anything.

The elder said: "If you don't, they'll gobble you up."

So the flowers set themselves a-shaking till the caterpillars were shaken off.

In one of the middle beds there was a beautiful rose who shook off all but one, and she said to herself, "Oh, that's a beauty! I will keep that one."

The elder overheard her and called: "One caterpillar is enough to spoil you."

"But," said the rose, "look at his brown and crimson fur, and his beautiful black eyes, and scores of little feet. I want to keep him. Surely one won't hurt me."

A few mornings afterwards I passed the rose again. There was not a whole leaf on her. Her beauty was gone; she was all but killed, and had only life enough to weep over her folly, while the tears stood like dewdrops on the tattered leaves.

"Alas! I didn't think one caterpillar would ruin me."

One sin indulged has ruined many a boy and girl. This is an old story, but a true lesson. —Morning Star.

"NOBLESSE OBLIGE."

There is a story that Lieutenant Guy Preston of the United States army saved his men at the fight at Wounded Knee by remembering the sentiment of the old French proverb: "Nobility necessitates noble conduct." He was holding his men in line before the Indians fired. Everyone was looking for trouble of some kind, but it was the unexpected thing that happened.

The Indians were hovering about with their blankets round them when the signal was given by one of them, and in an instant every buck threw away his blanket and stood revealed with a gun in his hand. The redskins fired. They had every advantage of the soldiers, for they outnumbered them and had taken them wholly by surprise. The soldiers ran. They did not mean to run far, but they needed some sort of cover.

But Preston, looking back over his shoulder to see if the Indians were following, or for whatever purpose a man looks back at a dangerous foe, saw the strap on his shoulder and experienced a shock.

It occurred to him at the instant that he was running away with the insignia of rank that his government had conferred upon him; that he was, in a way, the representative of a great nation, and that he ought not to run. He stopped. Of course there was no well-defined object in his stopping, but when the rest of the men saw him standing there, without cover, and returning the fire of the Indians, they turned back, and in five minutes it was all over, and the Indians were beaten.

It would have been nothing short of a slaughter had Preston gone with the rest, for there was no cover until the top of the hill was reached, and that was so distant that the Indians would have had an easy time picking off the men as they ran. Preston's idea of duty was what saved the day.—Youth's World.

THE UNMOTHERLY MOTHER CUCKOO.

Of course everybody has heard of the cuckoo—the original of the little wooden bird which sticks its head out of Swiss clocks and calls "Cuckoo, cuckoo!" as the hour comes round. Nearly everybody, too, has heard of its curious habit of laying its eggs in other birds' nests, where they are hatched out in due time and at once proceed to shove their foster-brothers and sisters out of the nest, and then grow fat on the provender gathered for the entire nestful. In this country, however, no one has ever seen this done, for the simple reason that the American cuckoo has not learned this splendid scheme of making other people discharge his family duties for him, that practice being an exclusive privilege of his European brother.

While the American cuckoos do not confide the care of their offspring entirely to strangers, they do (as a good many humans do) make the eldest of their flock play nurse to the younger ones. The hen cuckoo lays her eggs a week or more apart; as soon as the first is hatched, the parent birds begin to feed it most assiduously. Before the second egg is hatched, as it is a week later, the first birdling is almost large enough to cover the remaining eggs and aid in keeping them warm and hatching them. Each youngster is expected to help to mother the next comer until the nest is full. Then the oldest is coolly shoved out by the parents, and told to shift for himself. Thus, instead of spending hours upon the nest, Mrs. Cuckoo is able to be off with her friends.

The whole cuckoo tribe seem to possess queer traits. In South America there is another species which differs both from the European and the North American in everything except its desire to shirk as much of its duties as may be possible. This species manages this by adopting a community plan for raising its offspring. Instead of each pair building a nest, one is built by three or four pairs working together. Nests have been found with as many as twenty eggs in them, on which no less than five hen-birds took turns in sitting.—Our Dumb Animals.

From the first the drag-net of the Church contained fish both bad and good.—Farrar.

A SERMON BY A HORSE.

A young minister walked along a busy street one raw November day. He was discouraged and embittered, because he thought he was being overworked, and was not receiving the recognition he deserved. His mood was bitter and rebellious, a mood that is found among ministers perhaps as often as among other people.

Out of the din of traffic there came to his ears the rumble of a heavy loaded dray and the sound of iron-shod hoofs striking the pavement. A dray, loaded with huge rolls of paper and drawn by a pair of magnificent horses, was coming briskly up a slight rise in the street. The driver, a little wrinkled Irishman, crouched lazily on his seat, with the reins hanging loose from his fingers. The two splendid beasts, without a word or a touch from him, were doing their work with perfect intelligence and willingness. The minister paused upon the curb to watch them.

Suddenly the horse nearest to him trod upon a slippery manhole cover, lost his footing and went down on his side with a resounding crash. A quick little gasp of pity came from the watchers on the sidewalk. But it was wasted pity. For before the dray had lost its headway, before the little old driver had gathered up his reins, the great horse, with a violent scramble, got on his feet again, and threw himself into his collar with an energy that threatened to tear the heavy harness off his back.

As the dray topped the rise and rumbled round the corner, the minister turned slowly away. His eyes were moist and his heart humbled. His impulse was to follow that horse all day, and learn his spirit of generous co-operation. And that night, as he knelt at his bedside, he prayed a strange prayer:

"O, God, make me like that horse. Teach me what You want me to do, and help me to want to do it without being driven. When I stumble, may I rise at once and pull all the harder to make up for lost time. Bless my life with a feeling of harmony and co-operation with Thyself. Amen."

Next Sabbath morning he preached a sermon from the text, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends." It was a good sermon; the people spoke to him very warmly about it after church. But the minister knew in his heart that the sermon really came from a great dumb brute that had never been to church in his life.—Youth's Companion.

Editorial

A FURTHER WORD.

When in taking leave of the Advocate I wrote my "Final Words," some days ago, Rev. H. T. Carley had not been named as its Editor. It was not, therefore, possible for me to mention that fact and say anything concerning him.

Brother Carley served as Assistant Editor of the Advocate for a time soon after I took charge of the paper, and his work was in every respect of a very high order. My association with him was most agreeable, and pleasant memories of it have lingered with me through the years that have followed. Of his competency there is not the slightest doubt. He is a graduate of Millsaps College and of the Theological Department of Vanderbilt University, and is endowed with unusual gifts. He knows both how to think and write. No weekly in Southern Methodism has a more capable man at its helm than the new Editor of the Advocate, and we pray that a large measure of success may attend his labors.

R. A. MEEK.

IT CAN BE DONE.

We should like for the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi, preachers and laymen alike, to read a recent editorial statement in the Alabama Christian Advocate. We congratulate the Methodists of Alabama on the magnificent showing they have made in their support of their Conference organ. And we congratulate the Editor on the character of paper he is getting out. But the purpose of this article is not so much to extend congratulations as to call the attention of our own constituency to what has been done, and to how it has been done, in Alabama, and to suggest that the same thing may be done in the same way in our territory. The statement is as follows:

"The Editor of the Alabama Christian Advocate hesitates to claim it, but nevertheless, according to our information, this paper now has THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY ADVOCATE IN SOUTHERN METHODISM. We are not boasting, for when we remember that we have not less than 180,000 Methodists in our two patronizing Conferences we feel that our circulation ought to be much larger than it is. But comparing ourselves with outsiders and with the circulation of other Conference organs, we realize that we have cause for profound gratitude. A little over two years ago it looked as if the continuation of this paper was impossible. The Publishing Committee so ordered it. The Conferences saw that either the Publishing Committee must be taken at its word, or the pastors must get busy and rally to the Advocate as they had never done in its history. They decided on the latter course. The presiding elders have been urgent in stressing the need of the Advocate in the charges and the claims of the Advocate for a living. The pastors have shown a sympathy and co-operation that have really surprised us. The fact is, it begins to look as if the preacher who does not make an effort to circulate his paper is going to be able to sympathize with a pro-German on parade day. More than ever before, the preacher, in spite of his multiplied duties, has realized that he must work for the Advocate, and when he has done it, he has found that the Advocate has been his friend and helper, giving him invaluable assistance in doing the work of the Church and the Lord. As a result of the canvass made by so many of our pastors, last week the record showed that since Conference we have been given 4607 new subscribers. Sometime ago we were forced to drop several hundred names for non-payment of subscription, but, even then, we sent out 16,100 copies of last week's issue. We do not believe any other Conference organ of our denomination has such a circulation: Team work has done it. We thank the brethren and take courage."

"Team work has done it"—that is the secret of success.

THE UNDERGRADUATE AND HIS COURSE OF STUDY.

After the approaching round of Annual Conferences, the undergraduate will be required to take his course of study through the Correspondence School. This is, we believe, a wise provision of the recent General Conference. The time has come when the ministry of our Church, in order to maintain its position of leadership among the religious forces of the country, must be equipped not only with an experimental knowledge of religious truth, but also with an intellectual training that will enable it to deal efficiently with the problems that are constantly arising in the various fields of ministerial work.

This action of the General Conference cannot be objected to on any plausible grounds. The fee of $10 is small in comparison with the great benefits to be derived. The course of study is required of all our young preachers, and it should be carried on in the most effective way possible. The value of the correspondence method of study has been demonstrated beyond question. As a matter of fact, the demand for this legislation should have come from the undergraduates themselves, who must have realized the difficulties of bringing up their work in the old way. We believe the wisdom of this action will abundantly appear in the quickened and strengthened intellectual processes of our young preachers.

In the meantime, every undergraduate should be giving diligent attention to his studies. It is true that this is the season of revivals and the preacher is an unusually busy man; but nothing need interfere with a duty that is fixed by the law of the Church, the performance of which is inquired into at Conference by properly constituted authorities—nothing less than an unmistakable dispensation of providence. And providence does not often interfere with duties.

To say the least, it is embarrassing to all concerned for a chairman to have to say, "He did not appear before the committee, Bishop." Failure to appear always calls for an explanation—and explanations are sometimes hard to make. Young man, bring up that course of study.

THE PREACHER'S AIM.

One trouble with a great many people is that they have no definite aim in life. They want to do something worth while, but they do not know what it is. They want to go somewhere, but they do not know the way. The consequence is that the end of the day is very much like the beginning, and the end of the year brings the weary traveler back to the point from which he started. This is one of the tragedies of life.

It should never be so with the preacher; but, unfortunately, we fear that it is. We should take heed to ourselves. No matter what else we may have accomplished, we ought to be sure that we have grown in grace and knowledge. Not to have done so, is to confess invincible weakness or incorrigible indifference. Is it conceivable that a minister of God's grace to a world of sinful men, a divinely called co-worker with God himself, should fail to realize in his own life increasing fulness and richness of spiritual values? Not if he is sincere and thorough-going. Growth in grace is as normal for the Christian as growth in stature is for the child.

But we ought, also, to have definite aims in our work. It is not possible to accomplish everything at once, but it is possible to make all our activities count toward the accomplishment of a definite task. This is a day of programs and policies; large plans are being laid, and definite methods of work are being adopted; quotas are being assigned, and goals are being set. How is it with us as preachers? Do we know exactly what we want our Sunday schools to be and do? Are our prayer-meetings mere incidents in the round of the week's work? Is our preaching lacking in force and definiteness? Is it possible that we can be satisfied, at the end of the Conference year, to let the indefinite phrase, "a good year, Bishop," stand for a whole year's work?

When the presiding elder asks us what our plans are, let us be able to give a definite answer; and when the Bishop wants to know, at Conference, what we have done, let us be able to tell him. Let us aim at something, and keep shooting till we hit the mark.

THE WAR SAVINGS STAMPS CAMPAIGN.

We print in another column the proclamation of the President of the United States, calling upon every citizen of the country to pledge himself to practice economy and to buy, or pledge himself to buy, as many war savings stamps as possible this year. June 28 is designated as the day by which all pledges and purchases should be made.

The Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi scarcely need to be told that the Government is depending upon them, along with all other patriotic citizens, to do all they can to help win the war. We take it for granted that they have done their full part thus far. But it cannot be amiss to emphasize as strongly as possible the importance of our doing our full part in this movement to furnish the money that is necessary for success in the great struggle.

The Government expects to raise $2,000,000,000 by the sale of these stamps. That amount is based upon an estimate of $20 per capita of the entire population of the United States. The largest amount one person may buy, is $1000. Those who are able to do so, should invest that amount in these Government securities—the best in the world. Those who cannot invest so much, should conscientiously invest as much as they can possibly spare. We must realize that the task we are engaged in now is no child's play—it is an undertaking that deserves, needs, and must have the support of every loyal man, woman and child in the land. It is not a matter of feeling, or convenience, or of indifference; it is a matter of stern, unquestionable duty. Do your duty!

MRS. J. F. WYNN PASSES AWAY.

On Wednesday morning, June 19, Mrs. J. F. Wynn, wife of Rev. J. F. Wynn, of the Louisiana Conference, and mother of President R. H. Wynn, of Centenary College, passed away peacefully at Crowley, La. Mrs. Wynn had been in failing health for some time and her death was not unexpected, but its announcement will bring sorrow to a host of friends throughout Louisiana. The funeral services were conducted at the Methodist Church in Crowley by Rev. R. W. Tucker, the pastor, in the presence of a large number of friends. We trust a suitable memoir will be furnished the Advocate for publication.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

According to press reports, the Billy Sunday revival in Chicago closed on May 19, with 50,000 "trail hitters."

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., has announced that until further notice his post office address will be Blackstone, Va.

A Bible class meets every Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. building in New Orleans. Out-of-town visitors will always be welcome at this class.

Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir, of Franklinton, La., has been assisting the pastor, Rev. A. J. Coburn, in revival services at Clinton, La. We hope to hear good reports of the meeting.

The Perry County News refers to a sermon preached by Rev. John W. Ramsey recently at New Augusta, Miss., as "one of the ablest sermons ever heard here." The subject of the sermon was, "The War."

Rev. J. A. Aiford, pastor of Second Church, New Orleans, spent his vacation in Bogalusa, La. He preached there on Sunday, June 23, and, in the words of our informant, his message was "timely and helpful."

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, the versatile pastor of our First Church at Bogalusa, La., preached to the faculty and students of the Summer Normal at Franklinton, La., on June 23. We dare say the message was an inspiring one.

Mr. John Parks Williams and family, former Mississippians, who have been making their home in Tarpon Springs, Fla., have removed to Tampa. We pray that God may abundantly use them for his service in their new field of labor.

Dr. C. M. Chapman, our accomplished pastor at Waynesboro, Miss., attended the Ministers' Vacation School at the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Starkville recently. He was honored with the office of secretary for next year.

According to the Texas Christian Advocate, Bishop H. M. Du Bose is the fifth of the former pastors of St. John's Church, Augusta, Ga., to be elevated to the episcopacy. This is a record probably not paralleled in American Methodism.

The American Red Cross has recently received more than $5000 in fines from Louisiana dealers in foodstuffs who have been making illegal profits. The U. S. Food Administration is very strict in its infliction of penalties for violation of its rules.

Rev. George William Roberts, of the Minnesota Conference, M. E. Church, who had enlisted in the medical corps of the Canadian army, was killed in a German attack on May 19. He is supposed to be the first American Methodist pastor to fall on the field of battle.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., writing from Homer, La., says: "We are to begin a meeting here on the fifth Sunday of June with J. O. Hanes, one of our general evangelists, from Birmingham, Ala. We would be glad to have the prayers of your readers." This request will, we are sure, be regarded by many.

Announcement has been made of the death of Mrs. Abbie C. Hoss, the wife of Bishop Hoss, at Muskogee, Okla., on June 14. The sympathy of the whole Church will go out to Bishop Hoss and family in this hour of great bereavement. We pray that Divine grace may sustain them in their sorrow.

Rev. T. B. Winstead, of the Trenton charge, Mississippi Conference, in sending us two new subscribers for the Advocate, says that things are moving along well on his work. He is getting ready for his revival services, and is praying for a great ingathering of souls. Let many others join him in that prayer.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

The White House,
Washington, D. C.,
May 29, 1918.

To the People of the United States:

This war is one of nations—not of armies—and all of our hundred million people must be economically and industrially adjusted to war conditions if this nation is to play its full part in the conflict. I appeal to all who now own either Liberty Bonds or War-Saving Stamps to continue to practice economy and thrift and to appeal to all who do not own Government securities to do likewise and purchase them to the extent of their means. The man who buys Government securities transfers the purchasing power of his money to the United States Government until after this war, and to that same degree does not buy in competition with the Government. I earnestly appeal to every man, woman and child to pledge themselves on or before the twenty-eighth of June, to save constnaly and to buy as regularly as possible the securities of the Government, and to do this as far as possible through membership in War-Savings Societies. The twenty-eighth of June ends this special period of enlistment in the great volunteer army of production and saving here at home. May there be none unenlisted on that day.

WOODROW WILSON.

We learn from the Lincoln County News that Dr. I. W. Cooper is Chairman of the War Defense Committee of that county, which has the management of the war savings stamps campaign. We notice that Dr. Cooper is a member of the Limit Club, composed of those who have invested $1000, the limit, in war savings stamps. He shows his faith by his works.

Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, of Tupelo, Miss., has been appointed Field Secretary for Scarritt Bible and Training School at Kansas City, Mo., with the States of Mississippi and Louisiana as her territory. She has recently visited the following places in the interest of her work: the Summer Normals at Hattiesburg, Meridian, Starkville, and Blue Mountain, and the Mississippi Conference Epworth League meeting, at Wiggins, Miss.

Announcement has come to the Advocate office of the death at Bogalusa, La., on June 18, of Brother Geo. W. Dorsey, at the ripe age of 76 years. He died in the triumphs of the faith, and was buried at his old home church, Mt. Olivet, near Satartia, Miss. The funeral service was conducted by his pastor, Rev. A. Inman Townsley, in the presence of a great throng of friends and relatives. We extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.

The Editor had the pleasure, on Saturday of last week, of officiating at the marriage of Lieut. Henry M. Godat and Miss Hurley Eppinette, both of New Orleans. Lieut. Godat is a son of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Godat, for a long time active members of our Parker Memorial Church, but now identified with the Carrollton Avenue Church. We pray heaven's richest blessings upon the happy young couple. Lieut. Godat is stationed at Camp Beauregard, La.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions recently sent in: Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., Madison Station, Miss., 3; Rev. B. T. Crews, Vivian, La., 2; Rev. F. N. Sweeney, Franklinton, La., 3; Rev. A. J. Henry, Myrtle, Miss., 3; Rev. W. W. Perry, Glenmora, La., 3; Rev. B. E. Meigs, Monticello, Miss., 4; Rev. A. M. Broadfoot, Fernwood, Miss., 2; Rev. E. H. Cunnigham, Kosciusko, Miss., 2.

The Fuel Administration has issued the following warning: "Coal, in all probability, will be denied rural communities where wood is available. Rural communities should have wood supplies put aside for schools and municipal buildings of all kinds, to be prepared for any emergency. A railroad fuel blockade would be a great victory for the Kaiser—it would practically paralyze our war preparations." Giving heed to this warning, is one way of helping the Government.

Rev. J. A. Wells, of the Oak Ridge charge, Mississippi Conference, in sending us two subscriptions for the Advocate, says: "The Lord is unusually blessing us. On June 16 we unveiled a service flag at Oak Ridge, with appropriate exercises. On the same day we had a blessed service at Bradley's Chapel. The old-time power fell in an old-fashioned experience meeting following the sermon. On June 14, I took two persons, husband and wife, into the Church in their home. I have a third of the Conference assessments in hand." He requests the prayers of our readers.

NOT HOW MANY BUT HOW FEW.

A small audience is supposed to be rated by the number in attendance. Few folks at a service and the preacher hangs his head if asked, "How many were there?" The fact is greatness is not in proportion to numbers. A multitude march to camp as raw recruits. The number is smaller in uniformed parade, and smaller still when a few are singled out for medals, and smaller yet when a war council is called, and when the cabinet meets there is a President and a Secretary of War and a Secretary of the Navy to represent all. Let us be capable of sizing up an audience. Max Muller, in "Auld Lang Syne," says, "Dr. Stubbs, Bishop of Oxford, in his 'Seventeen Lectures of the Study of Mediaeval and Modern History,' states what may sound almost incredible, that he had to deliver his lectures to 'two or three listless men.'" O what exactitude of statistics may be gathered to file a verdict of dire failure! Jesus spent most of His life on a dozen men and this dozen had to be diminished to give a true rating. When he fixed a quorum at two or three the Master knew what He was doing. Be patient and yet be faithful too, dear pastor, despite the meager audience.—The Christian Intelligencer.

HOME PRESERVING OF EGGS.

Home preserving of eggs may be practiced at the season of greatest production with considerable profit, according to the New York State College of Agriculture, which has issued a circular recommending the waterglass (sodium silicate) method. It recommends this method for only absolutely fresh eggs, and preferably infertile eggs. Directions follow:

Mix nine parts of boiled water with one part waterglass, which can be obtained at any drug store. Place the clean, fresh eggs in a jar, preferably an earthen jar, and after the solution has cooled, pour it over them so that the top eggs are an inch or two beneath the surface. Then the jar should be put in a cool place and should not be disturbed in any way.—Government Bulletin.

SUFFERING CATS! GIVE THIS MAN THE GOLD MEDAL

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug is a sticky ether compound, but dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue.

It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone, obtained at any drug store, will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Cut this out, especially if you are a woman reader who wears high heels.

Mr. THOMAS G. OWENS was born in Georgia early in 1831. There he lived until settled manhood, and from that State entered the Confederate army, and served his country faithfully during the war, in which his health was irreparably injured. After the war he moved to Alabama, where he lived for quite a number of years, and then moved to Kemper County, Mississippi. He joined the M. E. Church, South, early in life and served as steward in same in Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. He was a most faithful member and lover of his Church, and was a steward of Mellen Church for fully two decades. He was a charter member of that church. A perfectly faithful steward, always a support and friend to his pastor, ever ready to do his best for the Church, Brother Owens continually "adorned the doctrine of Christ" by one of the most quiet, peaceful, and humble lives it has been my lot to know. He was a devoted son, a true comrade, a perfect citizen and neighbor that commanded the love and respect of all his community. His was a clear, definite Christian experience. Sunday evening, May 12, 1918, at the age of 77, he closed his eyes on earth to awake in glory. I was his pastor my last four years in Mississippi, and can truly say that I have never loved and revered any parishioner more than him.

F. L. CROWSON.

Webster, Fla.

JOHN M. PAPPASAN was born in Alabama, in October, 1843. He moved with his father to Pontotoc County, Miss., in early life, where he grew to manhood. In early manhood he was married to Miss Harriet Blackburn, to whom were born four children—two noble sons, and two excellent daughters; his girls with their mother preceded the husband and father to the fair land of the blest. The two sons, one of them a very acceptable local preacher in our Church, and serving his fourth year as pastor of the church and the charge in which he was born and has lived all of his life, still survive. Brother Pappasan's second marriage was to Mrs. Elizabeth Phillips, with whom he lived happily until his death, which occurred on March 14, 1918. Thus closed the career of one of earth's noblemen. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life, and served his church as steward and Sunday school superintendent until he became so feeble that he could not attend the meetings. Brother Pappasan was a man of sturdy character, and of sterling worth. He lived for the good of others, a strong supporter of his church both in influence and finance. Thus as he served his Lord in his day, God honored him in his life; and he passed away without a struggle. The writer, in the presence of his family and a great throng of people, conducted his funeral. May the Holy Spirit comfort the sorrowing ones!

THE BOARD OF MISSIONS NEEDS MONEY.

Mr. S. H. Meyer, the Treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions, requests us to print the letter below, and to urge the preachers to send to him at once any amounts they may have on hand for this cause. This is an urgent call, and we feel sure that every preacher in the Louisiana Conference, if he has not already done so, will attend to the matter at once.

Mr. S. H. Meyer,
New Orleans, La.

Dear Brother: The borrowing time of the year has come and what will save us from going heavily into bank to meet our current demands is, that the Conference Treasurers make urgent appeals to the charges to pay on their assessments, and to send to this office, not later than June 1, all moneys received. The need is pressing and relief can come only from your well directed efforts. Will you not help? Sincerely yours,

J. D. HAMILTON.

RUSTON DISTRICT CONFERENCE,

Louisiana Conference.

The 1918 session of the Ruston District Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Arcadia on the morning of June 11, at 9:30 o'clock. Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder, opened the session with devotional exercises and called for the election of a secretary. W. L. Doss, Jr., was elected.

The presiding elder appointed different committees and then proceeded to the regular work of the District Conference. The reports of the preachers showed that the salaries of the preachers and the presiding elder have been about paid up throughout the whole of the district. In some instances, good work was reported as having been done for Conference collections, but the larger part of the charges reported that these collections were being deferred until the fall of the year. However, the financial situation is encouraging throughout the district. Some of the charges reported that the spiritual interests of the Church are prospering, while others reported that the spiritual tides are somewhat low. Few meetings have been held in the district and therefore the number of members received was not so large.

The attendance was not as good as at conference of last year. Four or five of the pastors were absent and some few of them were in attendance for one day only. The attendance of the laymen was not so good as last year.

The following laymen were elected delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference: E. H. Fisher, S. D. Pearce, R. T. McClendon, C. H. Henry, J. F. Dring, local preacher, S. G. Webb, P. K. Abel, R. A. Robinson; alternates: J. E. Reynolds, F. P. Moss, local preacher, J. E. Hood, T. W. Neal, H. R. Wimberly, and F. C. Franklin. J. G. Snelling, E. L. Cargill, K. W. Dodson, and W. L. Doss, Jr., were appointed a licensing committee. A. L. Harper, our pastor at Sibley, was recommended to the Annual Conference for local elder's orders.

Resolutions with reference to the War Work, the Centenary Fund, and the Correspondence School were adopted.

Rev. J. G. Snelling preached at 11 o'clock on Wednesday on the Power of a Good Example and stirred all hearts to seek to set a better example through righteous living. W. L. Doss, Jr., preached on the evening of the first day, Tuesday.

The Conference was glad to hear of the orphanage work from Brother Vaughan, the superintendent. Action was taken pledging the assitance of the preachers and members of this district toward the raising of the seventy-five thousand dollar building fund for the Orphanage. Brother Vaughan reported the Orphanage to be in a prosperous condition. Rev. K. W. Dodson represented the interests of Church Extension and also spoke of the good work being done at Mansfield College, of which institution he is a trustee. Dr. Henry represented the educational interests of the Church.

A pleasing feature of the District Conference was the simultaneous session of the District Missionary Meeting held during the first day of the Conference. At 11 o'clock on the first day the ladies presented a program to a joint meeting of the District Conference and of the District Missionary Meeting. Again in the afternoon a demonstration of the work being done by the Ruston Church in the missionary work of the Epworth League was given by a delegation of the Ruston Leaguers who came over about sixty strong in cars. Also a demonstration of a business meeting of the Young Peoples' Missionary Society of the Orphanage was given. These demonstrations were very much enjoyed.

The royal entertainment of the good people of Arcadia was highly enjoyed by the members of the Conference. Dinner was served on the ground both days.

Secretary.

AT GRENADA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Bishop Quayle, of St. Louis, had apparently mesmerized the situation on the first day of the North Mississippi Efficiency Conference at Grenada.

One preacher said: "You have missed the whole thing. Bishops could go to school to him."

But that preacher was only "enthusiated," and came to himself later, no doubt. The passage seemed to be in order which says: "Let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another." The great arc light is needed; so also is the lesser light, and none are anything without God and he was able of even the stony-hearted Gentiles to raise up children unto Abraham.

And said St. Paul: "We are all the children of Abraham by faith." There are diverse gifts but "the same Spirit," and God has set the members, every one of them, in the body as it hath pleased him, "and the eye cannot say of the hand, 'I have no need of thee.'"

The foundation stones and every brick in the walls of the building have a place just the same as the finial and the splendid windows of art. The Bishops have a place and a part; so also has every single member of the Church, great and small; and it takes the whole "push" of them to destroy the works of the devil and to plant the standard of the Cross in triumph in every section of the world. "I am only one, but I am one," is a good class motto.

Dr. Knickerbocker, of Texas, spoke interestingly. He has a way of his own, as every preacher and Christian worker should have. This special Western light has his methods, and "the same spirit" and purpose with the many whose gifts differ. He shook up the congregation immensely, and edified the big company of ministers and church people who were present in the college auditorium.

A surprising worker and sane gentleman appeared in the person of Dr. Jno. A. Rice of St. John's Church, St. Louis. Like Samson at his best, he was just beginning on his series of addresses when the author of these lines came away. Evidently, he was ready and competent, and no doubt brought things to pass as a factor of special good to the occasion.

The minister from Alahama, Rev. J. A. J. Brock, had dug up the circuit preachers and the country churches early in the proceedings, but city people come often from the country, and so also do the city preachers. Gospel truth and earnest Christian workers are conditions of success at all points alike. "Occupy till I come," is the command at the metropolitan church, and also at the small chapel of the secluded territory.

Dr. Countiss, college president, and his coworkers are doing large things at Grenada and creating the foundations for increased prosperity at the growing Grenada College. The college entertainment was exceedingly hospitable, and the town of Grenada has the marks of a well regulated community, and possesses many features of attractiveness and beauty.

Summary and Recommendations of the Special Commissioners of the Anti-Saloon League of America concerning Vice Conditions in England and France.

1. The American Military and Naval Forces in Europe are a splendid body of men. Taken as a whole, they are so clean, so sober, and so efficient that they bring a feeling of pride to every American who sees them, and who knows the record they are making.

2. The commanding officers of the army and navy are deeply concerned for the morals of the men under their control. They are in full sympathy with the law passed by Congress for the protection of the soldiers and sailors from vice and intemperance, and are earnest and persistent in their efforts to promote continence and sobriety in both officers and men, not simply by prohibitory and repressive measures, but by positive efforts to divert and occupy the time and thought of the men when off duty with social, recreational, educational, and amusement features of an innocent and elevating nature.

3. The people of the United States have emphasized in the most positive and helpful fashion the duty of a nation to care for the social and moral welfare of its sons in time of war by the splendid contributions they have made in men, women, and money for carying on the work of the Y. M. C. A., and the Y. W. C. A., and the Red Cross, thus making it possible for the soldiers to have in every city, town, and camp, where they may be located, comfortable meeting places, where under the supervision of intelligent, patriotic, helpful men and women, social, educational, recreational and religious opportunities are offered, which are of incalculable pleasure and profit to the men, and the surest possible preventive of drunkenness and immorality. These great organizations, working along with the chaplains, strongly supported and aided as they are by the commanding officers of the Army and Navy, act as a great social, moral, and spiritual tonic, permeating the great body of men.

4. While the American sailors and soldiers taken as a body are doubtless far above the average in clean and sober living, yet there is much drinking of wine and beer, very much more than among the forces in the United States and much among men who had not contracted the habit before. There is also very considerable drinking of strong liquors, especially brandy (although forbidden in General Order No. 77). In the seaport cities, in London and Paris, and in all the larger towns and cities, but decreasing to a minimum in the towns and villages in the fighting zone. There has been "drinking to excess," especially in London and Paris and the port cities, which has sometimes been so great as to cause very unfavorable comment, and to require strict repressive measures to be taken by the commanding officers. Such drinking has been accompanied, as is usually the case, with sexual immorality, as a result of which in some sections "venereal disease was reaching a perdentage larger than could be ignored." It appears that in proportion to numbers there has been a greater amount of drinking to excess and of immorality among the officers than among the men. This appears to be due to the fact that in creating such a large body of officers, it has happened, as might have been expected, that many have been commissioned who have been lacking in discretion and self control. When freed from the restraint of the prohibitory law against intoxicants and prostitution in the United States, and given the freedom which officers have in France, such men have not restrained themselves, but have indulged their appetites to the detriment of discipline among the men under them and to the dishonor of the American uniform, which, to the praise of the higher officers be it said, has resulted in their discharge from the navy and army and their return to the United States.

5. General Order No. 77, which was issued in order to meet the unsatisfactory conditions existing, especially in the port towns, has been helpful, but while it has checked, it has not controlled the evils. The exemption of light wines and beer is a distinct lowering of the standard set for the army and navy by Congressional action, and whatever good has resulted from the rest of the order, the exemption of light wines and beer has not only produced no results to compensate for the public official lowering of the American prohibitory standard, but, on the contrary, the drinking of wine and beer has undoubtedly been increased by the order, and men are forming wine-drinking habits which will plague them for life. Furthermore, under cover of the permit to drink wine, the stronger liquors are frequently purchased without detection or punishment.

6. The mail service from the United States to the forces in Europe is not satisfactory. It is handled slowly, and many unnecessary mistakes and delays occur, and men absent from their business and families are not kept in touch with home life as they should be. Letters and papers from home renew the home ties and oftentimes prevent yielding to temptation to drink and immorality.

Recommendations.

1. It is recommended that the standard adopted by Congress in the passage of the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to soldiers and sailors in uniform and the practice of prostitution in the zone of the military and naval camps be maintained for our soldiers and sailors when they leave the United States. General Order No. 77 should be strengthened at once by striking out the exemption as to light wines and beer, and prohibiting the purchase, possession, or acceptance as a gift of all kinds of intoxicating liquor. It should also be made applicable to the navy as well as the army. The sweeping order of General Scott for the Bordeaux Base, which prohibits any officer or man to be in the company of a woman of immoral character, on the street, in a cafe, or in any room or house of assignation or prostitution, should be extended to apply to all American soldiers and sailors. The violation of this order should subject the offender to court-martial and punishment as is provided in General Order No. 77, and officers should be given to understand that they will be held responsible for the strict enforcement of this order.

There should be no hesitation and no delay in issuing this order and in passing this legislation, for the prompt taking of such action will prevent the formation of wine-drinking habits by American soldiers and sailors, and the purchase of strong liquors under the cloak of the wine bottle, and would result in a still greater reduction in sexual vice.

2. It is recommended that the American government, either through the Department of State, or through the military and naval authorities, request the governments of Great Britain and France to issue an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicants by residents of those countries to American soldiers and sailors in uniform in deference to the standards concerning intoxicants and prostitution established by the United States for its army and navy, and recently emphasized in a statement made by General Pershing in which he said: "From the military point of view we cannot tolerate alcohol among our soldiers. War is merciless; men must be competent; the drinking man makes a bad soldier. The army won't stand alcohol because it must conserve its man-power."

3. It is recommended that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy unite in a joint statement to the American people, emphasizing in the strongest possible way the great and beneficent work which is being done by the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., and the Red Cross in Europe, not only in furnishing physical comforts and social pleasures, but in strengthening the moral fibre of the men, and assisting them to resist solicitations to vice and intemperance. Every proper stimulus should be given to secure the subscriptions by our people of whatever sum may be necessary to maintain the work of such organizations in full vigor, enabling them to send to Europe a force of men and women adapted to perform the services of inspiration, uplift, and practical helpfulness, which has already counted for so much in the lives of our men in the training camps, and which is doubly needed now that they are to be engaged in active battle.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman.

TIME WILL PROVE IT.

Regardless of the merits of the case, no statements in regard to the merit of any article can be so clearly proven as through time itself. If the article has no value it cannot live. If it has merits, it will be everlastingly in demand. It is just so with Gray's Ointment; for ninety-seven years a family word in every household. Almost a century ago the same claims were made of its merits as to-day: that it is healing and antiseptic, the very best aid in cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sores, stings and other skin infections. It has won on its merits. A ninety-seven year record is ample proof. Write W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., for sample.—Adv.

HOW SHE HAD USED IT.

George Miller, a Bible agent, called on a lady with the intention of selling her a new family Bible. She replied that the one she had was good enough for her use, that she had used it for a long time, etc. Mr. Miller asked to see it. On opening it a pair of spectacles fell out, whereupon the lady exclaimed: "Well, I declare, if there ain't my specs I lost two years ago!"

are lightened when she turns to the right medicine. If her existence is made gloomy by the chronic weaknesses, delicate derangements, and painful disorders that afflict her sex, she will find relief and emancipation from her troubles in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. If she's overworked, nervous, or "run-down," she finds new life and strength. It's a powerful, invigorating tonic and nervine which was discovered and used by an eminent physician for many years, in all cases of "female complaints" and weaknesses. For young girls just entering womanhood; for women at the critical "change of life"; in bearing-down sensations, periodical pains, ulceration, inflammation, and every kindred ailment, the "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine put up without alcohol—ingredients on wrapper.

SYLACAUGA, ALA.—"My wife has used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for trouble from which women suffer and it surely did give good results. All women ought to use this remedy as it is fine. Dr. Pierce's Cough Syrup is good also."—REV. J. N. COOPER.

ALBERTVILLE, ALA.—"Two doctors gave me up—said I had a bad case of dropsy and that my system was all run-down. I could not keep any vituals on my stomach. My husband found one of Dr Pierce's pamphlets and I began taking 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription.' I took three bottles of each kind and in six weeks I was able to be up. I also used the 'Pleasant Pellets.' I recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all suffering women, and am glad to say they saved my life when others failed."—MRS. SARAH C. RAINS, R. F. D. 1.

NEWTON DISTRICT (MISS.) CONFERENCE.

The Newton District Conference convened at Bay Springs, on June 11, and was in session two days. Rev. W. L. Linfield, the capable and courteous presiding elder, conducted the business with dispatch, but without undue haste.

Reports from the several charges indicated progress, and an optimistic spirit was very evident.

Visitors from without the district were: Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Millsaps; Rev. B. F. Lewis, of the Orphans' Home; Rev. J. C. Chambers, Sunday School Field Secretary, and Mrs. S. F. Riley, Field Secretary of the Orphans' Home. The address of Dr. Watkins on "Christian Education" was greatly enjoyed by all and conceded to be one of his best efforts, which is high praise, indeed. He spoke encouragingly of the work at Millsaps, and made a forceful plea in its behalf.

Dr. Watkins was very ably seconded by Dr. Rolfe Hunt, whose sermons and addresses are always well worth hearing. Dr. Hunt spoke with special reference to the interests of the Mississippi Conference Training School, at Montrose, of which he is President. This school is doing a very effective work for the Church. A large and worthy list of Mississippi Conference pastors received their inspiration, and some their entire school training, within the classic walls of this institution. A goodly number of ministerial students were in attendance there last session. This school unquestionably deserves the most generous support of our Annual Conference; and it makes a peculiar appeal to anyone who desires to contribute of his means for the glory of God in the building of Christian character, and equipment of Christian workers.

Rev. J. C. Chambers delightfully and inimitably represented the Sunday school interests of the Church.

Sermons were preached by the following brethren: J. G. Galloway, H. J. Moore, M. L. Burton, E. H. Cooley, and W. A. Hays.

Robert L. Myers and M. J. Miller, Jr., were granted license to preach.

W. J. Stokes and W. N. Ware were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial.

Rev. A. J. Boyles, local preacher, was elected to deacon's orders. Rev. M. J. Miller was received as a local preacher, and recommended to the Annual Conference for recognition of orders.

Delegates to the Annual Conference were elected as follows: R. B. Boykin, W. H. Mars, S. L. Eady, Rolfe Hunt, P. L. Blackwell, J. M. Mashburn, R. L. Abney, and W. D. Crout. Alternates: W. C. Mabry and W. H. Boykin.

W. A. Davenport was elected District Lay Leader. The following were elected members of the ad interim licensing committee: H. J. Moore, J. M. Corley, E. H. Cooley and W. A. Hays.

Raleigh was selected as the place of meeting next year.

The following resolutions, respecting the war, were adopted:

"Whereas the Central Powers and more especially the German Nation, misdirected by unwise ambition, unsound teachings, and diabolic influences, have conceived the idea of world domination; and

"Whereas to gain their goal they have set aside international agreements, counting them but scraps of paper; and

"Whereas they have run rough-shod over small nations, murdering innocent citizens, ravishing pure women, and murdering innocent children; and

"Whereas they have disregarded the long established rules for the governing of warfare and have resorted to every trick and cruel, merciless device that could be conceived by the mind of man, in the air, on the land, and on the seas, destroying ships and cargoes alike, both of neutral and enemy nations, sending helpless and innocent men and women and children to the bottom of the sea; and on land and in the air limited in their selection of means of destruction and death only by their inability to invent and manufacture; and

"Whereas, the United States with the rest of the Allies has risen up in her righteous indignation to stop this outlaw in his mad career, enlisting all her resources to this end; therefore, be it resolved:

"1. That we, the members of the Newton District Conference, do pledge our loyal support to the President and the country at this time.

"2. That we will so thoroughly inform ourselves that we can give to our congregations and neighbors a correct and vivid understanding of the great conflict.

"3. That we will endeavor to prevent any man, woman or child in our several communities, either through ignorance, prejudice, or fear, from becoming a traitor or a slacker.

"4. That we will follow our brave boys, who have already enlisted and will enlist, with our love, encouragement, and prayers, praying always that the great Heavenly Father will so direct us that we shall be free from selfishness, hatred and cruelty, and in his own way and time we may do our part to bring to a successful termination this, the world's greatest and most awful war."

Following the adoption of the resolutions, the presiding elder addressed the Conference on the war situation, denouncing in strongest terms the inhuman practices of the Germans, and emphasizing the paramount importance of complete victory for America and her allies. He was followed by Mayor McCallum, of Laurel, who made a stirring appeal in behalf of the sale of War Saving Stamps.

Bay Springs was seemingly as lavish in her entertainment of the Conference as the fountain, whence she gets her name, is in the overflow of pure, sparkling, health-giving water. Each visitor, on his testimony, was entertained in the best home, which proves there were none but the best. This scribe especially enjoyed his visit among the people whom he served as pastor in other days. Dr. Roife Hunt, the pastor, proved himself a most courteous and obliging host.

W. A. HAYS, Secretary.

Boys are prepared for college under skillful instructors.

Foundation work is always the most important both as to scholarship and character of the boy.

WOMEN SUFFER MOST OF ALL

From those conditions of the blood and nerves in which the combination treatment, Hood's Sarsaparilla before eating and Peptiron after eating, gives so much satisfaction at so little cost as compared with other medicines or physicians' fees.

These two great medicines are especially effective in cases of physical weakness, nervous irritability, run-down conditions in which there is iron deficiency.

Ask your druggist for them.

Sunday School

A NEW COURSE AT THE JUNALUSKA TRAINING SCHOOL.

The Training School for Sunday School Leaders at Lake Junaluska, N. C., last year was so successful in the high grade work that was done there, that there was quite a demand for a special course adapted to the needs of the pastors. So, in arranging the program this season, a course has been put in in response to that demand, and the member of the faculty who will deliver that course of lectures is Rev. Henry H. Meyer, D.D., the Sunday school editor of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The subject of the course is "The Church School and the Future."

Now that the General Sunday School Board has gone to the trouble and expense of making this splendid provision for the pastors, which they can have the benefit of by simply going to the Lake at the proper time, it is sincerely hoped that great numbers of them will take advantage of the fact and go. The dates this year are July 23 to August 4. Those who contemplate going should arrange for accommodations at the Lake by writing to the Secretary of the Junaluska Association, Lake Junaluska, N. C., telling him about what they want to pay. Rates at the different hotels and boarding houses run from $11 to $21 per week.

NATIONAL DAY PROGRAM.

"It has been said that one-half of the human race die before reaching six years of age. It is also said that a soldier in the trenches on the western front has seven more chances of life than a baby not yet a year old."

This is a quotation from the splendid program that has been published by our Sunday School Supplies Department for use in our Sunday schools on National Day, July 7, which may be had of the houses at Nashville, Dallas, and Richmond.

It is high time that the Church entered more heartily and intelligently into the matter of conservation of child life, and this program will help us to do that. It contains some figures and statements that ought to cause many to stop and think. The government is doing much to conserve the physical life of the children, but it is the Church's job to look after the moral and religious life in co-operation with the home; and as it is well known that far too many homes do nothing in this line, it rests all the more upon the Church to see to it.

Therefore it is urged that all Sunday schools get some of these programs (40 cents a dozen, or $2.50 per hundred) and observe the day named, or as near it as possible—the more that use the day suggested the better. There is not necessarily any collection to be taken, the idea of the program being educational.

The program consists of fourteen numbers—songs, prayers, tableaux, responsive readings, etc.

A MESSAGE FROM THE BATTLE FRONT.

Fresh from the battle front, Bishop McConnell brings a message to the American people. In his initial address, given at Boston University, these are some of the striking statements:

"Democracy itself will color all our thinking for the next twenty-five years."

"It will be impossible for the old idea of the partition of the world into spheres of influence to continue."

"One of the most remarkable things coming out of the war is the new emphasis being placed upon the missionary enterprise.

"The most hopeful note I have heard is the call of the Church for millions for missionary work."

"There never was a better time for Christianity. The door was never more open for Christianity than it is today."—The Centenary Bulletin.

NOTICE.

The Hattiesburg District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society will convene at Mount Olive, Miss., at 3 p. m., July 10, and close at 6 p. m., July 11.

Mrs. T. B. COTTRELL,
District Secretary.

ITEMS OF INTEREST FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF LOUISIANA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Miss Clara Chalmers, Junior at Athens College, Athens, Ala., and candidate for foreign work, was one of three girls to represent Athens College Y. W. C. A. at the Y. W. C. A. Summer Conference at Blue Ridge, June 5-12. She has done splendid work there this year—in classes, on the editorial force of the College paper, and as a leader in the Y. W. C. A. work, being president of the Student Volunteer Band.

Miss Pauline Randle will be in New Orleans with her sister, Mrs. R. C. Root, 1508 Canal Street, from June 15 to July. Miss Randle, a daughter of Rev. Robert Randle of the Louisiana Conference, and a volunteer for foreign missions since childhood, goes to Korea as a teacher early in July. Louisiana is fortunate in having this splendid young woman going out at this time. She will go with the prayers of our Church back of her. In His strength she will be able to do that which for years her heart has yearned to do.

Miss Mary Daniel has been taking her rest at her home in Washington, La. For two years Miss Daniel has been giving fine service at the Mary Elizabeth Inn in San Francisco. Some of us who have known of and loved this splendid institution—a co-operative home for working girls—and its beloved donor, Mrs. L. H. Glide, of California, were glad to learn from Miss Daniel recently that Mrs. Glide was a Shreveport woman. This home had been her dream long, long before the time of its realization. Miss Daniel has given very illuminating talks on her work at several places, among them being First Church, New Orleans, Opelousas, Rayne and Crowley.

Mrs. T. H. Morris, Conference Organizer, has given fine service in the Shreveport District. She has visited twelve places, made thirteen talks and organized seven auxiliaries, besides giving valuable help to weak places. She goes into the Ruston District next.

RUSTON DISTRICT MEETING.

"The Ruston District Conf. of the M. E. Church, South, held an interesting session recently at Arcadia, La., with Rev. J. M. Henry presiding. The Woman's Missionary Conference was also held at this time in order that their work might be presented to the district conference.

"Mrs. Morris, who will be remembered as the wife of the Rev. T. H. Morris, who was at one time pastor of the church and who died a few months ago, has the office of Conference Organizer in Louisiana and made an encouraging talk about her work. Mrs. Miller, of Minden, district secretary, also had an interesting report. Others who assisted in making the program so entertaining and instructive were: Mrs. Sexton, of Shreveport; Mrs. Pearce, of Ruston, whose talk on 'The World War and Missions' was very timely; Mrs. Holmes, of Minden; Mrs. Heflin, of Homer; Mesdames Carl Goff and F. R. Taylor, of Arcadia.

"A thrill of pride, pleasure and interest touched the hearts of all present as they listened with rapt attention to the inspired words that fell from the lips of Miss Pauline Randle, our own missionary to Korea. This young girl, whose life is beautifully consecrated to the Master's work, was born in Arcadia, when her father, Rev. Robert Randle, was presiding elder, and lived at this place. She told very feelingly of her call to serve in a foreign field and how anxious she is to go to Korea, although her first wish was to go to China to work. She graduated from the Scarritt Bible and Training School, Kansas City, and will sail for Korea early in July."

THE INSANE IN NORTH CHINA.

"The need of an institution for the insane in North China can scarcely be overestimated," says Dr. James H. Ingram, of the North China Medical College in Peking. "At present the insane are cared for by their families. No allowance is made for the diseased condition of the mind. They are regarded as accountable for their actions, and are jeered at, scolded, tied up, starved and tortured. According to modern theories of the treatment of this class of patients, such treatment only increases the malady and hastens mental deterioration. I know of one man who was violently insane. His mother hired ruffians to break a leg and an arm of her son in order that he might not be able to terrorize the neighborhood. The poor wretch's sufferings were so great that he managed to commit suicide.

"The only institution in China run on modern principles for the care of the insane is in Canton. This institution is overcrowded and is 1500 miles distant from Peking. The place in Peking, sometimes called an asylum for the insane, is nothing more nor less than a prison where the insane are confined and put in chains when necessary."—Missionary Herald.

OUR MEXICAN WORK.

There are more than a million and a quarter Mexicans in the United States, six hundred thousand in Texas alone, and five hundred and sixty thousand in California, Arizona, and New Mexico. Last year 96,180 were admitted into this country. Four times as many Mexicans as any other nationality were debarred from entrance by the United States officials because of being "undesirables."

Fifty Against Two. It is not reasonable to expect two weeks of outing to overcome the effects of fifty weeks of confinement. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla along with you. It refreshes the blood, improves the appetite, makes sleep easy and restful.—Adv.

Middle Aged Women

Freemont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change — heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN. 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

A GOOD START.

Mrs. A. P. Harland, of Tupelo, has given to Millsaps College five $100 Liberty Bonds as a permanent fund to help to educate some young preacher.

One of the big things of this day to solve, is what to do with all these Liberty Bonds bought. There is no better way to use them than to do as Mrs. Harland has done—help educate preachers long after you are gone. A great many men would be glad to get this help, and help make a better Church and world. I have put some time and interest in the campaign for thrift. We need to be taught to save—save and then save, but as soon as we learn to save we ought to begin a campaign to teach folks to give. If we do not learn to give after all this saving, where will we go? If there's anything on earth next to saving that people need to learn, it is to give.

Get those Liberty Bonds out of the bank and send them to Millsaps, Grenada, Board of Missions, Church Extension Board, Conference claimants.

MY REPORT.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

Dear Advocate: The reports now are, in the main, furnished by our efficient ministers, and while this is proper, the superannuates are ministers and are identified with some Conference, and have a right to a little room once in a while to report where they are and what they are doing. This is my first this year. My home is still in Olla; family the same size—two old, wrinkled, dried-up people, aged 81 and 68. We have a fine cat. He has no sympathy for rats and mice, but we cannot send him to the post-office, or on any business whatever. We have not many visitors, but sometimes when it rains it pours. A few nights ago our street choked up for some distance with automobiles, and they unloaded at this house, and in a short time two returned to their car as man and wife, looking very happy. The old minister could neither walk nor talk as he once could, but the parties were satisfied.

We have vegetables growing to maturity, but rain is needed.

We are receiving some good letters from old friends. They all have love, and some of them something else. God bless the Advocate, especially our new editor!

Calomel Salivates and Makes You Sick

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated to-morrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more billousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

RULES FOR HOUSEHOLDERS.

We are printing this week the rules formulated by the United States Food Administration to control the use of food supplies during the war. Official announcement has been made that it is altogether likely that these rules will have to be made even more stringent than they are now. There will be, however, no complaint on the part of our people about doing anything that will help the Government in these difficult times. If food will win the war, we will save the food. The rules are as follows:

"All kinds of food, especially wheat, meats, fats, and sugar should be economically used.

"No food shall be hoarded. Hoarding is the holding, contracting, or arranging for food by any person in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time. This does not refer to stocks of home grown vegetables and home canned or preserved fruits.

"All householders who can entirely eliminate the use of wheat until the next harvest, about September 1, should do so.

"Householders who are obliged to use wheat should not use more than a total of 1½ pounds of wheat flour or prepared wheat, in any form, per person per week, including the wheat flour in Victory Bread, and including the wheat flour or prepared wheat in crackers, pastry, macaroni, breakfast and other foods.

"Victory Bread is bread manufactured by bakers under the rules of the United States Food Administration. In estimating flour consumption 1¾ pounds of Victory Bread may be considered equal to one pound of wheat flour.

"In buying flour an equal weight of other cereals as substitutes for wheat flour must be bought pound for pound. This is the 50-50 rule. In buying mixed flours, the substitutes in them may be counted so that a smaller proportion of substitutes may be bought with these flours than with white flour. In buying graham and whole wheat flours (containing not less than 95 per cent of the entire wheat) 6.10 pounds of substitutes shall be purchased with every pound of such flours.

"Wheat flour substitutes are hominy, corn grits, cornmeal, corn flour, edible corn starch, barley flour, rolled oats, oatmeal, rice, rice flour, buckwheat flour, potato flour, sweet potato flour, soya bean flour and feteria flour and meals.

"Householders in towns and cities may not buy more than ⅛ of a barrel of flour or 5 pounds of sugar at any one time. Householders in the country may not buy more than ¼ of a barrel of flour or 10 pounds of sugar at any one time. In no event shall any purchaser have more than thirty days' supply of either on hand.

"Householders should not use more than ¾ pounds of sugar per person per week.

"In addition to the above, however, sugar may be used for home canning, and will be available to the householder for that purpose upon his signing a certificate that such sugar is desired and will be used only for that purpose.

"No wheat flour, or prepared wheat in any form, should be used for any purpose other than human consumption. No wheat fit for human consumption should be used for other purposes.

"Meats of all kinds and poultry, and more particularly beef, should be most economically used, eliminating all waste. Purchases of these products should be restricted and the quantity prepared for each meal reduced. Consumption of all meats, including poultry, should be redueed as nearly as possibe to 2 pounds per week per person over four years of age.

"Fresh milk and milk in evaporated and condensed form and cheese may be liberally used.

"Butter may be used for normal consumption.

"No more ice should be used than is absolutely necessary.

"To save transporation, local supplies should be grown and used."

Former Health Commissioner Says Nuxated Iron

Should Be Used in Every Hospital and Prescribed by Every Physician—Attributes His own Great Physical Activity Today at Over 60 Years of Age Largely to His Personal Use of Nuxated Iron

WHAT FORMER HEALTH COMMISSIONER KERR SAYS

"As Health Commissioner of the City of Chicago, I was importuned many times to recommend different medicines, mineral waters, etc. Never yet have I given an opinion favoring any particular remedy, but I feel that in Nuxated Iron an exception should be made to the rule. I have taken Nuxated Iron myself and experienced its health giving strength-building effect, and in the interest of the [illegible] welfare, I feel it my duty to make known the results of its use. I am well past my three-score years and want to say that I believe that my own great physical activity is due largely today to my personal use of Nuxated Iron, and if my endorsement shall induce anaemic, nervous, run-down men and women to take Nuxated Iron, and receive the wonderful tonic benefits which I have received, I shall feel greatly gratified that I made an exception to my [illegible] rule in recommending it. From my own experience with Nuxated Iron, I feel that it is such a valuable remedy that it ought to be used in every hospital and prescribed by every physician in this country."

Wm R Kerr

Former Health Commissioner, City of Chicago.

Former Health Commissioner Kerr has given years of his life fighting for public health in his own and other cities. It was he who introduced Anti-toxin for Diphtheria in Chicago's Health Department. He purified the milk for the Consumers and thereby helped to save the lives of thousands of babies. He introduced the anti-spitting ordinance which has been copied all over the country and also took care of the sewers and garbage in the interest of public health. He is positive that the widespread use of Nuxated Iron would greatly lessen the worries and troubles of Health Commissioners in keeping up a high standard of public health.

Manufacturer's Note—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by Former Health Commissioner Kerr with such surprising results, is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists and general stores.

Over $10,000 being spent for new Dining Hall and equipment. Town of Mansfield raised over $8,000.

Fourteen in faculty from best Colleges and Universities. Graduate nurse in charge of new Infirmary.

Exceptionally strong faculty in Music, Art, and Domestic Science and Art. Graduates of Teachers' Course exempt from all examinations to teach in Louisiana. Beautiful Catalog on request.

LIBERTY BONDS AND MISSIONS.

The Board of Missions will be glad to receive in the way of special contributions Liberty Bonds at face value. Already friends of the cause are sending their Liberty Bonds to the Board. In the last few days one friend offered Bonds to the amount of $1200 for the building of a church in China. Of course this offer was gratefully accepted, and we are authorized to say that similar offers will be accepted heartily. This is one of the ways in which a patriotic Methodist can help his country win the war and at the same time help the Board of Missions win the still greater and more important battle for righteousness in the earth.

TIME OUT!

An Economical Man.

"An' so yer name is Riley," said one. "Are yez any relation to Tim?"

"Very dishtantly," said the other. "Oi wus me mother's first child, an' Tim was the seventeenth."—Social Circle.

Prices Higher.

He—I feel like thirty cents!

She—How things have gone up since the war!—Purple Cow.

Sure Enough!

"Where are you going, mother?"

"To a surprise party, dear."

"Can't I go, too, and Archie and Edna?"

Editorial

God's persistent love for us is one of the miracles of the ages; suppose God hated us!

It is sometimes easier to frown than it is to smile; but a smile cheers somebody, and a frown never does.

"Giving" is a much misused word; we nearly always receive full value in exchange for what we call "gifts."

It sometimes takes as much courage not to do as to do. Apparent inaction is a severe test. But it is still true, "They also serve who only stand and wait."

The esthetic value of a quiet hour in a service where the simple word of truth is preached amounts to a good deal; the spiritual value to a tired and care-worn soul cannot be estimated.

Sometimes on a journey we pass through long stretches of desolate country. But now and then we cross clear-running streams and catch glimpses of bright flowers. There are beauty spots in the most forlorn life.

Unhappiness is more often a state of mind than anything else. Outward circumstances may be unfavorable and inconvenience may result, but at the same time it is possible for the inner life to be calm and serene. We should cultivate the inner side of our natures.

The poet is one who can see and hear and feel things that the ordinary man cannot, and can make them intelligible in words of truth and beauty. We can wonderfully increase our range of knowledge by reading what the poets have to say concerning the deeper meanings of life.

THE MAIN THING.

In the multiplicity of things that we as preachers are called upon to do, there is a real danger that we lose sight of the chief end of our calling.

Emphasis has always been placed, and properly so, upon personal preparation for the work of the ministry. The importance of a definite personal religious experience on the part of the preacher cannot be unduly stressed. It is fundamental. This experience does not necessarily involve recollection of specific times and places, but it does involve a vital consciousness of a work of grace within the heart. The great facts of sin and repentance and faith and justification and regeneration and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, whether they be intellectually comprehended or not, must be as real to the preacher as are the physical phenomena that he is aware of through his physical senses. Unless he has this experience, he has nothing.

Emphasis is also placed, and properly so, upon the purely intellectual side of preparation for the work of the ministry. Out of this emphasis have grown our correspondence schools and our colleges and universities. Our Church has refrained, wisely thus far, from making a collegiate education a condition of entrance into the traveling connection, but from the beginning it has furnished facilities for securing such education and has urged the young preacher to make use of them. And after our school days are over we are expected to cultivate and maintain such habits of study as will keep us conversant with the world of things and thought in which we live. Surely less could not be expected of us.

As the Church has grown, inevitably its work has developed into highly specialized forms represented by various departments and organizations. Thus, again, emphasis is placed, and properly so, upon the importance of the preacher's position as the servant of the Church in carrying out its plans and fulfilling its mission. From these various departments and organizations come suggestions and appeals and instructions that are sometimes almost bewildering in their number and urgency. We wonder how we can find time and opportunity to heed so many calls. And yet they are all worthy, and the work must be done. We cannot afford to be disobedient servants.

And now, while we are engaged in this great war, our Government is recognizing the value of the preacher in its program, and emphasis is being placed, and properly so, upon his part in helping to win the war. Almost every day calls are made that involve much of time and labor to meet. So far as we know, not one minister has declined to perform any task assigned him by the Government. Our preachers are patriots.

In addition to all these demands that are made upon the preacher's time, and the many things that he is expected to do for himself and for the public, there has arisen a way of measuring success that unfortunately seems to have led some astray. We find ourselves, almost unconsciously, judging a man's efficiency by the salary he receives, and measuring his success by purely material standards. We know it ought not to be so, but too often we yield to the temptation to do it.

In the face of all these things, it is no wonder that sometimes we forget the main thing. The main thing, as we see it, that a preacher ought to do, is to establish and maintain the kingdom of God on earth by bringing unsaved men and women into that kingdom by the divinely appointed means, and by encouraging and strengthening those who are already in the kingdom. That is to say, if we are accomplishing the main purpose of our ministry, souls are constantly being brought from darkness into light, from the power of Satan unto God, and our people are growing daily in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. We may do other things—we must do other things, but they must be in addition to the main thing.

If we keep clearly in sight this great function of our ministry, there is little danger that we shall be led astray by the multiplicity of things we are called upon to do, or by any false standards of success that may be set up. Our preaching will not degenerate into one of the incidents of the week's work; it will not become an attempt to attract and entertain people; it will not even be an occasion merely for imparting ethical and moral instruction. It will be the time when, with all the strength we possess, we will bring to men's minds and hearts the fundamental principles of truth and righteousness as they are contained in the gospel of Christ, and labor with them as his ambassadors to bring them to a realization of their accountability to God. We shall then be putting first things first, and all others will naturally fall into their proper places. And instead of being perplexed and care-worn and distracted, we shall have the serenity of mind and peace of heart that nothing can disturb.

THE SMILING FACE.

Some of the strongest forces in the world are silent forces. You cannot hear them in operation, and you see little of their manner of working, but you cannot fail to see their effects. The force itself may be intangible, but the result it produces is as evident as anything can be.

Sometimes the things that influence us most are little things. Of themselves, they might be thought insignificant, and yet through the influence that small things have had upon some life, it has been transformed into something great.

Sometimes the ministries that help men most are the little ministries that do not cost much, and for that reason are thought little of. If all of us were constantly on the alert to take advantage of the little opportunities that we have for doing good, for bringing a blessing into some life, we ourselves should be happier, and we should bring more of happiness to the people about us.

Have you ever thought about the helpful ministry of a smiling face? The world is full enough of sorrows and disappointments, and dark shadows. Nearly everybody has some burden to carry. It sometimes happens that the very person that we had thought above all others was free from care and labor is the very one whose shoulders are bending under a load that is almost too heavy to be borne. Sunshine drives the clouds away from the face of the heavens, and a smile oftentimes drives the shadows from the face of the weary and care-worn. A smile is the sunshine of human nature. We can carry our sunshine with us.

There are sad hearts in the world, and all around us, that need cheering, and we need to be cheering those hearts. We can do it many times by carrying a smiling face. Care may be gnawing at your heart, but do not show it to the world. Wear a smile on your face, and it will help you bear your burden, and it will bless some fellow-struggler, too. We need a gospel of gladness that will dispel the dark clouds that hover over the world. You may not be able to put into words that gospel, but you can put it into a smile. Do not let the world think that the Christian life is a miserable one. Carry a smiling face, and the world will want and look for the thing that makes you smile. One of the most inspiring sights in the world is a crowd of Christians so happy that their happiness shines in their faces. Christians, are you happy enough to smile?

THE STAY.

I see Him when the breaking dawn
Recalls the laggard soul from rest;
I hear Him in the starry night,
When Silence comes to be my guest.

His voice breathes low in early spring,
When frost chains break and March winds fail,
When larkspurs and anemones
Awake to life in every vale.

When sorrow calls to lonely paths,
When Heaven lures our loved away,
His voice still speaks—how quietly!
And utters words no tongue can say.

With Him my Stay, I cannot fall:
In spirit stress and battle shock
I still shall trust Him, Lord of life,
Amid the tides a mighty Rock!

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

AN OPEN DOOR.

Complaining of life and its tragedies and sorrows is, in view of all the facts, a very foolish and a very wrong thing to do. For, when we come to think of it, no matter how burdened or troubled any life may be, the one thing that has always given joy and pleasure and satisfaction of the most real and abiding kind is ever a possibility. Since man has been man and God's world was made it has always and everywhere been the case that men and angels and even God Himself have found the most exquisite joy of living in doing something to help or make happy other folks. All men have admitted that, and the sanest, most healthy-minded, the best men have borne the most unquestioning testimony to such a philosophy. And if that be true, is there then any life, no matter how hampered or troubled, that hasn't a doorway into the very joy and gladness of heaven lying wide and invitingly open to it? And, with such an opportunity and invitation, to hint that any life is doomed to misery is to be untrue to the fundamental facts of living.—The Christian Guardian.

HOW WE OUGHT TO PRAY.

Most of us have heard very many times of Jacob's wrestle with his angel visitor, and it has been held up to us as a true sample of prevailing prayer, and again and again we have been told that if our prayers were unanswered it was probably because we were not sufficiently in earnest, and we have actually had earnest men stay up all night praying in order to secure what they sought; and to many of us such prayer has become the typical example of the kind of prayer which prevails with God.

This view has the sanction of long tradition and of great names. But when we come to measure ordinary prayer by this standard we are almost forced to the conclusion that ordinary prayer is not prayer at all, and if this standard is to prevail, then our whole prayer life must needs be remodeled. But as we look into the matter we find that this type of prayer is not very common, and so far as history reveals the facts it has never been common. And, moreover, when we begin to look into the matter closely we realize that in the very nature of things we cannot expect it to be.

We think it is a mistake to regard the wrestle of Jacob as a wrestling for blessing with a reluctant God; it is rather a wrestling of the man with his lower self. There was no unwillingness upon God's part to transform Jacob, the Supplanter, into Israel the Prince, but the Supplanter died hard. And even in these modern days this hardest of all hard wrestles still goes on, not of penitent man with an unwilling God, but of that same penitent man with his own lower self. To be willing to be a better man, to be willing to forsake the old life, to be willing to surrender our own will, is one of the hardest tasks with which mortals are faced. But this is not a wrestle with God to make us better, but a wrestle with self to be willing to be better. Hence the scene at Peniel cannot be taken as a type of ordinary prayer, especially one which should be taken as an ideal.

Our conceptions of God's fatherhood necessarily affect our prayers, and if we kept the fatherhood idea clearly before us, it would save us from many mistakes in regard to prayer. We have no right to think that God values prayer either by its length or its sound volume, and the idea that a loud prayer will reach the throne while a quiet one will be passed by is surely the height of absurdity. And the idea that God will answer our prayer if we are only persistent enough, while He will neglect to do so if we simply leave it with Him, is abhorrent to our idea of loving and intelligent fatherhood. God does not need to be importuned to make Him willing to grant our requests, any more than a kind earthly father needs to be pestered with his son's request until he grants the request out of sheer weariness. Such an idea of God is most repelling, and yet we fear it is only too common.

The New Testament idea of God is that of an all-wise, all-loving Father, who is more willing to give than we are to ask, and who does not even wait to be asked, but gives far more without being asked than He does in response to petitions. Our needs are our unspoken prayers, and we are sometimes wholly unconscious of them. God answers our spoken prayers, but for every one of these He answers a thousand of the unspoken prayers of our urgent needs.—The Christian Guardian.

COURAGE.

By Wm. C. Allen.

Wait for Jehovah, be strong and let thy heart take courage.—Psalms 27:14, R. V.

I can but bloom—did the June roses more?
I can but droop—did they not also die?
The Moment is: the After or Before
Hides all from sight—canst thou tell more than I?
What matter if to-night come smiling snow
And death? The Power that makes, that mars, is One,
I know nor care not: when that Power bids blow
I ope my curled petals to the sun.

—Ednah Proctor Hayes.

In the higher California mountains during early summer, the visitor sees what is locally known as the "snow-flower." It is of a brilliant red color and is very large and showy. The guides will tell you that its name is derived from the fact that "it follows the retreat of the snow." It is eagerly welcomed just as are the exquisite anemones at the same season of the year in Colorado. It reminds us of the chrysanthemum which, after the glories of fleeting summer, blooms close to the chill of the wintry season.

Possibly we love the showy snow-flowers, the blue anemones, the many-colored chrysanthemums, not simply because of their striking beauty and the cheer they afford, but because they valorously lift their pretty heads when almost all the other flowers have ceased to bloom. They live just as near to the destructive frost as possible. Do not these humble exponents of God's goodness suggest and speak to us of courage?

The soul of the sturdy Christian has a semblance to these flowers. Our lives are intended to interpret the beauty of our faith to others. We naturally revel in genial surroundings and companionships. We love the golden sunshine of approbation and human sympathy, but some of us—like the summer flowers—cannot withstand adversity. We seem more adapted to the heyday of life's summer, than for nearness to the blasting things of winter. Storms of opposition introduced into the high tide of our warmest experiences may, unless we are careful, destroy our spiritual beauty and beat us down.

It is our privilege to learn from the rich history of Christian experience that when God's people go to Him in prayer for fresh supplies of holy vigor, they receive it. Millions have testified that He has generously given them strength to withstand the storms of adverse circumstances that threatened to overwhelm them. I will not argue why this is, but the fact stands. Prayer involuntarily welling up in the human heart and finding expression vocally or in secret is in some way answered by the compassionate and gracious Father of us all. Do we not love Him for this?

Sir Wilfred Grenfell says, "Faith and experience alike convince me that God himself sees and answers, and His answers I never venture to criticize. It is only my part to ask. It is entirely His to give or withhold, as He knows it best." This kind of faith, not hectic but ardent, produces the physical and moral courage that the child of God needs every day. Should we not more earnestly pray for it?

Let us go boldly to Jehovah's Throne and plead for help in every time of need. Let us ask that, like the glowing bloom of the forest, our spirits may radiate Christ's wondrous love and beauty close to the chilling things of life. Let us imitate the gallant snow-flower. God gives His people soul courage. Is this not the glorious heritage of those who love His name?

San Jose, Calf.

THE CURE OUR CARE.

In life there are many incidentals, not a few accidentals, yet but one essential—to get and to keep right with God. It is narrated of Gideon Ouseley, that, when he seemed to hear a call to preach, his heart failed him because of a deep sense of his unworthiness and ignorance. Then it would rush into his mind, "Do you not know the disease?" "Yes, Lord, I do!" "And do you not know the cure?" "Yes, I do!" "Go, then, and tell them these two things—the disease and the cure; never mind the rest—the rest is only talk!"

There is a sense in which God enlightens even intellectually an unlearned man who sincerely consecrates himself to the work of the ministry, saying encouragingly, "Thine ignorance is taken away!" It is well also for those who, on entering the ministry, have had a fine educational start in the best institutions in the land, to continue to sharpen their wits, to take advantage of all possible cultural helps, and to learn how to give a reason to all who ask them concerning the faith. And yet when all is said otherwise, the fact remains that essentially the Gospel is a cure of sin, a way of salvation, and not a mere ethical system or a philosophical theory.

"The rest is only talk." This discrimination applies to all speculations of men, or meanderings of human thought, which do not serve to develop man as man, and to bring out the Godlike in him—which practically means to put it into him by grace. Evidences of the disease of sin are all about us, and of the most revolting kind. It would be a pity to discuss merely Kantian refinements or Hegelian syntheses when men are perishing in moral corruption. The "talk" has its place, discussion must go on, but, as religious workers, our special care is the cure.—Zion's Herald.

If our first thought is to get justice for ourselves, life is hardly worth living. When a man stops thinking about his "due," he is sure to be rewarded well beyond his due. If he wants his due and no more, he can get it.—Dr. Albert Hurlstone.

THE PERIL OF MIDDLE LIFE.

To divorce one's self in later years from the high ideals of youth becomes invariably the one great peril of middle life.

A man, for instance, starts out in business with lofty notions of life and of business integrity. While eager to make money, he is determined in his youthful appreciation of the true and the good that no dirty dollar shall ever touch his fingers. But after awhile he learns more about the world and how business transactions are too often carried on. He comes to see that men get money by crooked dealings, and that a dirty dollar seems to buy as much in the markets as a clean one. Then, perchance, with hesitancy at first, and later without restraint, he comes to ask himself, "Why not put away the youthful notions of inexperience and ignorance and adopt the practice of others who know the game?" Having once parted company with those early dreams of honor and honesty, he is content to play the game in a fashion that leaves not a trace of business integrity which at one time promised to become the crown of glory to his old age.

A youth just out of college begins a career of promise with the clear vision and the purposes of a statesman before his eyes. His ambition, as an idealist and statesman, is to serve his country in a manner that will bring honor to himself and for the best interests of his fellow countrymen. But eventually he learns not only that men stoop mighty low in politics, but also that a premium seems to be placed upon the fellow who will get down in the dirt. Consequently, he tramples under foot the very things of his youth that were prized most and instead of being governed by the aspirations of a statesman, drops down upon the low level of a dirty politician.

A man perchance begins life as a lawyer with high ideals for himself in this profession of honor. But after awhile he sees life and the law in a new light, flings away those high standards that at one time were sacred to him, and steps down upon the plane of a common trickster, being entirely divorced from the ideals of other and early years.

A young man aspires to the high calling of a minister of the gospel. He has been where the bush burned and with unsandaled feet has answered the call of God. By Sinai's trembling cliffs he has, with veiled face, sworn fidelity to the Commandments. Thus commissioned and equipped, he goes out to become a prophet of the Lord. But the youth learns right soon that true prophets have always seen a mighty hard time in the world; that their rewards are not crowns, but crucifixions. He learns also that whited sepulchers filled with pious pretensions are amazingly satisfactory to the multitude, and sometimes to the very elect.

Why, then, should he cling on to those delusive notions of a distant day, and to those ideals of inexperience, if not of regrettable ignorance? Why not speak those pleasant things that the world is clamoring to hear and that will bring the reward of unlimited applause? Anyhow, in the last analysis, is not the voice of the people the voice of God?

Not all men, not the majority of men, go the way indicated in the foregoing instances, but the temptation in that direction is exceedingly strong—so strong that to large numbers it becomes a peril, and not a few enter this wide gate of disaster, especially in middle life.

We talk gravely about the dangers of youth, and they are many; but these dangers are generally those resulting from inexperience or prompted by the hot blood of youth. Bad as these impulsive blunders, personal vices and unbridled crimes of the young are, they are not to be placed in the class of those deliberate tragedies enacted in middle life when men surrender to the hard and unethical forces about them.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

AMERICA'S INTEREST IN THE EVANGELIZATION OF RUSSIA.

The unfortunate breaking down of law and order in Russia, with the consequent menace to the allied cause, and to the freedom of Rumania and Persia, has not lessened the interest of American Christians in the spiritual welfare of the Russians. This is shown not only in the efforts of various religious organizations to call attention to Russia's great need in this crisis, but has a practical expression in the Russian Bible and Educational Institute, established by Rev. William Fetler in Philadelphia. This school has now one hundred students and is preparing Russians for service in their own country. A special call has been issued for conference and prayer on behalf of Russia, to meet in the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, from June 24 to 28. This call is signed by some of the best known Christian leaders of all Evangelical denominations in America. In the call the following statement is made as to the great problem of Russia's evangelization: The revolution in Russia has resulted in throwing open to the Gospel the largest country, with its largest population of white people, in the world. There are 182,000,000 people in Russia, and yet there are not as many evangelical workers there as in the city of Chicago alone. The propaganda of atheism and materialism is already assuming awful proportions. There is no time to lose. The Greek Orthodox Church is rapidly losing its grip upon the hearts of the people, and before long large masses of simple, religiously-inclined Russians may be led astray into complete infidelity. Millions of the people are looking for something different. The greatest immediate need is the printing and circulating of at least a million copies of the Russian Bible, three million copies of the New Testament and a large supply of the very best Russian evangelical literature. Then several hundred evangelists, colporteurs and Christian workers must be trained and equipped for service in Russia. A vital factor in the realization of a comprehensive plan for Russia must be the evangelization of the Russian and other Slavonic peoples in America in order that they may return to their native lands fully equipped for service.—Missionary Review of the World, June.

SOME OBSERVATIONS.

Dear Editor: I spent ten days at Lula, Miss., helping my friend, W. W. Jones, the pastor, in a meeting. While the meeting did not bring a large number of converts into the Church, there is ample evidence of the spiritual uplift of the people. Brother Jones seems to be the right man in the right place. He evidently has the confidence and appreciation of his people. His salary has been materially raised and he is pleased and so are his people, and now his third year gives promise of being his best in this splendid charge.

The past three years have brought substantial changes to the town in material growth in nice, new residences. The town now has fine artesian water. How different when I left this pastorate twenty-five years ago! We had pump water and no screens; the people then were constantly dying with malarial diseases—now they are healthy; lands are high, crops excellent, the people, many of them, getting rich. One young man came there a poor boy, working as a farm hand twenty-five years ago; some days back he bought $50,000 worth of Liberty Bonds. We have in our church at this place many men of this type in push and energy, moral, religious, liberal, and progressive. Happy is the pastor who has such a bunch of noble fellows as Jones has at Lula.

By the good offices of my friend, Lester Wilson, I was carried over the country on three different trips in his great, new car and saw more great crops of corn and cotton for the time than ever before in my life. There is great promise in this growing charge.

CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Dear Advocate: The Corinth District Conference at New Albany, June 11-13, was a delightful occasion. The presiding elder was at his best. Business was done without hurry, yet no time was wasted.

The reports of pastors were the best ever, in spite of war conditions.

"Connectionals" Selby, Sullivan, Brownlee and Gladney brought messages of cheer and hope. The Memphis Hospital was represented by Mr. J. B. Marmon.

L. W. Worsham, G. L. Jones, W. A. Wilson and S. S. Finger were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; F. E. Roy and T. B. Brewer, alternates.

Three splendid young men were licensed to preach: J. S. Maxey, J. N. Humphrey and Seamon Rhea. The latter was recommended for admission into the Annual Conference. The others will go to college.

THE LATEST TESTIMONY AGAINST DRINK.

Let us be done with even the slightest doubt regarding the deleterious effect of intoxicating drink upon the human body and mind. Occasionally, at this late day, we read in the literature sent out by the liquor power faint attempts to justify the use of alcohoics as a vitalizer of energy, a builder of tissue, etc. Though few reputable publications defend distilled liquors to-day, many will obliquely and some openly say a generous word for malt. Mr. Hearst has thrown the weight of his papers in this scale. Of late, however, even he is soft-pedaling. Once in a long while a discountenanced physician can be purchased to offer testimony as the liquor power may dictate; but the day has forever passed when a man who values his reputation dares champion, even conditionally, the use of liquor in health or in sickness. We desire to give the words of Dr. Arthur Dean Bevan, the newly elected president of the American Medical Association, in his inaugural address delivered at Chicago last week before the greatest body of physicians in the world, and by them heartily applauded. We consider this deliverance as near the truth in the case as humankind has yet arrived, and offer it as a sort of final statement that should silence smaller voices in this day of trial and testing:

"There can be no doubt of the injurious effects of alcoholic drinks on both the physical and mental well-being of our population. There can be no doubt that the greatest single factor we can control in the interests of the public health of the nation would be the elimination of alcoholic drink.

"In the slow evolution of civilization many great wrongs persisted for centuries because people had become so accustomed to them that they were accepted as matters of course. They became so intrenched that it required centuries of education or a revolution to extirpate or right them.

"Government by autocratic power and divine right without the consent of the governed has been tolerated. Slavery with its horrors was defended. The unequal rights of women went unquestioned.

"Among these great wrongs, too long tolerated, none has done more injury to mankind than drink. And science and education should eliminate not only the plagues and epidemics, but also the curse of drink from the world.

"I want to plead for the united action of the organized medical profession of this country to secure protection by law against the injury that drink is doing to our people, not as a political measure, but as the most important public health measure that could be secured. In this crisis, when we and our Allies are fighting not only for ourselves, but also for humanity and civilization, we must organize the entire nation in the most efficient way possible, and this cannot be done without eliminating drink."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

WHEN GOD IS ALL IN ALL.

Our pilgrimage, long as it may be, or short, if we have walked in Christ, will leave us by the throne of God; our partial knowledge if we have looked upon all things in Christ, will be lost in open sight; our little lives perfected purified, harmonized in him whom we have trusted, will become in due order parts of the one divine life, when God is all in all.—Westcott.

EDUCATION, THE CHURCH AND THE RURAL HOME.

The twentieth century, that dawned with such high hopes for mankind, speedily saw some of its fondest illusions shattered. It was a proud legacy of 1900 that science had outflanked Mars; another that great business interests would frustrate the war lords; that peace resolutions-in-convention-assembled would dyke the flood tide; and, most of all, that education, reaching its ne plus ultra in Germany, would stay the wrack. All proved impotent! The financiers thrived on it; a dripping sword hacked through the parchments; science became its supine tool, and the gilt veneer of civilization slipped off the visage of a hideous Ichthyornis. To make sure that we shall not repeat the evolution, and end again where we began, we may well ask what brand of education is to be the savior of democracy?

In some of our educational systems we have taken great pride. Ideals have ranged from the classical to the bread-and-butter type, leaving public opinion in a state of flux over the possibility of a cross-bred combination. But where are we landed? Take results on the physical side. In the United States, Provost Marshal General Crowder reports 23.7 per cent physically unfit for the military draft. An official return to the Canadian Government in Class I, under the Military Service Act, unmarried men between the ages of twenty and thirty-five, shows that out of 373,184 registered there were found 118,772, or over 30 per cent, medically unfit. In the earlier Canadian enrollments large numbers fell out, incapable for the strenuous service to which they were called, accounting no doubt for a great deal of the disappointing shortage. The go-as-you-please way of upbringing the rising generation has produced large numbers of erratic weaklings. Educationists themselves concede failure. A convention, representing the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association, the Massachusetts Superintendents' Association, the New England Superintendents' Association and the American Institute of Instruction, meeting in Boston not long ago, admitted that the educational institutions of the country had woefully neglected the physical development of the youth, and urged legislation that would insure well-rounded, systematic physical training for boys and girls. As a corollary, they resolved in favor of the introduction into grammar and high school curricula of agricultural courses from a national and international viewpoint, and elementary instruction in farming and gardening.

In the next place the alarming revelations of the prevalence of vice in large Canadian centres of population, coupled with the softening luxuries of town life, re-emphasize the menace to Canada of the abnormal growth of urban at the expense of rural communities, to which school systems have been a large contributing factor. Rural schools in the Province of Ontario, for example, dwindled into feeders to the high schools, which in turn sent on the grist to the universities and the "professions." Now, by means of school fairs, summer courses and otherwise, we are struggling to repair the damage. Conjointly with the fostering of town industrialism, the country has made costly efforts in so-called national development by importing population which rapidly eddied into the cities and towns. War and the rising cost of living, which hits the man on the land also, have driven home the seriousness of the situation to thoughtful minds, but the masses of town people are evidently not yet seriously concerned, and are trusting to luck, strikes, or what not to pull them through.

Even more serious than the shortcoming of the schools, judged by physical and rural life standards, has been negligence in dealing with the scholar as an immortal being of unlimited capacities. Unless education recognizes the spiritual element and the nurture of true citizenship, no matter what material efficiency it may promote, it will break down at the very point where it should be strongest. Dr. S. P. Cadman, an eminent American divine, who is anything but a faddist, has lately voiced a strongly growing conviction that as a national safeguard religion should have its proper recognition in the schools of the people. These are heart-searching times, and it may be opportune for the Christian Church to ask to what extent it may be responsible for barriers in the way of religious education.

The Young Men's Christian Association has given the world an inspiring object-lesson in unified adaptability to meet human needs in war time. That so many American pastors have gone over-seas in its service is significant. We are hearing a deal about preparedness and leadership in the spiritual conflict. Has the Church risen to that surrender of self-seeking and largeness of aim that will quicken the souls of young men and women, and hearten them for her undertakings? Are her forces sufficiently Paul-like and mobile to cope with the issues of the day? Are the curricula of our ministerial training camps adapting themselves to equip for spiritual, intellectual and community leadership? Are they supplying that knowledge of rural and urban conditions that will enable graduates to identify themselves with the lives of the people? Practically all probationers begin their ministry on rural charges, and those who gravitate to town charges devote ten or fifteen years at least on country stations, which far outnumber urban charges and the membership of which, in numbers and intelligence, calls for all the gifts and graces the pulpit can enlist to nurture the life from which the best leadership of the nation is reinforced, and upon which the virility of the ministry itself so largely depends. It is not sufficient that the candidate shall have been country-born, because in a scholastic-urban atmosphere he gets out of touch and understanding with its needs, and even fails to vivify his discourse with the vocabulary of rural life and processes, as did the Master Teacher by the fields of Galilee nineteen hundred years ago. Need we wonder if, under the terminology of theological cold storage, older hearers become somnolent and younger ones yield to the literary charms of Onward!

If young people observe their leader packing his club bag at the earliest opportunity to "better himself," they will surely arrive at certain conclusions, despite all fine talk about the advantages of country life. We are not driven to the necessity of making the pulpit a farmers' institute nor a recreation bureau. Heaven help us if that were the case. But it will immensely fortify pulpit leadership if the occupant discloses real sympathy with people who discern very quickly if he appreciates the soul of youth and understands the extent to which knowledge, capital and love of occupation make success on the farm possible. Years ago it became a by-word that school teaching was degraded by being made a mere stepping-stone. Will it not be the best of wisdom to preserve the country church from a like predicament by adopting such measures as will consolidate its forces and resources, preserve its gains and maintain the integrity of the rural home, which in vital respects remains the mainstay of Canadian democracy?—"Observer," in The Christian Guardian.

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

ARE THE JEWS GROWING MORE SPIRITUAL?

By Rev. C. M. Chapman, Ph.D., D.D.

Going down a street in Chicago, I saw a great steel-framed building, ruined by fire. I said, "What a majestic ruin!" In walking on Fifth Avenue, New York City, I view the demolition of a great church building. I said, "What a sad reflection!" So it is with the Jew. The means of the transmission of the religion of the world will not accept its blessing. A great titanic force is locked by the chain of unbelief. Hebrew scholars are beginning to see the illogical attitude of "Israel of God."

There have been long lapses of time when Jewish life was as still as the realm of death. Science teaches that there is a time in the meeting of opposite forces when there is absolute neutrality—then the greater force gains to overcoming. The Jews recognize that the coming of Jesus Christ was the occasion of the loss of world-control in religious affairs. The short-sighted rulers of the Jews thought the crucifixion of Christ would end the competitive issue, but it only gave an additional power to, and was the means of immortalizing, the life of Jesus in Hebrew history. For twenty centuries Judaism has been in the shambles of its own delusion. Its decadence is but an incident in the fall of the Roman Empire, its life but the reflection of its once glorious past.

Judaism is beginning to awaken. There is not in the Hebrew of to-day that former expression of serious sadness—sometimes interpreted psychologically to mean "I wish I could believe Jesus to be Messiah." I am much surprised at the trend of Hebrew thought as is expressed by its philosophers and teachers.

I assume that the president of the only Hebrew college for exclusive rabbinical training in America—as far as I am informed—is the author of the only modern book of systematic theology of Judaism. I speak of Dr. K. Kohler, president of Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, Ohio, who tries in a masterly way to re-interpret Judaism, once a powerful factor in the development of religious thought, to mean only a sociological fitness of man to the plan of creation as regards one nation to another. He easily discloses in his book, "Jewish Theology," a pronounced German rationalism. It is not my purpose to review the book, however profitable it might be, but to give to the reader some observations on Judaism as it is taught to-day.

Dr. Kohler asserts that potential salvation of the prophets had no allusion to eternal life, but a correct relation to this life; that the doctrine of the Trinity is but the pagan idea of polytheism; that immortality is but an illusion of sincere desire; that Messiah is to come and his coming will only restore the social position of the Jew to his lost estate of leadership among the nations in the successful contest for mastery; that the essence of religion is not the belief in God but the doing good in acts of charity, thus interpreted as the quintessence of human ethics; that most of the longing and aspiring to the life of the hereafter is but moral weakness that disqualifies for the real issues of this life.

In these words we can easily trace rationalism, particularly of the old German school, being reserved in a new manner. And can we say of its devotees, "The last is worse than the first?"

"A man without a country," is sad, and a "people without a God," is pathetic. How may we aid the Jews? Will our social life win him to our God? Will our commercial relations draw him near God? Is his state of religious conscientiousness improving? Is he not taking our worldly wisdom without our God? Is he not joining the ranks of the enemy of our God and waging a war against the foundation of our religion and Christian institutions—denying the cardinal virtues of our spiritual life and protesting in the name of his conscience against the basal principles on which rest our civiiization?

The future is not very encouraging as to the way in which we had best deal with the problem. We are sure that a sympathetic interest in the Jew is our first duty. But this does not mean a toleration of his blasphemy concerning the Divine Son of God. We should treat the Jew as a man among men, invite him to our churches and schools and expect him to attend—not allow him to assume that he is not a part of the social and religious community. We should never stress his commercial importance, as this has materially weakened his moral standing already.

The Jew's salvation will never come through "converted nation," but it will be the result of "hand picked" fruit when we have done our full duty. His importance makes this our imperative duty and of prime importance that we assume this task at once.

Do you want the Jew converted? Then "be converted yourself."

Is not the great gulf that is fixed between the Jew and Christian the sin of both, rather than the sin of either?

This work has been very successful wherever tried—may we try it wherever our friend the Jew is with us.

SCIENCE AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By Robert Stewart.

The phenomenal evolution of society has not left Jesus Christ in its wake. Nothing is more evident to-day than the fact that the teaching of the carpenter's son which offered leadership and a solution of the individual problem of his little band of disciples in Judea, is also comprehensive enough to meet the complicated needs of the twentieth century and lead the nations out of the labyrinth of economic and political difficulty in which we now find ourselves.

In fact scientific development has all been in the direction of the teachings of Christ, but this development has been especially manifest in the direction of His foreign mission program. Our great authority for our enterprise is the command of Jesus, but we like to feel also that we have a scientific basis and apology for carrying the Gospel to the nations.

We find an illustration of this fact in commercial science and economics. The primitive beginnings of this department of human activity showed the fisherman exchanging his catch with the hunter for his game. He in turn made bargains with the farmer and altogether they traded with the artisan for his skill. And from this humble starting point commercial science began to raise its head until now it strides over the earth and penetrates every nation to serve an exacting race which levies upon the limits of geography to supply its daily need. Even in these times of war and blockade we may seldom enter a home without finding there the produce of six or a dozen nations. I enter your parlor and see mahogany that once looked out upon the peons and the oppressed from its native forests of South America. I look about your home and see silk from Japan, embroidery from Korea and tapestries and blankets that have woven into them all the beauty of an Indian imagination. We go into the dining room and sit down to a repast that has demanded coffee from Brazil, tea from China, spices from India, sugar from Cuba and oils from France and Italy. And then I get into your automobile and ride to the railway station under the power of gasoline that came from the wells of Mexico.

The development of medical science has also proved that the life and obligation of the individual extends to the limits of the earth. A man who has loudly disclaimed any responsibility toward the distant and strange nations is taken sick with a disease that means death, when his physician brings to his bedside a remedy that nature has contributed from that same distant country which he despised, and his life is saved. A great providence has thus distributed not only the comforts but the necessities of life so that the nations might lean mutually upon one another.

The social and political science has proved our contention. In those days when the primeval man walked in his forests he was selfish and alone; until one day he saw a woman whose hair was just the right hue and whose eyes were just the right color, and he loved her and took her by the hair and dragged her to his cave and he began to develop socially. And one day there came into his home a midget of a man who didn't weigh more than eight pounds, and with a fist no larger than a chestnut, but with those tiny fingers he pushed down the walls of his father's selfish exclusivism and gave the man a big horizon in which to live. And then the tribal idea grew and enlarged until the nation was born. But here we have camped for centuries and there has been no statemanship big enough to see larger things than its own country or empire. But about twenty years ago Uncle Sam, the most conservative and exclusive of the crowd, looked out of his window one morning and saw a basket on his doorstep. He went out to investigate and he heard a baby crying in that basket. He listened, and he heard another baby cry, and he listened again—and he heard a third baby cry. There were triplets left on his hands and their names were Cuba, Porto Rico and Filipino. Triplets, and all girls! This was a trying situation for an old bachelor to find himself in, and many of his advisors told him to turn them over to baby farmers and to those who made a business of raising babies. But the old gentleman rallied to his responsibilities and accepted these children. They have grown to be splendid young women now and are much courted, but they love Uncle Sam like a father. And they in turn have benefited him in pushing down the walls of his isolation and giving him a world idea. They have been one of the providential factors in leading us to see that even as the tribal idea had to give way to the national, so the old spirit of nationalism must give way to internationalism. In harmony with this thought President Wilson, one of the world's advanced thinkers in political science, has announced in substance that the unit of patriotism is no longer the nation, but the world. Thus after millenniums of toilsome induction, political science has at last arrived at the idea which Jesus revealed to his disciples two thousand years ago when He declared His missionary program. For internationalism in politics means foreign missions in the vocabulary of the Church of God. "A nation cannot live to itself alone," declares the voice of science to-day in tones of discovery. But that is the basis upon which the Church has been working for centuries. Men are fighting to-day upon the fields of France for internationalism, but since the days of the Apostle Paul the Church has been making the fight upon the field of foreign missions. For centuries we have offered up our martyred dead who have fought this battle upon a plane that is purified. That was the plane where Jesus intended this battle to be fought and won. But we only sent a few when we should have sent an army. We gave thousands when we should have given millions. We didn't enter this fight with Pentecostal vigor and enterprise and now our boys and our billions must be offered up in France to-day.

AN OPPORTUNITY.

The statement below from the Superintendent of the Mississippi Orphans' Home needs no explanation, and it should require no exhortation. We sincerely trust some large-hearted layman or some society of the Church will write to Brother Lewis at once and put in his hands the amount of money asked for. It will be an investment that will pay dividends forever.

Dear Brother Carley: The first of this month we had one of our girls to graduate from the Jackson High School. She stood well in her classes. She is very anxious for a college education, and I am equally anxious to give it to her. This is an appeal to the Methodists of the State for the means to give this girl an A. B. diploma from one of our schools. Possibly one of these schools has a scholarship open for her, but this will not be enough to pay all her expenses; it will take from $100 to $150 per year to put her through college.

Will you please give this fact publicity through the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and possibly some layman will be moved to do this for this girl.

Fraternally yours,

B. F. LEWIS, Superintendent

DURANT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Durant District Conference met at Ackerman, Miss., on June 11, and was in session two and one half days. The presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Mitchell, presided over the business sessions of the conference, and while he at no time seemed in a hurry, yet there was no hitch in the dispatch of business, and everything ran on scheduled time.

The reports of the various charges and pastors showed that the district is steadily improving, and in all lines there was a little advance over the reports of last year, while in some there was great progress. From the start, the chief emphasis, throughout the conference, was placed on the spiritual side of life. Helpful spiritual sermons were preached by Brothers Carlisle, Goudelock, Gordon, Jaco, Cunningham and Shearer. One lady, at the close of the conference, remarked that the conferenee seemed more like an old-fashioned camp meeting than a conference. Surely this ought to be true of all of our conferences. Certainly the various pastors returned to their respective works with their souls aflame with the desire for souls, and were all more fully consecrated to God than before. The laymen who were present seemed also to have caught a new vision.

Hon. J. Lem Seawright was elected District Lay Leader. P. Williams, F. A. Howell, J. L. Seawright, R. E. Wilburn, J. A. Toler, E. I. Doty, J. A. Meek, and C. L. Oakes were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference. J. B. Streater and J. T. Moore were elected alternates. Carl L. Oakes, Jesse F. Watson, and William A. Langley were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. B. P. Jaco, J. T. McCafferty, E. H. Cunningham, and T. H. Mills were elected to serve as licensing committee in the interim of the conference.

The conference accepted an invitation from Louisville to meet there next year. If, however, the delegates had voted according to their inclinations they would have unanimously chosen Ackerman as next year's meeting place, for never was a conference better entertained by a town than was ours. All, both delegates and home people, decided that this was the best conference in the history of the district for many years.

WORK OR FIGHT.

As a war measure, the "work or fight" law is a great success. Loafing is an economic crime if not an actual sin, and anything that will abolish it is commendable. We may hope to see soon the idle rich and the idle poor busily engaged at some productive task. There is work enough now for all, and to spare. We have an idea that the plan will work so well during the war that it will be carried over into peace times. It ought to be, at any rate.

THE ITALIAN VICTORY.

The Italians have greatly encouraged the Allies and correspondingly depressed the Central Powers, by the magnificent way in which they hurled back the Austrians in their recent offensive movement. It seems to have been a rout for the Austrians. The Italians captured thousands of prisoners, and great military stores. It is believed that this defeat will intensify the dissatisfaction that has already shown itself in Austria and will strengthen the desire of that country for peace.

EXIT NICHOLAS ROMANOFF.

The report that former Emperor Nichólas has suffered death at the hands of the Bolsheviki troops seems to be authenticated by dispatches from various sources in Europe. Whether the report is true or not, the fact remains that Russia no longer is in subjection to a hereditary monarch, and is not likely again to become so. Democracy in some form will doubtless become a reality, sooner or later, for the 182,000,000 people who formerly submitted to a despotism. The world today is not what it used to be.

SHIPPING LOSSES LESS.

The British Admiralty's statement of tonnage losses for May due to enemy action and marine risk totals 355,694 tons. This seems to be heavy, but the loss in May of last year was 630,336 tons. The Huns themselves must realize by this time that they cannot win the war by their submarine campaign. And our gallant soldiers in connection with those of our Allies are demonstrating the fact that they cannot win it by a campaign on land.

SHALL THE DRAFT AGES BE EXTENDED?

There is persistent agitation in favor of extending the draft age limits both ways, making them 20 and 40 years. Secretary of War Baker, and General March, chief of staff, have expressed the opinion that such legislation is not needed at this time. However, the determination of the American people to do all in their power to hasten the winning of the war is not to be shaken, and when, in the judgment of the authorities, it becomes necessary to extend the limits, there will be no holding back. There is a strong feeling that bachelors of 30 to 40 should be called before married men of 21 to 30. The question now is one of expediency only. Patriots of every age are willing to make the supreme sacrifice to win the victory.

IT IS COMING.

The Georgia Legislature has just adopted the constitutional amendment providing for national prohibition. On June 27 the senate agriculture committee of Congress agreed to an amendment to the emergency agricultural appropriation bill providing for national prohibition. Under the amendment the manufacture and sale of whiskey for consumption in the United States would be prohibited after June 30, 1919, for the duration of the war, and the manufacture and sale of beer three months after the approval of the bill by President Wilson. If the recommendation of the committee is adopted by the Senate, national prohibition as a war measure will become a fact. That will be worth a great deal. But what will be good as a war measure will also be good as a peace measure. The friends of prohibition must not lose sight of the main issue.

HE TOLD THE TRUTH.

Several days ago Dr. Richard von Kuehlman, the German Foreign Secretary, made a speech to the Reichstag in which he said that a military decision of the war is impossible and that peace must come by negotiation. He also indicated his belief that the end is not in sight. It would naturally be supposed that the Foreign Secretary would deliver such a speech only after it had received the approval of the Kaiser, but, judging by the reports that have come to this country, the speech has created consternation throughout Germany, and it is likely that Dr. Kuelhmann will resign. This is simply another illustration of the old adage, "The truth hurts." The German people have been led by their rulers to believe that there could be no question as to their certain and early triumph; now to be told by a high dignitary that they may not hope for it, is more than they can understand. The truth will dawn upon them after awhile.

INCREASED TAXATION NECESSARY.

Secretary McAdoo has indicated very clearly his opinion that an increase in taxation is the best way to meet the financial situation brought about by the war. The estimated cash expenditures to be made by the Government during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, amount to $24,000,000,000. Secretary McAdoo's recommendation is that approximately one-third of this amount be raised by taxation and the balance by loans. This will avoid the evils of high interest rates and a general currency inflation. The increased taxation will apply especially to war profits, incomes, and luxuries. It would seem to a mere layman in financial matters that this is the wise thing to do. Interest has to be paid on bonds, and ultimately the bonds themselves have to be retired. If the American people were greatly burdened by the present rate of taxation, it might be well to distribute the cost of the war among succeeding generations. But even a casual observer in our cities must be impressed by the fact that money seems to be plentiful and luxuries are greatly in demand. No individual has a right to enjoy luxuries till the necessities of all have been supplied. Let us pay for this war as nearly as we can as we go along.

MINISTERS' SONS.

Mr. Wilson is a minister's son. Mr. Hughes the same. So was President Cleveland. A writer to the Evening Post points out that one-fifth of the names in the Hall of Fame are ministers' sons; that in "Who's Who in America" there are nearly eighteen times as many names of ministers' sons as the normal proportion calls for, and that in the (British) Dictionary of National Biography the children of clergymen number 1270, of lawyers 510, of physicians 350.

Max and Crystal Eastman are minister's children. Indeed, it is said that both their parents were ministers, so possibly ministerial derivation may be overdone like anything else.

How many ministers' sons acquire distinction in their father's calling and how many get it in secular pursuits is not disclosed in accessible figures, but apparently it is mostly in secular life that ministers' sons excel.

Why?

For one thing, because they have to. Most ministers are poor, and accumulate very little money. But they can usually educate their children. They bring them up to be self-supporting. They have more time than most laymen to train them, and more than average social pull in starting them in business or in professional life.

Much is expected of ministers' families out of a small provision. To grow up a minister's son is a discipline. To those who come through it other things come easy, and that is doubtless the main reason why ministers' sons get on.

The chances of birth are formidable in any case, but ambitious souls awaiting incarnation are advised to try to break into ministers' families. They may not like it, but statistics indicate that if will do them good.—Life.

THE TEST OF OUR CHURCH.

By Bishop Collins Denny.

The Ceutenary of American Methodist Missions will put our Church to the test. We have been very slow in meeting our obligations to peoples of other countries. Every one of our mission fields needs re-enforcement in men and material. If at this time the Church will respond to the call of those who have been placed in charge of this important work, and will contribute the workers, and the means to support the workers, she will not only be meeting a plain duty; she will receive perhaps the greatest spiritual uplift that Methodism among us has ever known.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

At the last session of the Macon District Conference, upon the recommendation of the committee on local preachers, the Conference appointed a committee to prepare a course of reading for the local preachers of that district. This it seems to us is a movement in the right direction. Of course, the committee to arrange the course will have in mind that many of these ministers can not give a great deal of time to a course of reading, for they are as a general rule very busy men. A heavy course would defeat the object the originators of the plan had in mind. The committee will also have a care that such a course will not be confined to those local ministers who have been fortunate enough to have had high educational advantages. But to even a man of meager education one well chosen volume will often open a new realm to the reader and whet the appetite for more intellectual satisfactions. The Bible becomes a new book to us when wiser men unfold to us its wealth of riches. We should all remember that the flowers have honey in them, but it requires the work of the bees to bring it where we can get hold of it. Educated men make no truth, but they can bring it to us so that we can take it all the more readily and digest it more thoroughly.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

God desires an intelligent affection on the part of His children. The wings of devotion must always be the wings of thought!—Dr. Albert Hurlstone.

ASHMAN VERSUS COBBLER.

Tbe Industrial class sewed primly. For each little girl on a muslin square a Maltese Cross was drawn in pencil. When the little seamstress had learned to run her red thread with fine, even stitches around the outline of the cross, she was given a star to outline. Her progress was seen as she added cross, star, octagon and circle in red and blue to the little pile of completed work in the bottom of a calico bag.

The atmosphere seemed a little strained; the greetings less buoyant, and the chatter of girlish voices was hushed. The teacher glanced around in surprise. Jennie was crying—she rubbed her eyes now and then to keep back the tears, but must have recourse to the patched apron. Vindetta drove her needle through the muslin with a belligerent air and yanked the thread as though it had especially offended her. She tossed her head now and then. The other girls glanced slyly at Vindetta, then at Jennie.

"She, she talked mean to me. She, she—"

"Why, Vindetta!" admonished the teacher; but Vindetta tossed her head and looked witheringly at her weeping neighbor. "Vindetta, what did you say that hurt Jennie's feelings so?" questioned the teacher.

"She said she was better'n I am," wailed Jennie, "and my clothes were old."

"Then, too," insisted Vindetta, "she wears patched dresses—and her folks—" her tossing head spoke volumes—"my folks are better'n her folks."

Jennie sobbed—Vindetta glanced about vindictively. The other girls were enjoying the scene.

"Well, Jennie, what does your father do, dear, to earn a living for your mother and you?"

"Oh," mourned Jennie, "he's only a shoemaker."

"Well, that's a good respectable trade. Vindetta, wbat does your father do?"

Vindetta sat up. "My father's the ashman!" she proudly replied.

Even so do our distinctions appear in the sight of God.—Ellen Coughlin Keeler, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

WHAT WAS DONE WITH A PENNY.

"What good would a penny do?" Richard was always asking. "I'll just spend this one for candy, and maybe the next one I'll put in the mite-box. If I had lots of money I'd like to give big, shining dollars, but a penny doesn't count. When I'm a man I'll give lots of money."

"But if all the boys spend their pennies, where will the offering be?" asked his mother. "Somebody must save, and you should be willing to do your part."

"I would like to, mamma, but a penny isn't anything," said Richard. "I want one of those pretty candies awful bad."

"Richard, I wish you would take this penny and run over to Miss Gray for one of those slips she promised me," said Mrs. Snow, seeming to forget about the mite-box. "She sells them for a penny aplece, and I want to start one."

Richard was very glad to have his mother forget about the mite-box, and he could buy the red candy on his way for the plant, so he ran whistling down tbe street. "Now get one of those old tomato cans in the back yard and punch three holes in tbe bottom of it with a nail," said his mother when he came back with the geranium branch and bis mouth full of candy.

It was a short task to plant and water the slip, as she directed him, and very soon Richard was out at play, and had forgotten all about the plant. He did not think of it again until his mother asked him some weeks later to hunt up a cracked stone jar in which to transplant it, and then he only noticed that it was growing rapidly.

"To-day's the date the juniors take their mite-boxes to the meeting, mamma," said Richard one day in September. "Do you know where mine is?"

"Yes; it is in your closet, dear—just where you put it when your teacher gave it to you."

Richard brought out the dusty thing and shook it hard, but it was empty. "I declare, I forgot all about it," he said. "Mamma, won't you please loan me a quarter to put into it?"

"No, Richard; you know papa doesn't allow borrowing."

"But I'll have to go with an empty box, mamma, and all the others will have money. I wish I hadn't spent everything for candy. I will do better next time. But I never had more than a penny at a time, and a penny doesn't count."

"Richard, do you remember that penny slip you bought from Miss Gray last spring? That was your penny that you lost, and I wanted to show you what could he done with it. Bring me that little red box in my sewing basket."

Richard brought out the red box, and when it was opened a number of silver and copper coins rolled out. "Do you remember that all summer you have been potting little slips and selling them when they grew strong and thrifty? This money is all yours for the mite-box, and the plant is still left."

"Forty-three cents!" cried Richard, counting the money. "And all from one penny! I'll never say again, mamma, that a penny doesn't amount to anything."—Sunday School Times.

THE RUNAWAY MINUTES.

Fifteen of the queerest clock-faced little men, each with one long and one short hand, scurried up the mountain side. Just behind them ran Kate, all out of breath and calling to them to stop. "J-just wait a m-minute, please, Mr. Minutes!" she panted rather foolishly as she stumbled along after them up the steep mountain.

But the strange little minute men only waved their long hands at her and ran the faster. Soon they reached a huge cave in the top of the mountain, and this they entered. Here sat an old man, very, very old, with a long, white beard and a sickle in his hand. His name was Father Time.

"Father," said one of the minutes (for such they were), "we have run away from Kate Moore because she lost us."

"Yes," hoomed the voice of Father Time, and it sounded like a thousand clocks all striking at once. "Yes, and how did it happen?"

"She was practicing on the piano," piped out one of the fifteen minutes.

"And she stopped to read a fairy story," interrupted another minute man, grinning and hiding his clocklike face behind his short hand.

"And she lost us—those fifteen practice minutes," said a third. "So we decided to run away."

"And now she'll never find us, never catch us never, never, never!" they all sang together, dancing around in a circle.

Father Time stroked his long, white beard and looked sober. Then he clapped his hands together once, and a tiny man, so small that he could just be seen, appeared and bowed low before Father Time. "How can I serve you?" he asked, and his voice sounded like the "Tick-tick, tick-tick" of a watch.

"Little second," said the old man, "go call fifty-nine of your brothers and bring that careless Kate to me."

Kate felt herself being lifted up into the air and suddenly dropped in the center of Father Time's cave. She saw him raise his sickle as he said sternly: "Lost time can never be regained. Go, my minute men, and hide yourselves forever."

Then as the sickle descended toward Kate she screamed. There she sat on the piano stool in her own home, rubbing her eyes. A fairy story book lay open in her lap, and her neglected music had fallen to the floor. Up came the music, and down went the storybook. "I'll lose no more time today," said Kate aloud, "for I'm quite worn out trying to catch those runaway minutes." Annie Dickey Jones.

WORKING ON SUNDAY.

The lady of the house was hurriedly finishing some work neglected the day before, when the old negro butler happened to pass by.

"Miss Ginnie! Miss Ginnie!" he remonstrated. "You shore is breaking the Sabbath day!"

"But Uncle Clay," she argued, "the ox is in the ditch, and—"

"Miss Ginnie," broke in the old man, "that ox ain't nothing but a stumbling-block for folks to hide behinst. The Scripture do say if he is in the ditch to pull him out; but it don't nowhere say to push him in on Sat'day so as to have the chance to pull him out on Sunday."—Selected.

Editorial

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

"Be sure you are right, then go ahead." Whoever said that said a mighty good thing. The reputed author was not delivering a discourse on morals, but, with a begging of his pardon, we may make that application of it. It may be well to do a little analyzing of this bit of advice in order that we may have a better understanding of its meaning.

"Be sure you are RIGHT." Philosophers have spent not a little time discussing the meaning of that one word, and they never exercised their brains about a more important subject. Convenience is a popular word and one that runs trippingly from the tongue. And it fits in amazingly well with many of our humors and attitudes. Expediency is the jewel of many miser-like minds, and measures the value of all that is said and done. If Paul had known how many hypocrisies his "all things to all men" would be made to cover he might have used a different expression. Hypocrisy is the refuge of mean minds. Many of us might be better off if we would hammer these two words into small bits and scatter them to the four winds—or as many winds as we could find blowing. RIGHT is the thing we need to center on. By the side of RIGHT, convenience and expediency are as insignificant as a speck of dust trailing in the mighty orbit of the planets. Right is the imperishable fabric of which character and life are made.

"Be SURE you are right." The world seems to be chock-full of men who have no definite ideas or convictions about the most important things of life. It is not wise to assume a know-all air; but things are done by people who are SURE they are right. Grit is a most desirable element in the composition of a man. It enables him to dare, to struggle, to suffer, to hold on to the end. But who can do these things unless he is SURE he is right? There is a time for weighing and deciding. There is a time for throwing indecision to the winds and fixing on a course that means something and leads somewhere. Mark the man with the square jaw and the set eye and the determined way of speaking. He is SURE he is right.

"Then go ahead." "Be sure you are right"—then stand still? That does not sound well. "Be sure you are right"—then back away? That does not sound well. "Be sure you are right—then GO AHEAD." That is the only thing that fits. One of the great needs of this day, especially in moral and religious movements, is aggressiveness. Some of the old fields of action have been trodden upon so long, that almost their only product is dust. Most of us can stir up that. But how many of us are treading virgin soil, burdened with infinite possibilities, bedewed with the promise of glorious achievements? The history of a thousand years, and the myriad voices of the present, and the outstretched hands of the future are pleading with us to GO AHEAD.

The study ends as it began: "BE SURE YOU ARE RIGHT—THEN GO AHEAD."

CONSTRUCTIVE PREACHING.

The hardest task that confronts the preacher today is, in our humble judgment, to do genuinely constructive preaching. It is easy enough to criticize and tear down; it is so easy that a good many people seem to be spending most of their time at it. There is a plenty of proposed programs and tentative outlines of action to reform a thousand demoralized worlds—if they would work. "Of making many books there is no end," and much of the studying we are doing nowadays is, indeed, "a weariness of the flesh." This is certainly no indictment of the active interest that is being shown on all sides in the acute problems of to-day; it is merely a recognition of the fact that there is danger of our becoming bewildered and lost in the multitudinous cross-currents of life.

The Church needs, and the world needs, men who are able to clear away the debris of demolished systems and dig down to the solid foundations of truth as they are laid in the Word of God, and so to build upon them that a safe dwelling-place may be erected for all men. Preachers are needed like the skilled servants of the Government, who go into the forests and select the giant tress that can stand the mighty shock of wind and wave out on the broad ocean; saplings cannot stand the test.

This is no small task. It will take all that heart and brain can give. But it is worth while. Men to-day want something to build on. They want to hear ringing out from the pulpit messages that are clear to their minds and comforting to their hearts and satisfying to their souls. They are not wanting pleasing platitudes; they are wanting the everlasting principles of truth. They are not wanting merely ornaments for a life; they are wanting the materials out of which they may make a life. Men need constructive preaching. Let us do our consecrated best to give it to them.

SOME SIMPLE RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.

An unreasonably large part of the Editor's time is taken up in putting manuscripts into proper shape for the typesetters. This is due to illegible writing, errors in spelling, punctuating, capitalizing, paragraphing, and the like. We are perfectly willing to help those who do not know any better; but we do not feel that we should be called upon to correct errors that are due solely to indifference and carelessness. An observance by correspondents of the following simple rules will very greatly lighten our burdens:

1. Write on only one side of the paper.
2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise, use a good quality of black ink.
3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least an inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together.
4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly.
5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper.

The observance by our correspondents of these simple rules will cause Editor and typesetters alike to rise up and call them blessed.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We have seen the announcement in the Central Methodist that Bishop James Cannon, Jr., will make his home in San Antonio, Texas.

In recognition of a handsome contribution to the Red Cross Fund in the recent campaign, the Bogalusa Methodist Sunday school has been presented with a beautiful "100%" wall chart.

Dr. C. C. Selecman, of the Los Angeles Conference, has been elected field secretary of our War Work Commission, and Dr. John R. Nelson, of Dallas, Texas, has been elected camp secretary.

Those who have access to the Texas Christian Advocate should read those inimitable letters by Abe Mulkey. They are full of quaint sayings and ridiculous turns of thought—but they have a point.

According to the Christian Advocate (Nashville), Rev. Clarence B. Strouse, the well-known evangelist, recently died in Virginia. Some years ago he held a number of very successful meetings in our territory.

"The Wesson charge is moving along nicely," says Rev. J. W. Thompson, the pastor. That is no news to those who know Brother Thompson. He has a way of looking after the interests of the Church wherever he is.

Dr. J. T. Sawyer, who is always ready to respond to calls for ministerial service, preached for our Epworth congregation last Sunday morning, and at Carrollton Avenue in the evening. He reported good services at both places.

The Editor regrets being out of the office when Rev. R. H. Bamburg, our pastor at Oak Grove La., called on Wednesday of last week. He was on his way to the seashore Divinity School where we had the pleasure of seeing him later.

Rev. H. B. Perritt and wife, of Abbeville, La., were callers at the Advocate office last week. They were on their way to spend a short vacation with relatives at Wesson, Miss. The Editor regrets that he was not in the office when they called.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions recently sent in: Rev. A. A. Simms, Carthage, Miss., 3; Rev. A. J. Davis, Daleville, Miss., 2; Rev. C. E. Downer, Petal, Miss., 2.

In a conversation with Rev. Robert Selby, Commissioner of Emory University for Mississippi, we learned that his work is progressing encouragingly. It could hardly be otherwise, with the ability and hard work that Brother Selby has brought to his task.

Rev. L. I. McCain, of Hammond, La., and Rev. Alonzo Early, of Amite, La., took an active part in the war savings stamps campaign in Tangipahoa Parish, according to information coming to this office. We know these brethren are always active in every good work.

The Editor acknowledges a pleasant call from Rev. E. L. Alford, of Centerville, Miss., and Rev. R. F. Harrell, of Waterproof, La., on Tuesday of last week. They were on their way to the Seashore Divinity School. They reported progress in their respective charges.

Rev. S. H. Werlein, D.D., of our First Church, Alexandria, La., was the parish director for Rapides Parish in the recent war savings stamps campaign. Dr. Werlein is doing a great work for our Church in connection with Camp Beauregard, which is located near Alexandria.

Bishop W. R. Lambuth has opened an office in the Post building, Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C., for the convenience of his work in connection with the war activities of our Church, of which he is in charge. Correspondents should send their communications to him at this address.

Brother F. E. Bowman, of Wildwood, La., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate for another year, remarks that he has been a reader of it for more than fifty years. That is a record to be proud of. We value highly the testimony of such competent witnesses to the worth of the church paper.

Rev. A. C. McCorkle, our pastor at Byhalia, North Mississippi Conference, in a note enclosing a subscription for the Advocate, says that things are moving along well with him. The finances of the church are in good shape, congregations are large, prayer meetings are well attended, and there is no friction in the work of the church. Happy pastor!

ing several days in Thomasville, Ga., this week, in connection with the welfare of some children who have been committed to his care. Brother Thomas is doing a great work in a most difficult field. He deserves the prayers and co-operation of all our people.

We have been informed that Rev. R. H. Harper, the cultured and efficient pastor of our church at Oakdale, Louisiana Conference, will represent the Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference at the meeting of the General Board of Education at Lake Junaluska, beginning July 7. We have no hesitancy in saying that the Louisiana Board will be well represented.

We take the following item from the Texas Christian Advocate of last week: "Rev. B. T. Crews, of Vivian, La., and his fine son, L. A. Crews, were pleasant visitors at the Advocate office this week. Brother Crews has been in the pastorate for forty years and a reader of the Advocate for twenty-five years. His son is engaged in the grain business in the West."

From a personal note from Dr. C. M. Chapman, of Waynesboro, Miss., we learn that it has become necessary for him to undergo an operation at a Meridian hospital that will probably keep him in bed three or four weeks. We pray that the operation may be entirely successful, and that Dr. Chapman may soon be able to continue his successful work as pastor at Waynesboro.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, the busy pastor of our Louisiana Avenue Church, New Orleans, has delivered 62 addresses for the Government in connection with war work since May 1. in the meantime, he has met all the calls that are constantly being made upon a city pastor. He is spending a few days this week by way of a vacation in attendance at the Seashore Divinity School.

Mrs. Lois Blankinship, of Bay Springs, Miss., who is an appreciative reader of the Advocate, in renewing her subscription, says that she has been an invalid for a year, but that her sufferings have drawn her nearer to God. That is one of the blessed ministries of suffering. She requests the prayers of Christian people that she may be constantly submissive to the Divine will.

Trinity Methodist Church, of Ruston, La., under the consecrated leadership of Rev. J. G. Snelling, is maintaining a "go to worship" campaign through the month of July. Special activity is being shown, also, in the Sunday school, of which Professor B. F. Dudley is superintendent. That Ruston church is really a great institution, and Brother Snelling is meeting all the requirements of leadership.

Rev. N. L. Loftus, of the Woodville Circuit, Mississippi Conference, writes that the second quarterly conference for his charge was a delightful occasion. The presiding elder, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, preached three fine sermons, finances were in good shape, and the outlook generally was encouraging. We thank Brother Loftus for three subscriptions to be added to our mailing list.

We had the pleasure of worshiping with our Parker Memorial congregation last Sunday evening. The pastor, Rev. F. M. Freeman, preached a stirring evangelistic sermon, with the result that two fine boys made application for church membership at the close of the service. We have no doubt but that a definite personal appeal should be the dominant note of our preaching to-day

A national conference of the district superintendents of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held at Columbus, Ohio, June 18-20. This was the first meeting of the kind ever held. Its purpose was to consider the best method of carrying forward the Missionary Centenary Campaign. Several visitors from our Church were in attendance. Bishop Lambuth presided at one of the night sessions.

The commission appointed by the General Conference to harmonize the Discipline met recently in Nashville and performed as much of its work as it felt it had authority to perform at this time. The commission agreed to meet again near the close of this quadrennium to prepare a series of recommendations to be presented to the General Conference of 1922 respecting a more general work of harmonization.

Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir, our pastor at Franklinton, La., was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office Tuesday morning of this week. He was on his way home from Clinton, La., where he had been with Rev. A. J. Coburn in a meeting that lasted eleven days. He reported a good meeting, four accessions on profession of faith, and a general awakening of the church membership. Rev. F. N Sweeney filled Brother Hoffpauir's pulpit at Franklinton on the fifth Sunday.

Rev. Olin Ray, of the Tunica and Robinsonville charge, North Mississippi Conference under date of June 27, writes that he is in the beginning of what promises to be a great revival at Tunica. He is being assisted by Brother V. C. Curtis and Brother John Robertson. At the second quarterly conference for the charge, he was able to report more than eight hundred dollars raised on a church debt and for repairing the parsonage. Other interests of the church are being looked after.

The following from the Raleigh Christian Advocate of June 27 will bring sorrow to all our readers: "Bishop John C. Kilgo, according to a Charlotte special to the Greensboro Daily News, was taken suddenly very ill last Monday afternoon, June 24. At the time of the dispatch he was said to be able to recognize the members of his family, but was characterized as a very sick man. The only indication of the nature of the attack was that he was suffering from a high blood pressure." We earnestly pray that he may speedily be restored to his usual health.

Bishop W. F. McMurry, on June 23, at the Methodist Temple in Louisville, Ky., ordained to the office of elder John Nelson Russell Score, a deacon in the class of the second year in the North Arkansas Conference, and Joseph Appleton Gray, a deacon in the class of the second year in the North Georgia Conference. These brethren had been approved by the Commission on War Work of our Church, and appointed chaplains by the War Department of the United States Government. They are both graduates of the Candler School of Theology of Emory University, and are under instruction to report for duty abroad at an early date.

The Vicksburg Evening Post of June 26 contains an interesting account of the revival services at Gibson Memorial Methodist Church, Vicksburg, of which Rev. O. S. Lewis is pastor. The preaching during the meeting was done by Rev. J. T. Lewis, a brother of the pastor, himself pastor at Aberdeen, Miss. Two laymen, Brothers Gray and Delabar, are mentioned as having contributed largely to the success of the meeting. They are railroad engineers whose home is Meridian, Miss. As a result of the meeting, there was a great awakening of the membership of the church, and 25 new members were received by letter and profession, with more to follow.

The Seashore Divinity School opened at the appointed time with an attendance that was most encouraging under present conditions. On the second day of the session probably a hundred preachers were present, and others were expected to come in. The Editor had the privilege of spending only a few hours on the Camp Ground last week, but he heard many expressions of appreciation of the lectures that had been delivered. Of his own knowledge he can say that the two addresses by President Snyder on Wednesday were exceptionally fine. He enjoyed beyond measure the goodly fellowship of the occasion. It would be hard to imagine a finer place for getting recreation, instruction, and inspiration. Every preacher who can possibly do so ought to attend the school

RECEIPTS ON EDUCATIONAL ASSESSMENT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Bro. Carley: Checks have been received from Rev. W. S. Norton our pastor at Ripley and Blue Mountain to apply on the educational assessment; also from Rev. J. C. McElroy, of Sturgis, and a check from Brother B. F. Jones, lay leader for Hernando, to cover the educational assessment for that charge. We thank these brethren for their prompt remittances.

E. NASH BROYLES, Treasurer.

CHAPLAINS' REPORT REGARDING CONDITIONS IN FRANCE.

Chaplain Francis B. Doherty, U. S. A. and Chaplain Lyman Rollins, U. S. A., have just returned from France on a military mission to the United States.

Chaplain Doherty is attached to General Headquarters in France, being associated with Bishop Charles H. Brent and Chaplain Paul Dwight Moody (son of the well known evangelist of that name) in the General Headquarters Chaplains' office. The function of this office is the direction and distribution of chaplains' activities in France to the end of the attainment of the best and special interests of all concerned, under General Pershing. This work carries with it considerable travel and gives an intimate knowledge of the situation from a religious and moral point of view.

From this broad knowledge Chaplain Doherty says: "Everywhere we find the same situation, hear the same story; the condition and the spirit of the men are excellent." When leaving France on his present mission the Chaplain asked General Pershing: "May we not tell our people in America that the moral and religious situation here is eminently high and very satisfactory?" The reply was: "Yes, and you may say furthermore that it is going to be kept up to that!"

Chaplain Lyman Rollins, who is associated with Chaplain Doherty on his mission, is chaplain of the 101st Infantry, formerly the 5th and 9th Massachusetts National Guard, the first National Guard outfit to arrive in France. He was formerly rector of St. Michael's Episcopal Church, Marblehead, Mass. Chaplain Rollins was the recipient recently of the Croix de Guerre. He says of his regiment: "There are religious ministrations to every man in the organization, Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish. All are regular in their attendance at services, and their moral conduct is of the very highest. The military authorities are doing everything possible to safeguard the men, and these respond readily and eagerly."

Both Chaplain Doherty and Chaplain Rollins spoke enthusiastically of the altogether admirable spirit of fraternity existing between those who are ministering to our soldiers. The Catholic chaplains, they say, are not merely looking to the good of the Catholic boys, nor the Protestant to that of the Protestant boys. Each is working for the best interest of every man.

Accompanying the chaplains is Private Adabert Bresnchan, who captured the first German prisoner, and who was rewarded with the Croix de Guerre They have left Washington to visit the Chapiain Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky. On the completion of their mission, they will return to the front.

COLUMBIA (MISS.) CHURCH TO BE DEDICATED.

Bishop Jno. C. Kligo will dedicate our church in Columbia, Miss., on July 21, 1918. All former pastors are cordially invited to attend. We are expecting a great day for our church in Columbia.

W. M. SULLIVAN.

PLEADING FOR OTHERS.

If one of your children should come to you begging for fruit, or for some article for his own personal gratification, you might be disposed to grant it to him; but suppose one of them should come to you and plead in behalf of another child, and tell what his troubles were, explaining why he ought to be indulged, would not the generosity of the child open your heart? Would you not feel a double obligation to grant the request, first because this was proper for the child, and second because it pleased you to have this disinterested importunity? When we come before God, He loves, without doubt, to hear us plead for our own wants; but when we plead for others there is in it an element of magnanimity and grace which God, it seems to me, must love and be more inclined to favor than petitions in our own behalf.—H. W. Beecher.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Austen has been made sad by the loss of their dear little baby, JOHN, 15 months old. The sweet little child had so crept into the hearts of his parents and neighbors that it is indeed hard to say, "Thy will be done," but we know another lamb is safe. May this thought comfort the bereaved parents and lead them to the home of their precious child.

JESSE J. WILLIFORD, son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Williford, was born in Panola County, Miss., near Chapel Hill Church, on March 11, 1893. In 1911 he was married to Miss Bessie Nicholas, of Panola County. Last summer, during our protracted meeting at Chapel Hill, Brother Jesse was blessedly saved, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He gave evidence of being thoroughly converted and talked to his pastor about the Christian life. He was stricken with meningitis while at work at Roundway, Miss., and soon passed away surrounded by loved ones. This was on March 24, 1918. His body was brought back to Pope, and tenderly laid to rest in the cemetery at Chapel Hill Church. God's blessings be upon his widow, two little children and the bereaved parents. His pastor,

R. I. COLLINS.

Died in the sanitarium at Shreveport, La., little CECIL BICKLEY, the daughter of Lafayette and Mollie Bickley. Her parents live in Zwolle, La. Cecil was born on April 1, 1911, and departed this life on November 7, 1917, aged 6 years, 7 months, and 7 days. Cecil was one of the brightest little girls in her town. She had been a pupil in the Sunday school since she was two years old. She loved the beautiful songs, and always seemed happy when engaged in singing. Everything was done for her that could be done at her home; then she was sent to the sanitarium and there, on the 7th of November, she passed away, and on the 8th we laid her body in the grave to await the resurrection morn. We would say to her many friends and relatives, "Weep not, for since separation is our lot, meeting is our hope. The rose vine that grew up on the wall has bloomed on the other side."

S. S. HOLLADAY.

(The publication of this obituary has been inadvertently delayed.—Editor).

Mrs. ALICE C. FLOWERS (nee Griffing) was born on April 19, 1853, and departed this life on June 18, 1918. Sister Flowers was happily converted at the age of six years, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She lived a consistent Christian life for nearly sixty years. She married Mr. H. G. Flowers on March 17, 1875. To this happy union ten children were born, one of whom died in early life. She has left behind a husband and nine children as follows: Lewis C., Florence E., Hiram E., Elton, Mrs. Cora V. Robinson of Louisiana, James L., Herbert H., Mrs. Inez M. Stroud, Milton D. She also leaves sisters and a brother, Rev. J. M. Griffing, who is a faithful local preacher. Other relatives and a multitude of true friends mourn her going. Sister Flowers was born in a Christian home where the family altar was kept alive both morning and evening. She lived a beautiful Christian life; though she is dead, her influence will live on. The last thing she did while on earth was to write a Christian letter to one of her sons in Oklahoma. The funeral service was conducted at Oak Grove Church on June 19, by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. B. Alsworth, of Meadville. Sleep on, sister, till the resurrection morn.

Her pastor, J. W. PRICE.

WILLIAM LEIGHTON, son of G. B. and Nellie Jones Slocumb, was born in Gloster, Miss., on May 6, 1908, and died in Shelby, Miss., from the stroke of a speeding automobile on May 4, 1918. These dates mark the earthly scope of a life that brought supreme happiness into the home of a youthful couple. It was a short, but beautiful life. His feet had not yet become weary of life's uneven journey. Billy was full of pardonable pride at the thought of reaching his tenth birthday, when it would require two numerals to write his age; but just two days before he reached it here, he went to heaven where the angels and glorified spirits of other children joined him in its celebration. He was patriotic in spirit, and exceedingly anxious to join the "Boy Scouts." He was baptized in infancy, attended Sunday school regularly, and applied for membership in the Methodist Church the morning of the day he was snatched away. His affable manner and gallant bearing won for him many friends. The affection of parents and loved ones is now transferred to the "home of the soul." Loving hands gently laid his dear little body in the vault prepared for it in the cemetery at Gloster to await the heavenly call on the resurrection morning.

B. F. JONES.

J. FERRIL GAINES was born near Coldwater, Miss., on March 17, 1861. Here he grew to manhood and attended school at Coldwater. He was married to Miss Edna Ella South, of Tate County, on the 27th of November, 1889. During the same year they joined the Presbyterian Church. As this church was soon without a pastor, Brother and Sister Gaines decided to join the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Palestine. On September 17, 1900, Sister Gaines died, leaving to his care the seven children—four boys and three girls. On November 24, 1901, he was again united in holy wedlock, this time to Mrs. Imon Davis Vanhoozer, of Tate County. To this union were born six children, four boys and two girls. On May 20, Brother Gaines was stricken with heart failure and in a few minutes had passed over the great river. Brother Gaines was a good man. As a husband and father he was devoted to his family, ruling aright his household. As a neighbor and friend, he was loved and honored by all because of his generous and sympathetic nature. The community is better because this good man has lived. Palestine Church will miss this faithful member, but we pray that his mantle may fall upon his sons. God's blessings be upon this grief-stricken family. Look up and trust in God.

R. I. COLLINS.

Mrs. ANNA DAVIS, wife of Brother R. M. Davis, was born in Wilkinson County, Miss., on January 2, 1829, and died at Vinton, La., on April 2, 1918. She was the sweetest and most perfect Christian character that it was ever our privilege to know. She was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of seventeen, and during all of her life, wherever she was, she was a constant, consistent and most untiring worker; and when the end came her faith was just as strong and just as real to her as when she stood before her Sunday school class and taught the great truths of eternal life. As a tribute to her memory, every place of business was closed, and friends, irrespective of creed, gathered at the church until there was no more standing room, and then a great crowd stood on the outside waiting for the time to come in which they could look for the last time upon her lovely form, who was a friend to all. The home seems lonely as well as the church and community. We had hoped that it would be the Father's good will to let her stay longer, for her life meant so much to us, but the good seed that she has sown are going to bear fruit, and there is no doubt about the stars in her crown, for many, many souls were led to the Lord by her work.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas our Heavenly Father has called from an earthly to a heavenly home Mrs. Richard Lamson, a faithful member of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Opelousas Methodist Church; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Society, bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, knowing He doeth all things well.
2. That in her going our auxiliary has lost a loved and loyal worker, our church a faithful member, and her husband and children a devoted wife and mother.
3. That while we will sorely miss her bright smile and cheery presence, we will cherish the memory of her life and influence and strive so to live that we shall meet her in the home eternal.
4. That we extend to her loved ones our heartfelt sympathy, thanking God for his precious promises to comfort and sustain them, praying that our Father in His tender wisdom will sanctify this providence, and accomplish His heavenly purposes.
5. That we place these resolutions upon our minutes, give them to the local papers and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and furnish a copy to the family.

Signed: Mrs. J. D. Harper, Miss Emma Caslain, Miss Florence Phillips, Committee.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply directly upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.
It is claimed that at a small cost one can get a quarter of an ounce of freezone at any drug store, which is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.
This new drug is an ether compound, and while sticky, dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding tissue.
This announcement will interest many women here, for it is said that the present high-heel footwear is putting corns on practically every woman's feet.

THE BEST TIME FOR BIBLE READING.

"The best time for Bible reading is in the morning. The mind and body are fresh after the repose of the night, and the highest powers of thought may be brought to bear upon the portion selected. But with most people each recurring morning brings its own pressing tasks. Business cares, the daily toil, and the duties of the house are the first and most engrossing concerns. Some hours must pass with many before they can find time to sit down to any quiet reading. Let the plan be honestly tried by taking some words from God's Book for the meditation of the morning. Make for the month a fair, steadfast trial of the plan of studying the Bible when your powers are at mental high-water mark. Familiarity with the Psalms, the Gospels, the Epistles is gained a little at a time, by patient, daily reading—thoughtful, prayerful reading, too—which was prized by the soul as something worth treasuring. We shall all gain immeasurably in our influence as well as our comfort by giving more of our unwearied thought to the Holy Book. A few tired, sleepy, worn-out moments at night, and those only, are almost an insult to the Master whom we profess to serve."

AMENDMENT TO THE CHARTER OF STANDARD COMPANY, INC.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Louisiana,
Parish of Orleans.

BE IT KNOWN, that on this Twenty fifth day of June in the year 1918, before me, J. KENTON BAILEY, a Notary Public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned,

PERSONALLY CAME AND APPEARED, William B. Reily, Jr., herein appearing in his capacity as President of the "Standard Company, Incorporated," and William B. Reily, herein appearing in his capacity as Secretary of said corporation, which said corporation was organized by an act before Wm. Andrew Collins, Notary Public, on February 23rd, 1916.

And said appearers declared that a special meeting of the stockholders of said corporation, at which all of the stockholders were present or represented by proxy, was held this day at the domicile of said corporation, by virtue of and pursuant to a unanimous waiver of notice, agreed to and signed by all of said stockholders in person or by proxy, and that at said special meeting of stockholders, by the unanimous vote of all of the stockholders of said corporation, all consenting and agreeing thereto, and by resolutions unanimously adopted, Article I and Article III of the charter of said corporation were altered, amended and changed so as to read as follows, to-wit:

ARTICLE I.

"The name and title of this corporation shall be 'STANDARD TEA AND COFFEE COMPANY, INCORPORATED.' It shall have a period of duration of ninety-nine years, unless sooner dissolved. Its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, State of Louisiana. It shall have, possess and exercise all of the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by law upon corporations of this character. All citations and other legal process shall be served upon the President, or, in his absence, upon the Secretary."

ARTICLE III.

"The Capital Stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at the sum of FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS, divided into Five Thousand Shares of Ten Dollars each, which stock shall be paid for in cash before issued. Ten Thousand Dollars, represented by One Thousand Shares, shall be denominated 'COMMON STOCK,' and the balance of Forty Thousand Dollars, represented by Four Thousand Shares of said stock, shall be denominated 'PREFERRED STOCK.' Said Preferred Stock shall have a preference and priority over said Common Stock in the assets of this corporation and shall be entitled to a dividend of Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue upon the par value of the same. Said dividends shall be cumulative and shall be paid in preference to any dividend on the Common Stock. In the event of liquidation or disposition of the assets of this corporation, the holders of said Preferred Stock shall be paid the par value thereof, together with the dividends above provided, before any payment is made on the Common Stock.

The Common Stock shall own the remainder of the net earnings of this corporation after the payment of the dividends on the Preferred Stock as above provided, or as much thereof as may be distributed by the Board of Directors and not reserved for the surplus or undivided profits.

Each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote in all stockholders' meetings for each share of Common Stock standing on the books of this corporation in his name, to be cast in person or by proxy, and the majority of the votes cast shall control any election or issue in all stockholders' meetings, but no vote on any matter shall be allowed to any stockholder on account of any Preferred Stock standing in his name.

This corporation may begin business as soon as Five Thousand Dollars of its Capital Stock is subscribed and paid for in cash. The Capital Stock of this corporation may be increased to One Hundred Thousand Dollars in either Preferred Stock or Common Stock, or partly in both, as shall be deemed best at a stockholders' meeting. The One Thousand Shares of the Capital Stock at present outstanding shall be classed and denominated as "Common Stock" and shall be so marked upon the face of the certificates by the Secretary of this corporation upon presentation for that purpose by the several holders of said stock. The remaining Four Thousand Shares of Preferred Stock shall be sold and issued, from time to time, at not less than par and for cash, as the Board of Directors of this corporation may authorize and direct. And this corporation, through its Board of Directors, shall have the right to call in and cancel any outstanding shares of Preferred Stock, in blocks of One Thousand Dollars at a time, upon the payment of the par value thereof, provided dividend amounting to Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue to the date of cancellation is or has been also paid on said stock."

All as will appear from a certified copy of the resolutions of the meeting of said stockholders, hereto annexed and made a part of this act.

THUS DONE AND PASSED in my office in the City of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, on the day, month and year hereinabove written, in the presence of William Andrew Collins and Daniel W. MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

From June 18-21, I had the very happy privilege of being with Rev. S. U. Turnipseed in two of his District Institutes, one at Jackson, Ala., and the other at Brewton, Ala.

I was made very happy on account of the warm, hearty reception that I received for the work's sake. The pastor-hosts were very kind and attentive and were instrumental in giving us good crowds and good interest, too. Both the presiding elders, Drs. Moody and Calhoun, were thoughtful and most helpful to the workers.

I really feel that the profit to me was worth many times the cost of the trip. The broad foundation upon which the Field Secretary of the Alabama Conference has launched his work was an inspiration. The Conference has rented and equipped offices for the Conference work. They have a fine display that remains in the office and it makes something worth while to tie the work up to.

The key man of our Conference work is the district president. If we can get key men for each district, we can make the movement go, and if we do not, we will be delayed. I think a home for the Conference Board will help no little in doing this necessary work of attracting real leaders to the office of district president.

I came from Alabama to the Seashore Divinity School. My work here is proving very delightful to me and I feel that it will be helpful to others as well.

The following are the dates of the District Institutes. I hope that the brethren will bear them in mind and so plan their work that we can have a large attendance upon each one. Meridian District, at Enterprise, August 13, 14; Newton District, at Forest, August 15, 16; Port Gibson District, at Natchez, August 20, 21; Brookhaven District, at Wesson, August 22, 23; Jackson District, at Florence, August 27, 28; Hattiesburg District, at Collins, August 29, 30; Seashore District, at Lumberton, September 5, 6.

Pray for me and the work. May the Lord bless the Church in the coming revivals and give us a great victory in the Lord. JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

Shubuta, Miss.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

We greatly regret that we have to announce to all the members and friends of the Society the retirement from the Corresponding Secretaryship of the Rev. John Fox, D.D., LL.D., who has for nearly twenty years so conspicuously and faithfully served the interests of the Society. Owing to his health, Dr. Fox presented his resignation to the Board of Managers at its meeting held on June 6, 1918, and the Board felt that it must under all the circumstances accept the resignation, to take effect July 1, 1918, with a suitable and acceptable arrangement for a retiring allowance.

Dr. Fox is greatly improved in health and was able to look in upon us at the Bible House the other day, but not having assurance of being able to take up at any near date the exacting duties of his office, it seemed best to him to ask for a release from these labors.

Dr. Fox was elected one of the Corresponding Secretaries of the Society in November, 1898. At that time he was minister of the Second Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, N. Y., now the Spencer Memorial. His responsibilities have taken him all over the United States, and in connection with the celebration of the Centennial of Missions in China he visited the Far East in 1906 and 1907, conferring on the way with the secretaries of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in London, and with the correspondents of the Society in France and Italy, visiting also India and the Agencies of the Society in Siam, China, Korea, and Japan. He arranged and conducted the World's Bible Congress in connection with the Panama Exposition in San Francisco in 1915. He also represented the Society at the Panama Congress, at Panama, in 1916. In the division of the correspondence of the Society in the office he had charge of the Agency among the Colored People of the South, the South Atlantic, Atlantic, and the Pacific Agencies in the home field. In the foreign fields he was particularly responsible for the correspondence with the West Indies, Brazil, Siam, and China. In co-operation with his colleagues he took full part in the successful campaign to raise $500,000 for the Endowment, to meet the offer of a like amount by Mrs. Russell Sage, and participated in the planning for and the carrying through of the Centennial celebrations of the Society in 1916. His devotion to the work is known of all men. There has been no truer or more stalwart champion of the Holy Scriptures than Dr. Fox. THE SECRETARIES.

YOU WILL WRITE A LETTER LIKE THIS.

I wish I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I can't quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them:

Barnard St., Savannah, Ga.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.

Dear Sir: I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft-boiled eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter. C. A. CROSBY, M.D.

Shivar Spring,

Box 17-C, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

NOTE.—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as an honorable business man and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

GIBSLAND CHARGE (LA. CONF.)

Dear Editor: I sent a report for the Advocate of Gibsland charge in March, but as it was misplaced and did not appear in the paper, I send the following:

We were kindly received in December last, and the people have since been thoughtful and kind to us. Shortly after our arrival, through the Ladies' Aid here and others of the charge, a nice cook range was installed, which was appreciated very much, as it was badly needed. The Ladies' Aid has also installed a new organ in the church here.

The stewards very kindly increased the assessment for support of the ministry more than two hundred dollars.

The membership of Gibsland congregation meet their financial obligations for support of the ministry, monthly. In fact, upon the whole, I think we have a much better financial system. We are not as well organized as we hope to be, but expect to keep working at it, and hope for better results.

We have recently closed a revival meeting in Gibsland which we believe was quite helpful to the church and town. My brother, Rev. E. C. Cargill, of Italy, Texas, did the preaching. The people of the town very generously showed their appreciation of his services, and very sincerely sympathized with him in the death of his dear son in France on the 24th of April.

I am glad to state that a few days ago the Ladies' Aid here was organized into a Missionary Society, which bids fair to do well.

Our people are patriotic, and working hard to help win the war.

Yours in His service,

E. L. CARGILL, P. C.

Gibsland, La., June 26, 1918.

In one of Murillo's pictures he introduces us to the interior of a kitchen, where white-winged angels are busy at work. One is putting the kettle on the fire to boil, another is lifting a pail of water, yet another at the kitchen dresser is reaching up for plates. Somehow you forget the pots and pans, and think only of the angels, and their presence glorifies and consecrates the meanest act. The humblest roadside pool may reflect the blue heavens, the lowliest service may reflect the throne life. If our hands slack we rob God and man, but ourselves most. We must not serve for reward, but for love; and when our service is pure there will be no question about the reward.—F. B. Meyer.

TIME OUT.

Did He?

Jack—Now after I ask your father for your hand, the next question will be, how are we going to live?

Ethel—Don't worry, Jack. If you live through that interview you can live through anything.—Boston Transcript.

Murphy's Odd Idea.

An officer on board a warship was drilling his men.

"I want every man to lie on his back, put his legs in the air and move them as if he were riding a bicycle," he explained. "Now commence."

After a short effort one of the men stopped.

"Why have you stopped, Murphy?" asked the officer.

"If ye plaze, sir," was the answer, "Oi'm coasting."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Quick Action.

"This machine gun can fire 600 shots a minute," said the officer.

"You don't say," marveled the fair visitor. "I don't see how any one can pull the trigger so fast."—Judge.

A Painful Silence.

"Give me a synonym for a painful silence," said the novelist, looking up from his work.

"Well, a talkative woman in a dentist's chair, with a rubber dam in her mouth, comes pretty close to it," suggested the helpful friend.—Philadelphia Record.

Being Procrastinated.

"I want to be procrastinated at de nex' corner," said Mr. Erastus Pinkly, to the street-car conductor.

"You want to be what?"

"Don't lose your temper. I had to look in de dictionary myse'f befo' I found out dat 'procrastinate' means 'put off.'"—Exchange.

"Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees."

"In selecting a college to which one should send a daughter a parent should consider four primary and fundamental things: (1) The health conditions of the community; (2) the cost of maintaining a student; (3) the ability of the faculty, and (4) the moral and religious atmosphere of the college. Whitworth College, now of 60 years standing, has established a reputation worthy of all commendation as to health record, moderate cost, eminent ability of her faculty, and normal and healthy religious life among the girls. BATON ROUGE DISTRICT MEETING.

On Wednesday, June 12, 1918, the Baton Rouge District Missionary Conference met in the Amite Methodist Church. Our conference president, Mrs. Niebergall, was present, also Mrs. C. S. Stewart, district secretary, who occupied the chair.

A very able paper on "The Negro, the South's Problem," by Mrs. C. I. Crook, of Hammond, was read which opened up some interesting discussion, and some valuable suggestions for the betterment of the Negro were brought forward.

At the evening session a pageant, "Call to Christian America," was given by the girls of the Amite Junior Missionary Society, and Miss Gibson, deaconess from St. Mark's Hall, spoke briefly on the Centenary Movement, promising more on the same subject on the following day.

At the Thursday morning session roll-call resulted in reports being sent in by every society except one in the district, and all were most encouraging.

The district secretary's report showed nine adult societies with 191 members; 4 mission study classes with a membership of 67; and 41 subscribers to the Missionary Voice.

Miss Gibson gave a very interesting talk on the work done in the Scarritt Bible and Training School; telling of her studies there, such as the problems of poverty and all the different sociological problems, parliamentary drill and domestic science being especially emphasized. They are also taught how to approach the poor, especially those of foreign birth, and how to help them. A short course for older women is also given as a help in their Christian work. She also pointed out that in aiding the school financially, we are helping to send missionaries to the foreign fields.

The subject of young people's work was discussed by the different members, and the Institute on Children's Work, a paper by Miss Watson, of Baton Rouge, reminded us that all givers and their daily prayers enrich the kingdom, and ended with the prayer that the spirit quicken all workers in all our churches to do much work with the children.

"The Need and Value of Mission Study" was the subject of an excellent paper prepared by Mrs. Scarles, of Amite. "Every member of every society should be a member of the mission study class, as we surely cannot know the great need without giving the best we have, and as a result of the mission study we get more love, wider sympathy, and deeper prayer life."

Miss Gibson spoke on the importance of Bible study and urged that we make a habit of keeping up some historic study of the Bible.

She also spoke at some length on the Centenary movement. "Lots of money now would be a calamity without prayer for guidance. If only one-tenth of our people would tithe, we would go away over the top in our missionary work. Sending missionaries is to be the great factor in winning the war."

A very fine paper on social service, written by a member of the Ponchatoula auxiliary, was much enjoyed by all.

Special prayer was offered by the different members for Miss Randle, who sails soon for Korea. Also for our boys in France and for our work in general.

During the Thursday session a greeting from our presiding elder, Rev. H. W. May, was read by Mr. Early.

BESSIE E. EARLY,
Secretary.

Former Presidential Cabinet Official Recommends Nuxated Iron After Taking It Himself

Action of Hon. Leslie M. Shaw Former Secretary of the Treasury Highly Endorsed by Dr. James Francis Sullivan Who Explains the Value of Nuxated Iron as a Tonic, Strength and Blood Builder.

"There are thousands of weak, nervous, rundown folks who need just such a preparation as Nuxated Iron to help build them up but who do not know that to take and Secretary Shaw's endorsement of this remarkable product will undoubtedly be the means of giving many people the very information they desire," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York and the Westchester County Hospital. "Secretary Shaw is widely known and his good faith and integrity cannot be questioned. Therefore, his recommendation of Nuxated Iron in public print should inspire the greatest confidence among the public at large and serve as convincing evidence of the genuine merit of this preparation.

© Underwood & Underwood

Hon. Leslie M. Shaw Former Secretary of the Treasury and Ex-Governor of Iowa.

The Formula of the composition of Nuxated Iron is now being widely published and a careful examination of it by any physician or pharmacist should convince him that it is of great therapeutic value, and one which we doctors frequently could prescribe with advantage to our patients."

Modern methods of cooking and the rapid pace at which people of this country live has made an alarming increase in iron deficiency in the blood of American men and women. For want of iron you may be an old man at thirty, dull of intellect, poor in memory, nervous, irritable and all "run down," while at 40 or 50 in the absence of any organic ailment and with plenty of iron in your blood, you may still be young in feeling, full of life, your whole being brimming over with energy and force.

As proof of this take the case of Former United States Senator Charles A. Towne, who at past 58 is still a veritable mountain of tireless energy. Senator Towne says: "I have found Nuxated Iron of the greatest benefit as a tonic and regulative. Henceforth I shall not be without it."

Then there is former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, who is past the three score year mark, but still vigorous, active, full of life, vim and energy. Former Health Commissioner Kerr says he believes his own personal activity to-day is largely due to his use of Nuxated Iron and that he believes it ought to be prescribed by every physician and used in every hospital in the country.

Former Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw, says: "I have been taking Nuxated Iron for some little time and feel justified in recommending it as a very valuable tonic."

Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you any good. You don't get the strength out of it, and as a consequence you become weak, pale and sickly looking, just like a plant trying to grow in soil deficient in iron. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the while, have increased their strength and endurance in two weeks' time while taking Iron in the proper form.

Manufacturer's Note: Nuxated Iron is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. Nuxated Iron is not recommended for use in cases of acute illness, but only as a tonic, strength and blood builder. (In cases of illness always consult your family physician and be guided by his advice.) If in doubt as to whether or not you need a tonic, ask your doctor, as we do not wish to sell you Nuxated Iron if you do not require it. If you should use it and it does not help you, notify us and we will return your money. It is sold by all druggists and general stores.

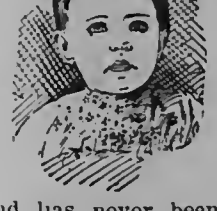
WOMEN ARE NEEDED



TO HELP IN WAR.

Women can be usefully employed in nursing the wounded, in making up the soldiers' kits, and a thousand other ways. Many American women are weak, pale or anemic from woman's ills. For young girls just entering womanhood; for women at the critical time; nursing mothers and every woman who is "run-down," tired or over-worked—Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a special, safe and certain help. It can now be had in tablet form.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—"I have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and found it would do what it is recommended to do. It did me more good than the doctors; I had several and none of them did me any good. Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the only thing for weak, broken-down women. I feel like a new woman after taking it. I weigh 155 lbs. and never felt better in my life."—MRS. AGNES TATUM, 175 L. Green St.

WILTON, ALA.—"My little girl, Kathleen, had been sick with La Grippe and when she got over it she was taken with a breaking-out all over. We had the family doctor, but he did not seem to do her any good. I got a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Medical Discovery and gave it to her. One bottle cured her and she has been in better health than ever, and has never been bothered with the breaking-out since. I will recommend the 'Discovery' to anyone."—MRS. MAMIE MCDONOUGH.

THE CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE—AND OTHER THINGS.

Dear Brethren: Please allow me to say that our District Conference at New Albany was the best I ever attended. It was a reproduction in a small way of our Annual Conference there in 1915. Brother Dorsey, our presiding elder, makes a fine presiding officer, except when the ladies get ready to speak and then he humbly blushes when they accuse him of not voting for women's laity rights. He is dignified and yet unconstrained, capable and forceful; and he makes the members feel free and at home, and that they are the conference, wisely placing upon them some personal duty.

Several of us were detained in Middleton on account of a wreck and did not get to the opening of the conference. We also missed hearing the sermon by Brother Norton, of Blue Mountain and Ripley. His sermon was well received. Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Iuka, preached the next sermon. He is a prince in the pulpit. His sermon was filled with philosophy, clearly given; and was full of the Spirit, warming the hearts of all present.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham, of Corinth, preached the last sermon, but not the least.

Drs. Sullivan and Selby brought to us the most pleasing reports of Millsaps and Emory that we have ever had. Brother Brownlee reported beyond our most sanguine expectations concerning Grenada College.

All this gave me a greater vision; and the reports of the different charges, which were above any I ever heard, made me more determined to report everything in full at Conference this fall. I see more good in our people here than ever. But how to get my people to see the duty of this church is the problem. I pray God to raise my faith to complete conquering faith, for I read, "All things are possible to him that believeth." "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

The interest is growing in every department of the church. I believe the church will be on a higher plane of spiritual growth, fired with the determination to meet all our responsibilities after our revival the third week in July, held by Rev. J. D. Wroten. We wish just such a meeting here as Rev. W. D. Bass, our well known evangelist, held for me in Delina, Tenn., last year. The people there were spiritually revived, not merely momentarily, for the results are showing themselves in individual consecration and devotion to the church. Brother Bass's work and methods have my endorsement and that of scores of other pastors much older than I. His financial methods are beneficial to any pastor and people where he holds a meeting.

Brethren, pray for us.

E. D. SIMPSON.

COMMENCEMENT AT MERIDIAN COLLEGE.

Meridian College has closed the most prosperous year it has had in many years. The enrollment was 425 students in face of the fact that the College discontinued the kindergarten, primary, and elementary grades, these all being enrolled in the College and Preparatory departments and as special students. That is a fine attendance when we consider that the war has taken a large number of the boys and prevented many girls from coming.

The College has had the finest type of young people that ever gathered here. Most of them were high school graduates, and many were specializing in some branch of Music, Art, Expression, Business Course or Home Economics. These departments were all larger than for years.

The graduating class was the largest the College ever sent out in its history. More than a hundred diplomas were awarded, besides certificates in different branches, and twenty-five received degrees. Honorary degrees were conferred upon two teachers who had been in the College twenty years. Mrs. Jean Adams Haynes received the honorary degree of Master of Arts, and Miss Nina Ridgell the honorary degree of Master of Music. Both were well earned and worthily bestowed.

Several in the graduating class were young ministers of great power, some graduating with both literary degrees and in oratory. One young preacher won two medals in oratory and a $25 cash prize for the best essay on temperance over all colleges in the State.

Several members of the Senior class are volunteers to the foreign missionary fields. Three are to enter the Scarritt Training School soon and two are already in training. One graduate has been selected for the chair of English in Soochow University, China, being the first woman ever selected for that position.

A new $500 range is added, the interiors of dormitories are being painted and calcimined. A large swimming pool for boys has been provided, and the girls have enjoyed their swimming pool for years. The dairy herd of Holsteins and Jerseys is increased, the canning department is putting up quantities of vegetables to help feed us in winter. The College farm is doing more than ever to assist running the school. Some strong new members have been added to the faculty for next year and two strong evangelists have been engaged for revivals. Meridian College is doing the best work of its history. Let the praying people remember us. J. W. BEESON.

CHRIST'S PRESENCE WITHIN.

Our immediate obligation is that of being witnesses for Jesus Christ. How many of us know him? How many of us have had a talk with him to-day? How many of us dare trust our future into his hands? How many are willing to take that pierced hand and walk by his side until he calls you up higher, going where he sends you, speaking what he gives you to speak, carrying the burden that he lays upon your shoulders, enduring the ache of heart, if need be, that should come, taking the providences of God as they come? "You are to be witnesses for me," he says. How many of us can certify in the presence of a congregation that there is such a person as Jesus Christ? When did he talk with you last? When did you realize, as the two disciples did who are spoken of in this story, that as you are walking in the pathway of life you have found that there was a silent person walking by your side, and you discovered the Man of Sorrows, the Man of Galilee, was with you?—Bishop Thoburn.

A life dipping into the shadows is invulnerable if Christ be its Leader and Guide. It is proof against cynicism, against embitterment, against intellectual stagnation, and spiritual coma; and there is no more splendid moral spectacle in life than to see a man or a woman touching old age, carrying into it undismayed, faith in God, faith in humanity, faith in themselves, as called of God, faith in the future, all of which is frankly impossible, an unknown secret, save as that secret is revealed in Christ.—A. Connell.

Calomel Dynamites A Sluggish Liver

Calomel salivates! It's mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day you'll be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you, while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It's harmless, pleasant and safe to give to children; they like it.

From infancy to old age, a mosquito has the utmost respect for Sweet Dreams. How the young ones know, we can't tell. The old ones—these are the experienced fellows, and doubtless convey intelligence to their young.

The interesting fact is that they all do know about Sweet Dreams, and through the use of Sweet Dreams a mosquito hasn't got a chance. The users of Sweet Dreams are counted by the million, and it is again requested that you allow Sweet Dreams to display its ability.

THREE THINGS.

In the beginning of the new quadrennium, it will be well for us to make a survey of the work that needs to be done, in order that we may see things in the proper perspective and be able to place the emphasis where it needs to be placed. Of course it is impossible to enumerate all the tasks that lie before us in the order of their importance; it is impossible to enumerate them at all. But we believe there are three great interests that should be constantly stressed. We do not mean to suggest in the slightest degree that any other interest should be neglected or slighted, but merely that these are the outstanding things.

The first is evangelism. The world can never outgrow its need of the gospel. Human nature is to-day pretty much as it always has been. Sin is still the greatest enemy of the race. The conflict between right and wrong wages unceasingly. Salvation is the greatest blessing that can come to a human soul. The Church is God's agency in the world for proclaiming the gospel of salvation. That always has been, and always will be, its supreme mission.

But, as we all know, there is special reason why we should tremendously emphasize evangelism at this particular time. The world's need of the gospel is no greater now than it has been in the past, but it is more apparent. The effects of sin upon the bodies and minds of men have been shown so clearly in connection with the exactions of military service that purely religious influences have come to be looked upon as among the most scientific measures of efficiency by men whose chief aim is to secure military efficiency. The massing of great bodies of troops has made it easy to see the characteristic sins of men, and the vital religious needs. War conditions have done away with much of sham and pretense, and have left the moral nature bare. He who runs may see the need of the gospel in the lives of men as he perhaps never saw it before.

And then there is a responsiveness to the gospel to-day that is not felt in every age. The war has brought men face to face with the realities of life. They have been forced to think serious thoughts. Death is no longer a remote event in the thought of the individual but an immediate possibility. The future life is no longer the subject of vague imaginings—it is a matter of the keenest personal interest. The presentation of the gospel with its satisfying solution of the problems of life here and its radiant hope of the future appeals tremendously to men who are realizing the seriousness of life. This responsiveness is strengthened by a volume of prayer such as never went up from the earth before—intercessory prayer. Every minute of the day anxious hearts are crying to God in behalf of loved ones at home and far away. We can but believe that these prayers are being heard and answered.

Evangelism, then, should be to us a matter of the utmost concern during this quadrennium. The gospel call should be heard from every pulpit in every hamlet, town and city throughout the land. We should put into it all the passionate earnestness of which we are capable. All our energies of body and mind and heart should be consecrated not merely to the usual work of the ministry, but to the special work of getting men definitely and unreservedly to commit themselves to Christ as their Savior.

A second thing that should engage our attention in very large measure during this quadrennium, is our missionary work. Of course this is to be thought of as a part of our evangelistic activity, but since our missionary work is organized into a great department of our Church, and since American Methodism has specifically inaugurated a great missionary campaign, this interest necessarily looms large in our field of activities. It may well be doubted whether our people as a whole have yet realized the full meaning of the missionary motive. In spite of the fact that the ends of the earth have been brought close together, there are still many who think in terms of the local and provincial. They need to be educated, they need to be enlarged, if our Church is to perform its part in the great task of world redemption. The preacher is the logical leader in this work of education and enlargement. If he fails to make full use of his opportunity, he stands self-convicted of incompetency. This is, perhaps, a hard thing to say, but nothing less can be said of one who stands carelessly by when heathen nations are calling with all the urgency of despair for that which we have, and which we are able to give them, and which we are under the most solemn obligation to give them. This, in all likelihood, is the severest test of efficiency that will be applied to the ministry in this generation.

The third interest that demands a large share of our attention at this time is our educational work. In no other field, perhaps, do so many problems confront us; and yet in no other field is the situation more urgent. We may as well realize, once for all, that education is one of the dominating influences in the life of the world. Civilization itself is determined by the type of education the race receives. Contemporary history is sufficient warning against the education that is divorced from religion.

Our Church has adopted an educational program that is worthy. If we fail to carry out that program in a worthy way, we have failed at a critical point in the attainment of our goal. We cannot, we must not fail. Our two great universities must be given the resources and the patronage that will enable them properly to perform the functions of such institutions. Our colleges for men and women must be adequately endowed and equipped that they may furnish properly qualified leaders for the future. Our whole educational system must be strengthened from top to bottom in such way as to make it a mighty force for righteousness in this world that is struggling against so many adverse influences. Preachers and people alike need to interest themselves especially in this great field of activity during the present quadrennium.

These lines—Evangelism, Missions, Education—certainly are among the most pressing of our present problems. There are others that must not be slighted; but the supreme importance of these great interests makes us believe that they stand out as the chief things that should engage our attention for the next four years.

A MESSAGE FROM BISHOP KILGO

Dear Brethren: Recently I have had a very severe attack of illness and my physicians advise that I give care to recover my health and strength. They do not think there is any permanent disorder of health, but that I have suffered from an extreme attack of toxine which must be eliminated completely, and this care makes it necessary for me to cancel all my engagements for July and August. It is not needful for me to tell you that this necessity fills me with regrets. However, I abide in the assurance that my brethren will exercise toward me all possible patience during this period of enforced rest and medical treatment. I can not adequately thank them for the many letters they have already written me expressing their sympathy and assuring me of their prayers. All their words have been to me an exceedingly great comfort, far beyond anything they dreamed or I can tell them. In return I not only thank them out of my heart, but I invoke upon them the benedictions of our heavenly Father. I shall try to answer their letters as I feel strong enough to do so, and any unseemly delay to write them should be credited to my lack of physical strength. I have given all the salient facts concerning my illness, for I do not wish any misunderstanding as to my true condition. It is not the easiest thing to be ill, yet I shall pray to be patient and to learn some of the deeper lessons of trust.

It may be well for me to make another statement to my Conferences lest there be some misunderstanding, especially as I have had several inquiries on the subject. I have been asked about moving my residence to some city within the bounds of the district. I shall continue my residence in Charlotte. The action of the last General Conference only fixed residences in four of the districts and in these the Church was to provide homes for the Bishops. Other Bishops elected were requested to fix their residences in leading cities throughout the Church but nothing in the action of the General Conference had any reference to fixing residences for Bishops already elected and who had at their expense and even burdensome expense provided their own homes. It has been the uniform custom of the Church to leave the Bishops to provide their homes and the heavy economy which such a law involves places on many of us hardships of no easy sort to be borne, but at any rate we become bound to these properties and can not dispose of them at will. Besides whatever a Bishop's home may be worth in the year and what it is sold for the time is no more than the home of the family and in the loneliness of the new one and the loss sustained who may be left. I can but feel that the Church should have the responsibility of providing

THE CHRIST.

A man of sorrows He, and guest of grief,
Who walked in quiet on life's humble ways
And suffered all the slurs and dull dismays
Which crush on mighty souls. His days were brief—
A sudden splendor cleft with storm. Belief
On Him grew dim, though great hearts walked through haze
Of doubt and fogs of death with shouts of praise,
And knew Him glorious and acclaimed Him Chief.
But now He stands strange, uncompanied, vast,
Tall as all solemn, purpling mountains are—
Stands, while majestic, crumbling centuries waste.
The moaning travail of His soul is past.
He hath throned Love and wrought Redemption far;
And who believeth on Him shall not haste.

—From the Poems of William A. Quayle.

ASSESSMENTS—THE NEW WAY.

By Bishop John M. Moore.

Henceforth there will be a lump sum assessment on each Conference for all the general work of the Church. The General Conference fixed it that way. Instead of laying assessments for Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Church Extension, Bishops, American Bible Society, and so on, or allowing the Boards to continue to lay such assessments, the General Conference placed the annual assessment for all general work for the ensuing quadrennium at $1,700,000—no more, no less. That body provided by law that each Conference should have also just one lump assessment for all its conference interests. So henceforth, each Conference, each district, each pastoral charge will have three assessments and only three, namely; one for the pastor and presiding elder, one for general work, one for conference work. Conference Treasurers (formerly called tellers in some Conferences) will have only two accounts, General Work and Conference Work. Whatever else may be said, this simplifies the assessments.

Here is the law as it relates to the assessment for General Work:

"Article I. There shall be a Commission on Finance constituted as follows: The General Secretary of each of the Boards having charge of the interests for which assessments are made, one Publishing Agent, six ministers and six laymen, none of whom shall be a member of any connectional Board, to be elected by the General Conference upon nomination of the Committee on Finance. Each Board shall be entitled to only one vote in the Commission. Vacancies occurring during the quadrennium shall be filled by the Commission. The expenses of the Commission shall be levied upon the several Boards in proportion to the receipts from the general assessment.

"Article II. The assessments upon the Church for all the various general interests, including Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Church Extension, Education, American Bible Society, Bishops, General Conference expenses, Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues and any other benevolent interests which may be indorsed by the General Conference shall be aggregated and assessed in a single sum.

"Article III. The Commission on Finance, after making diligent effort to secure full information regarding all the general interests of the Church, that none may be neglected or jeopardized, shall recommend to the General Conference, for its action and determination, the total amount to be assessed for all these connectional interests. This amount shall be apportioned to the several Conferences by the Commission on Finance, according to such plan as the General Conference shall adopt, or as the Commission may adopt in case the General Conference fails to act. The apportionment to an Annual Conference or a mission shall be distributed to the several districts as that Conference or mission may decide, and the district stewards shall distribute the amounts asked of their respective districts to the pastoral charges.

"Article IV. The Commission on Finance shall determine what percentage of the total sum assessed and of the receipts therefrom shall be allotted to each of the interests included in the assessment. All amounts collected on the total assessment shall be sent to the Conference Treasurer, who shall distribute the same monthly, according to the allotment made by the Commission on Finance, to the treasurers of the various Boards and for the various causes. The Conference Treasurer shall be secured by a competent surety company bond.

The General Conference enacted this law and assessed the Church $1,700,000 for all causes. By the existing law, paragraph 452, the Board of Apportionment distributed this assessment to the Annual Conferences. As the chairman of this Board I am making this statement. Some slight adjustments were made in the computant's figures for Brazil, China, Cuba, Denver, Los Angeles, Louisiana, New Mexico, Northwest Texas, Central Texas, North Georgia, South Georgia, and Virginia Conferences, but those that were slightly lowered were not lowered below their decimal for the last quadrennium, and those that were raised were not raised up to theirs of the last quadrennium. The decimal and the assessment for each Conference are as follows:

The Commission on Finance made up the percentages of the entire amount assessed and of the entire receipts therefrom which should go to each cause, and made the recommendations to the General Conference, which adopted them as follows:

Foreign Missions	35.5	per cent	$603,500
Home Missions	11.5	per cent	195,500
Church Extension	19	per cent	323,000
Education	5.5	per cent	93,500
Theological Schools	4.5	per cent	76,500
Negro Work	3.25	per cent	55,250
Superannuate Fund	1	per cent	17,000
Epworth Leagues	1.25	per cent	21,250
Sunday Schools	5.5	per cent	93,500
Bishops' Fund	9	per cent	153,000
General Conference Expense	1	per cent	17,000
Total			$1,700,000

How does it work? We may illustrate. Take for example Trinity Church which has an assessment for general work, made by the district stewards as heretofore, of $1200. They send this money—all of it—to the Conference Treasurer. Trinity, being an up-to-date church, sends in its money early in the year, say February 10. Several other up-to-date churches do likewise. On March 1, in obedience to the law, the Conference Treasurer sends 35.5 per cent for Foreign Missions and 11.5 per cent for Home Missions, or 47 per cent in all of all on hand to Mr. J. D. Hamilton, Treasurer of the Board of Missions, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn. He sends 3.25 per cent for Negro Work also to him. He sends to the Treasurer of the Board of Education in Nashville 5.5 per cent for Education and 4.5 per cent for Theological Schools. He sends 19 per cent to the Board of Church Extension. So he sends on the first of every month to the Treasurers of the various interests the per cents of the amount on hand, as indicated in the above table. If he is unable or unwilling to do this his resignation should be invited—and that at once. By this plan every church contributes to each cause as heretofore, but the distributions are made by the Treasurers. No interest is overlooked and none gets an impartial share of the benevolence of every church. After any church has met its assessment it is at liberty to raise any additional amount for any interest to which it may desire to give special assistance, but not until the assessment is paid. Be just to all causes and then generous to those preferred, is the spirit of this law.

The assessment for the Conference Work is treated in the same way. Here is the law.

"Article V. There shall be a Conference Commission on Finance in each Annual Conference composed of five ministers and five laymen, none of whom shall be a member of any Conference Board, and the presidents of the Conference Boards. The five ministers and five laymen shall be elected at the first session following the General Conference and serve the quadrennium.

"Article VI. The Conference Commission on Finance, after making diligent effort to secure full information regarding all the Conference interests, that none may be neglected or jeopardized, shall recommend to the Annual Conference, for its action and determination, the total amount to be assessed for all these Conference interests. This amount shall be apportioned to the several districts according to such plan as the Conference may adopt, or as the Commission may adopt in case the Conference fails to act. The district stewards shall distribute the amounts asked of their several districts to the pastoral charges.

"Article VII. The Conference Commission on Finance shall determine what percentage of the total sum assessed, and of the receipts therefrom, shall be allotted to each of the interests represented, subject to the approval of the Conference. All amounts collected on the total assessment shall be sent to the Conference Treasurer, who shall distribute the same monthly, according to the allotment made by the Conference Commission on Finance, to the Treasurers of the several Conference boards and for the several causes. The treasurers of the several Conference Boards, as well as the Conference Treasurer, shall be secured by an adequate and solvent surety company's bond."

The Conference Boards will not make assessments nor even recommend them to the Annual Conference. The Conference Commission on Finance will hear the representatives of all the interests—schools, orphanages, conference claimants, conference missions and what not—and then make up the total amount to be recommended to the Conference as its assessment for all the Conference work. Then the Commission carefully allots to each interest its percentage until the full 100 per cent is allotted. Suppose for example that it is agreed that the total assessment of the Annual Conference for all its Conference interests independent of the general work, shall be $40,000. The Conference Commission may then agree that 30 per cent shall go to Conference Missions, 5 per cent to the orphanage, 5 per cent to Hillcrest College, 10 per cent to Tower University, 20 per cent to the Conference claimants, and so on. The Commission on Finance then reports its recommendations to the Conference for its approval or alteration and final determination. The Conference then determines the distribution of the total sum to the districts. The district stewards distribute it to the charges. The same process is followed by the charge in dealing with the Conference assessment as with the general assessment.

This system has much in its favor. It is simple. It is fair to all interests. The assessment for any interest is determined by the presence of the representatives of all the other interests. The Conference always knows what its total assessment is, which is not always so when the several Boards bring in separately increased assessments. No church is prevented from doing a larger thing by any cause after it has done the just thing by all the interests. The Boards may now become colleagues instead of competitors in their claims. Such a system should work well and become very popular with the pastors and the churches.

MERE SERVICE WILL NOT WIN.

During this marvelous acceleration of the activities of the Church in social service many men are delighted over the results. The war camps have furnished opportunity for an unbounded expression of practical Christianity. Men have seen it and it looked good to them. That is what they have felt all along was the real function of the Church. Faith was all right, but works were better. Prayer is indispensable, but frequently men could by a little practical turn answer their own prayers. But religion is more than ministry. It is more than a mere service. It is a faith, an ideal, a standard of ethics, a force making for righteousness, a regenerative power. To harness it up to the plow or to the dray or to the ambulance means to reduce it to servitude, to servility. Christianity is not a servant, for as such men would seek to make it a slave. Men would love it for what they get out of it. Men would discard it when it ceased to serve their purpose.

This possible traducing of religion or Christian service to the level of the menial has been cited by Chaplain Jesse Dancy, a personal friend of the editor, in the following words:

"Neither will we win in a mental ascendency for Christianity over men if we push the idea of service too far. If we get men to thinking that we are serving them because we think we can win and retain their rather doubtful favor only in that way, they will secretly despise us. It would have been a critical moment in Jesus' career when he washed the disciples' feet had he been other than he was. He might have been sent to the servants' quarters after that and been called when needed. But he had a divine dignity about him that made men salute in his presence. They knew he was not serving them to win their good will. He had secured that by other means. The Church may serve until it becomes servile. It may be cumbering so much with serving that it will not have time to renew itself in spiritual power. Then the Church will come to be regarded as a hewer of wood and as a drawer of water. Men will respect the service of such a Church only as has already conquered them by the force of its spiritual authority. Only such a Church dare serve. It is scarcely necessary to add, I hope, that a Church with such authority will serve. The parent who cannot stay where he is and by his calm word compel the child to come to him, the parent who must chase his child to get him, or who keeps his good will and obedience only by giving him presents, has already lost his child. He will never recover him by these methods. The Church must have such a place in the affections and in the voluntary assent of her children that she will not need always to be chasing them, but that they will ever be seeking her."

In the midst of these innumerable activities that are now so gloriously occupying our time, the great spiritual verities must not be forgotten. The gospel of good news for the soul must not be suppressed or in any way discredited. The fundamentals of Christianity must not be permitted to slip so far into the background that they will appear as no longer essential, and that in our reconstruction to-morrow they will not be demanded. The man able to see this will be the preacher with a message whom the hungry and devout will be glad to hear.—Western Christian Advocate.

IS THERE A LOST NOTE IN METHODIST PREACHING?

By Rev. J. L. Greenway.

In the famous trial of Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., of Chicago, for heresy in 1881, one of the charges made against him was not what he said or wrote but what he had failed to say as a preacher. In searching through his sermons, many of which were published, as well as from the testimony of those who heard him, it was found that for nearly two years he had failed to mention the blood of Christ as the ground of hope for salvation. In this trial it was stated and maintained that any doctrine left out of the preaching for that length of time was lost to that particular congregation. If this be true, then it is necessary that the doctrines of our Church be continually preached so that no doctrine be lost or forgotten. While other Churches have revised and changed their systems of doctrine, Methodism has no cause to dissent from the doctrines formulated by her founder. They have stood the test of time. One of the distinctive doctrines of our Church is the doctrine of holiness. Stevens says, in his History of Methodism, "The Methodist Church was raised up to spread Scriptural holiness over these lands." And every Methodist preacher at the bar of his Conference says that he is seeking to obtain holiness, and promises to preach and maintain the same. I raise the question if holiness is not in danger of being a lost note in some Methodist pulpits? In some communities sad conditions exist. We have failed to indoctrinate our people in this particular, and irresponsible persons have become their teachers of holiness. With some truth they have taught much error and many good people have been led astray and estranged from the Church, and, in a number of cases, from God. I am not pleading for any particular theory of holiness, but insisting that as preachers we so present this doctrine to our people that they will not be led away by erroneous teachers. To do this is not always easy; there are difficulties in the way, some of which are general and some are provincial. Perhaps the greatest obstacle in the way of the preacher is provincial. No sooner does the faithful pastor begin to hold up before his people the need of a complete consecration to God and a fulness of the Spirit, such as is the privilege of every child of God to enjoy, than he is labeled a "Second Blessingist," and that destroys his influence, as the title itself is in disrepute. This is the bugaboo of which many are afraid the devil's scarecrow to frighten people away from the green pastures of religious life and experience. The statement made by John Wesley, "The second blessing so called," has been overworked, and in many cases misused. There is no more reason in calling a person who believes in holiness a "second blessingist" than there is in calling a person who believes in regeneration a "first blessingist." The terms should not be used, as they are misleading and inappropriate. Methodist doctrine teaches that regeneration is holiness begun, but not complete. The desire of God, and it should be the purpose of the Church, is to bring holiness to perfection. That this experience is reached by one or many steps, or after one or many blessings, is a matter of small import; the important thing is that it be reached. Our duty is plain. The call of God is upon us not to let this note in Methodist teaching be lost; but as loyal sons of Wesley and true to God, preach the Gospel in all its fulness.

Lucedale, Miss.

If God gave us favors without constraining us to pray for them we should never know how poor we are; but a true prayer is an inventory of wants, a catalogue of necessities, a revelation of hidden poverty.—Spurgeon.

ONE THOUSAND METHODIST LEADERS.

This full regiment of Bishops, presidings, Elders, pastors, and lay leaders came together June 26, for four days at beautiful Lake Junaluska. They met to take counsel concerning the work of the Church for the saving of the world. One hundred years ago next year the first American Methodist Missionary Society was organized. It is felt throughout Methodism that these "one hundred wonderful years," as they were described in the address by Bishop Hendrix, should serve to mark an epoch. The call of an unsaved world is more insistent than ever before. The doors where Methodism may enter are standing wide on every hand. One century has ended, another and greater begins. Why not pause for a moment, take stock take breath, and plan for the large days to come?

The plan of the meeting was to have five hundred leaders from our own Church, east of the Mississippi, and a like number from the Methodist Episcopal Church and from Canadian Methodism. The five hundred from our own Church mobilized as per schedule. But a meeting of the district superintendents held only a few days previously at Columbus, Ohio, cut down the delegation from the Methodist Episcopal Church. Anything lacking in the number of representatives from that Church was, however, made up in the quality of those who came. In their places on the program, and in the free discussion of ways and means, they spoke with vigor, a pith and an effectiveness which contributed greatly to every session. The meeting at Columbus sent specially appointed delegates to bring the fervor and enthusiasm of that convention home to those in attendance on our own.

From Canada came only a few, but they, too, were picked men. Dr. Chown, general superintendent of the Canadian Methodist Church, entitled now Colonel Chown by virtue of his work as chaplain in the Canadian Army, brought not only a warm and heartening message from Canadian Methodism, but also a word fresh from the boys at the front that stirred every heart.

A carefully planned program was carried through the four days. Not that everything was cut and dried. Far from it. Special care had been taken that the program should remain flexible. Large space was left for spontaneous expression, and adjustments because of unavoidable absences or delays were made without lagging or confusion. Fortunately, there were very few failures by reason of absence. Eminent speakers who had to travel hundreds of miles to be present were in their places at the hour appointed.

This is merely a running and unofficial report of the meeting. It is sent out before the official reports, addresses and formal utterances of the gathering can be made ready for the press. They will come a little later, surcharged with the tremendous spiritual energies of what cannot fail to rank as an epochal meeting.

The first care of the program was to make real the unevangelized world, its need and its opportunity. Vivid photographs, startling combinations of statistics, monumental utterances of statesmen and church leaders, were thrown on the screen, accompanied by compelling comment. Dr. S. Earl Taylor and Mr. R. H. Diffendorfer held the large audiences breathless through these exhibitions while the significance of indisputable facts stamped themselves on every soul. Huge maps were suspended in sight of all, and men thoroughly informed stood before them to expound the situation in every field occupied by Methodism. The work of missions is growing to be more and more a science, and lends itself to analysis and exposition.

The platform hours were next employed to vindicate the right and the duty of the Churches to drive forward with this great endeavor even though the Christian world is tightening every sinew to win a holy war. Right well was the vindication achieved. That the war will be won for freedom and democracy is beyond doubt. What then? Democracy will run like a [illegible] around the world. Many peoples will insist on governing themselves and will essay the task before they are prepared to succeed at it. Sheer chaos dogs the steps of such endeavor. Witness Russia. What makes democracy democratic-safe for the world? The principles of Jesus Christ, nothing else, nothing iess. While we win the war, we must also safeguard the world against another. The boys who come back from the horrors of the trenches, who are now fighting a war to end war, will hold us in scorn if we do less. Methodism has run well. But what she has done is but a tithe of what she must do, what she can do.

On this last note, the emphasis rang stronger than on any other. We can double, triple, quadruple the givings and the labors of the past. The figures prove it. They shame us for very meagerness. A postage stamp a month represents the average individual contribution to foreign missions of Southern Methodists. We have not yet learned the meaning of sacrifice. Now is the time to learn it. Our boys are giving their all. It will be positively degrading for us to stint our money. The missionary cause is one with that of the Allies. As Dr. Speer has pertinently pointed out, the great sanctions which for a century the Churches have been urging as the ground appeal of missions bave now been taken up by the Allied Governments as their justification for resisting the purposes of imperial Germany.

So the Methodisms of America have launched a big program of missions. Compared with anything that has gone before, it asks largely. If the response to the needs of the Red Cross and the Army Y. M. C. A., are a token, the asking will not be in vain. The trumpet has been sounded. To it the people called Methodists will surely rally.

A conspicuous number of Bishops were at Junaluska. Canada sent Col. Chown. From the Methodist Episcopal Church came Bishops Thirkield, Warne and Oldham. Of our own Church, the following were present, all taking an active part in the work of the conference: Bishops Hendrix, Atkins, Denny, Lambuth, Moore, McMurry, Darlington, Du Bose and Cannon.

From this Conference itself, from the Joint Centenary Commission, and from the Bishops and other great missionary leaders, utterances may be expected which will fully acquaint the Church with what is in hand, and deeply stir it to work something worthy of the great days that are past and even more of those greater times that are now upon us.

THE UNIQUE GYPSY SMITH.

After speaking on his experiences at the front for fifty-five minutes to an audience that crowded Tremont Temple to the roof in a suffocating atmosphere Sunday afternoon, Gypsy Smith made as if he would stop, and the audience broke out in protest. "Do you want some more?" he asked. And from every part of the house there came hearty cries of "Yes."

No wonder. For it was the most unique and heart-moving message on war conditions and war work by a representative from Great Britain that has been given in Boston. This without any disparagement whatever of the other distinguished speakers who have addressed the New England metropolis since the outbreak of the war. It was in a class by itself.

It was a human message. It troubled itself little with subtleties of argument. It did not discuss the purposes back of the war, and the motives actuating the German autocracy. Others had done that and done it well. His message was one from the heart, of the things which he had seen and heard, and of which he had been a part.

"I lived a month in a cellar seven hundred yards from the German lines," he said. "When I awoke in the morning my mustache was frozen to the blanket and my boots to the floor. I climbed out upon my hands and knees to a listening station, forty yards from the Germans. I could hear them speak."

He was a part of the great drama, was Gypsy Smith. And we imagine it is because of this, and because of those intensely human qualities that mark him in his intercourse with men, that he fills such a large place in their lives, and is listened to with such interest.

"One of my clerical friends," he said, "remarked that the men at the front were skeptical. I told him that they were not and invited him to a service with me. At the appointed hour we came to a Y. M. C. A. hut where 800 men were assembled. They were filling in the time singing. What do you suppose they were singing? 'Down on the Farm.' In the nature of the case my clerical friend was surprised. But why should they not sing 'Down on the Farm?' I asked them to sing again and they did, another of the same kind, but when requested a third time they said, 'We will sing one of your kind.' What do you suppose they sang then? They called for Number 149, which is,

'When I survey the wondrous cross
On which the Prince of glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.'

"No!" cried Gypsy Smith, "they are not skeptical." Then he went on to tell of tender incidents which showed the faith and trust of the boys in khaki.

It was a great address from beginning to end, one which revealed the heroism of the men at the front and one well calculated to stir the profoundest emotions of the hearers and to inspire them with patriotism unalloyed.

Gypsy Smith has a way of winning his audience that is peculiarly his own. Witty, original in his turns, on terms of familiarity with his audience, and withal intensely religous, without cant or rant, his messages are the kind that grip the heart, stir the imagination, move the soul, and illumine the mind. He is the best example of the popular speaker that we have heard in years. We can well understand why it is possible for him to say that he has preached to more people than any other living man.

Most remarkable is this statement, however, when the antecedents of Gypsy Smith are considered. Born in a tent, the son of a Gypsy father and mother, he knew in early youth nothing but the roaming life of those nomad tribes. Soon after the death of his mother the father came home from a service where he had been converted, and he immediately called his family together for prayers. This was the first time that the children had ever heard the name of God. They had never seen a Bible, had never attended church; they knew nothing whatever about organized Christianity or a personal relation to the Almighty. Yet from that Gypsy tent there went this lad who now for forty-one years has been preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ on five continents. Marvelous indeed that which God has done.

"It is a privilege to serve these boys," said Gypsy Smith, "to do anything for them. I hand them writing paper, give them their coffee and their tea, wash the mugs—yes, I wash the mugs," he exclaimed. "Who am I that I should not willingly serve these men? At the other end of the hut I preach to them the Gospel of Jesus Christ. My serving them at one end does not hinder in the least my preaching to them at the other."

Gypsy Smith took opportunity at this time to draw attention especially to the splendid work which the Young Men's Christian Association is doing for the boys. Forty boys in khaki were sitting upon the front row. They had never seen Gypsy Smith before. Suddenly he turned upon them and cried, "Attention!" Immediately every lad was upon his feet. Then Gypsy Smith put to them these questions:

"How does the Young Men's Christian Association treat you boys?"

"Fine!" "Great!" were the words snapped back by them.

"Is there any distinction at all in the huts where you have been between Roman Catholic, Protestant, or any other?"

"None!" they cried.

Then Gypsy Smith turned upon the audience and said, "if any one ever says to you that Roman Catholic boys are not being treated as well as Protestants you tell them for me that they lie." The Young Men's Christian Association, he said, is the organization which is nearest the lines at the front and is in the best position of any to minister to the boys.

Gypsy Smith said, in speaking of the boys and praising the work they were doing in the cause of human liberty, that he had in mind all the boys—the Russian boys, the Belgian boys, the French boys, the Italian boys, the boys of Montenegro, of Serbia, and the boys of Australia, of Canada, of Great Britain, and the American boys. Speaking of Russia he said that we must stand by her.

"Russia," he said, "did a great work until she was sold and betrayed by a Judas within her gates. I ask France and America and Britain to stand by Russia and see to it that when peace comes every inch of Russian territory is evacuated by the Beast of Berlin." This sentiment was met with a round of heartiest applause.

In referring to the American boys Gypsy Smith dwelt upon the 300,000 from this country who, long before we had entered into the war as a nation, crossed the Canadian border and enlisted to fight under the British flag. "Noble boys are these, who could not keep out of the struggle in the name of human liberty."

In speaking of the work of the Young Men's Christian Association Gypsy Smith dwelt upon its interdenominational nature, and said that there at the front all sectarian distinctions had disappeared.

"They are forgetting religious differences over there," he said, "and I wish to God you were big enough to do it here at home. I hope that one of the results of the war will be that we shall get rid of religious bigotry." Here again the audience met his sentiment with the most hearty applause.

Gypsy Smith told of the terrible price which Great Britain and France have been paying for liberty. Referring to the present onslaught he exhorted his audience not to be discouraged. "England was not prepared," he said. "When the war broke out she had an army of only 170,000 men. France was not prepared, Belgium was not prepared; Germany was. Germany had the preparation of forty years behind her and yet she was unable to break through then. And she will not break through at the present time."

He dwelt somewhat upon the sacrifices which the people over there are making in the way of food to-day, told of the small rations upon which the civilian population of Great Britain is living, and took occasion in view of these facts to say that as yet we in America know little about the war. "When your thirty or forty or sixty casualties a day grow until they are 5000, 6000, 10,000, and mourning is in every house, then you will know what this war means. Then may God grant to you mothers the strength which he has given to the mothers of England and France."

It was while speaking of the mothers, of the sacrifice which they were called upon to make, that he suddenly stopped and asked the women if they were glad to hear him. From all parts of the house there came the answer, "Yes." "Then," he said, "stop your knitting. We in England," he continued, "are not accustomed to having women knit in church. The boys are worth all your attention. If you want more time to knit for them, get up an hour earlier in the morning."

Boston has been fortunate in having the privilege of listening to this flaming evangel. He has the ability to reach the hearts of the people without trick or vulgarity, without descending to the coarse or questionable, keeping everything upon a high plane, and yet moving his audience at will to laughter or to tears, and giving them the truth as it is in Christ Jesus even as he tells them the story of his experiences at the front. One could not but feel that under the leadership of such men as he the Young Men's Christian Association at the front is indeed a force big for righteousness in the lives of the boys of all nations who are fighting for human freedom and democracy.—Zion's Herald.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

One of the really great institutions of Mississippi and Mississippi Methodism, is Whitworth College in the lovely little city of Brookhaven. There my wife and two of her sisters received their education, and there my two daughters won their diplomas both in the literary and music departments.

I was for two and a half years pastor at Brookhaven and had the opportunity of thoroughly knowing the solid quality of work done at Whitworth and of observing its refining and spiritual influence on the lives of its students. Dr. I. W. Cooper, the president, is a royal spirit, and he is careful to choose his faculty of those who not only know how to instruct but whose personal influence will count for the best.

Being honored with the privilege of preaching the commencement sermon this year, I had the pleasure of being present during a part of the closing exercises of the last session, arriving there late Saturday, May 18. Already the many graduates in piano, voice and expression had been presented to delighted audiences, each, I was assured, acquitting herself well and reflecting due credit on the gifted and faithful instructors. The entertainment given Saturday evening by talented pupils of music and expression and the grand concert on Monday evening were worthy of the highest praise.

The Sunday morning sermon won appreciation for its brevity. Sunday evening, Rev. W. H. Lewis, pastor of Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., delivered an earnest message to the Young Woman's Christian Association on the subject, "The Choice between the Lower and the Higher Good," using as his text: "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be ye filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5:18.

The graduating exercises were held on Tuesday evening, when Dr. J. M. Sullivan of Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss., delivered the address, which I was not privileged to hear, as I had to return home that morning.

There were ten A. B. and three B. L. degrees conferred. Diplomas were also conferred for specials as follows: piano 5, expression 4, domestic science 1, history 1, English 4, stenography and bookkeeping 2, and stenography 4. The certificates given were: piano 1, voice 1, domestic science 4, bookkeeping 5, and stenography 15.

The past session was one of the most successful the College has known. Dr. I. W. Cooper, the princely president of the College, is full of hope for the future and is giving himself with unabated ardor to plans for its enlarged usefulness.

I always come away from Whitworth College feeling that it is the safest and best place in Mississippi for the education of girls that I know anything of, at least while I. W. Cooper is its president. H. M. ELLIS.

THE MONROE DISTRICT CONFERENCE, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The District Conference of the Monroe District, Louisiana Annual Conference, was held at Mer Rouge, La., beginning at 3 p. m., Tuesday, the 18th, the hottest time of the hottest day of June—and we hope the hottest for this summer—and closed the next day with the night service. By one thermometer in the town the temperature was 103½ at 3 p. m., and rose to 104 before 5 p. m., the time of adjournment that afternoon.

There were in attendance during the sessions the presiding elder, Rev. A. S. Lutz, nineteen preachers in charge, two local preachers, twenty-three delegates, and, in addition, Rev. C. B. Carter, Dr. R. H. Wynn, Mr. W. S. Holmes, Revs. R. W. Vaughan, C. V. Brelthaupt and L. W. Smart. The latter is an elder in the Methodist Protestant Church who expects to apply to our Annual Conference for admission and recognition of orders.

The presiding elder conducted the opening devotional exercises and made a forcible address on "The Ministry and its Present-Day Message," based on II Timothy, 4th chapter. He emphasized especially the necessity of preaching the Word.

The business of the Conference was dispatched rather rapidly but every required item was given some attention, if only briefly discussed by the presiding elder.

The reports from the pastors indicated some progress in almost every pastoral charge. The pastor at Bastrop, O. L. Tucker, reported that their parsonage had been destroyed by fire, but that another had been built in sixty days after the fire. J. M. Alford reported that the parsonage on the Mangham work was sold and a new and better one purchased and well furnished. R. H. Bamburg reported plans for their brick church at Oak Grove in the hands of an architect and blue prints being made.

The presiding elder stated that nearly every charge had increased the assessment for the support of the ministry and that the increase was from 20 to 50 per cent over last year.

The afternoon of the second day was given to the laymen and the program was in charge of R. O. Randle, district lay leader. W. S. Holmes, of Baton Rouge, Conference lay leader, made a talk on the laymen's work, using a chart he had made showing that the M. E. Church, South, had stood at the top in Louisiana in the percentage of increase in members, but now is near the bottom, the Baptists, Presbyterians and some others being ahead of us.

The delegates elected to the Annual Conference are: R. O. Randle, W. L. P. Henry, W. L. Compton, W. M. Hunt, W. R. Baker, W. L. Calhoun, C. W. Scales and J. L. Rutledge.

Samuel Newton Jordan, who had permitted his license to lapse, was re-licensed to preach.

We had but two sermons. Rev. Robert Randle, who is rounding out his fiftieth year in the ministry, preached a semi-centennial sermon, and T. J. Warlick preached an evangelistic sermon. The only eleven o'clock service of the Conference was given to C. V. Breithaupt in which to discuss Sunday school work.

Dr. R. H. Wynn was to have spoken Wednesday night on "Christian Education" and in the interest of Centenary and Mansfield Colleges, but, after arriving in Mer Rouge, he received notice of his mother's death and left on the first train to attend the funeral, whereupon the district conference adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Monroe District Conference, hereby express to Dr. R. H. Wynn our heartfelt sympathy on account of the loss of his precious mother, and our regrets that he was thereby prevented from making an address before the district conference as announced.

"Resolved, also, That we extend to Rev. John F. Wynn sincere sympathy on account of the loss of his life companion, and that we assure him of an interest in our prayers in this sad hour."

A resolution was also passed commending the House of Representatives of the Louisiana Legislature for passing the national prohibition amendment, and urging the Legislature to ratify that amendment at the special session to be held in August.

Winnsboro was unanimously selected as the place of meeting for the Conference in 1919. The appreciation of the members for the generous hospitality of the good people of Mer Rouge was expressed in a resolution of thanks.

Notes and Observations.

Mer Rouge is one of the prettiest towns in the State. It has splendid residences, its streets are well laid out and are lined on each side with beautiful live oaks, which furnish an abundance of shade; and there were lots of ripe chickens. Now if the pastor, Rev. W. R. Harvell, had arranged to have "dinner on the earth" two days under some of those fine trees on the school grounds, just in front of the church, and the presiding elder had planned a full two and a half days' conference with preaching and inspirational services two or three times each day, what a fine social and spiritual time we might have had!

Yes, Briscoe was there from beginning to end. Who said he wouldn't be? He made a talk on the work of the late General Conference and incidentally, in his characteristic way, on the war and the Kaiser.

C. V. Breithaupt came about one hundred and thirty miles and was given the only eleven o'clock hour we had to make his speech on "Sunday School Work," and then forgot what he came for and made, instead, a Liberty Loan, W.-S. S., Y. M. C. A., and Red Cross speech. He kept saying, when he did think of it, that he would get to the Sunday school after awhile, but he never did. Now he thinks he made one of the best ever on the subject. However, everyone seemed to enjoy the one he did make. He is so over-worked, over-traveled, under-slept and under-fed he is excusable for a little forgetfulness. If our boys in France can get in as good shots at short range at "Kaiser Bill" as Breithaupt and Briscoe did at long range, this great world war is soon going to be over.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan got in a good say about the orphanage. They are now caring for one hundred and thirty-two children in space provided for only one hundred. He said receipts so far from Easter collections have amounted to $9000, which is beyond expectations. He said the Orphanage Board has authorized the raising of $75,000 for an additional building, and that in three days he had secured one-third of that amount, but cannot spare the time away from the orphanage to raise the balance. I, therefore, move that a superintendent pro tem. be employed and Brother Vaughan be given six days' leave of absence to secure the balance—$50,000.

Rev. A. S. Lutz is deservedly popular as presiding elder of this district, and no one is trying to get him moved, even to secure his place.

A. S. J. NEILL, Secretary.

NEWS AND COMMENT.

The Humble Penny.

In these days of Liberty Bond issues, war savings stamps campaigns, Red Cross drives, Y. M. C. A. funds, and the like, we have come to think in terms of millions and billions; but we must not forget the humble penny. It is coming to be ubiquitous. It is handed to us in change when we buy our lunch in the restaurants; the station agent counts it out to us when we buy a ticket; the newsboy easily changes a nickel for us; the grocer uses it in his business. In fact, it is becoming a very respectable member of the financial family. It is well. As we begin to realize what so small a thing as a penny can do, it may help us to realize that many of what we have been pleased to call "the small things" of life are, after all, worth a great deal.

Lynchings in Louisiana.

According to a recent report, there have been 35 lynchings in the United States during the six months just ended. Of these, 34 were Negroes, of whom eight were charged with criminal assault. Louisiana stands along side of Georgia at the head of the list, each State having been the scene of eight lynchings. We take no pride in this fact; rather it brings a blush of shame to our cheeks. In our present state of civilization it might be unwise to abolish the death penalty, as a form of legal punishment. But the time has come when every possible effort should be made by individuals and organizations to put an end to illegal executions. It has been demonstrated beyond question that lynch law does not accomplish the purpose for which it is invoked. Extreme and violent lawlessness on the part of so-called law-abiding people certainly cannot be expected to inspire respect for law in the minds of the criminal classes. Pulpit and press should unite in the formation of a public opinion that will make impossible the continuance of such a deplorable situation.

United States Troops in France.

President Wilson has announced that the United States now has 1,019,115 of its fighting youth in France. At the rate of transport now being maintained, it is confidently believed that in six months there will be 2,500,000 American troops on the other side. There are now, all told, 160,400 officers and 2,010,000 men with the colors, and the number is constantly growing. If the war is to become one of attrition, there can be no question as to the outcome. The forces of the Central Powers are inevitably being used up, with a constantly diminishing source of supply. The Allies, of course, are also losing men, but with this difference: there are millions more to draw from. The Allies, however, are not depending upon attrition to win the war; the fighting qualities of their troops have been tested in the shock of battle, and the result is altogether satisfactory. The heart of every patriotic American has been thrilled with pride as he has read of the deeds of our own soldier boys in Europe. "Lafayette, we are here," promised a great deal. The promise is being fulfilled.

A Good Cure for Carelessness.

According to an Associated Press dispatch, two railroad tenders at a grade crossing near Tokio committed suicide after a train had run over and killed a jinrikisha passenger because they were asleep at their post and failed to give warning of the approaching danger. We do not recommend similar action in every case of criminal carelessness, but we do admit that it is a most efficacious remedy. We do, however, commend the feeling that life is not worth living when simple duties are neglected.

Is it a Warning?

According to the press dispatches, the late James Gordon Bennett, owner and publisher of the New York Herald, provided in his will for the creation of a corporation to be known as the James Gordon Bennett Memorial Home, in memory of his father. This corporation will provide and maintain a suitable home for, and give pecuniary assistance to, newspaper men connected with New York newspapers. This would seem to indicate that there are a good many men of that class. We do not suppose it was so intended, but we suggest this action as a kind of warning to that large number of people who are thoroughly convinced that they could conduct with eminent success every phase of the work of a moderu newspaper office.

A Third Term for President Wilson.

Already the question of a third term for President Wilson is being discussed. The strongest argument adduced in favor of it thus far is that the President has proved to be a providential man in the world's crisis, and therefore he should remain at the head of the Nation until the crisis has been passed, precedent to the contrary notwithstanding. Certainly all will agree that mere precedent should not be alowed to endanger the welfare of the world. However, we still have plenty of time to make up our minds on this grave question.

The Mississippi River and Freight Transportation.

An unsophisticated observer would think that the greatest natural means of freight transportation of the North American continent, and one of the greatest in the world, would be used largely for that purpose. As a matter of fact, the Mississippi River in recent times has played very little part in the commercial development of the country. Why? The railroads are the answer. By means of their money and influence they have practically abolished boat lines for the simple reason that they wanted a monopoly of the transportation business. But this is in a fair way to be changed. Judge Prouty, director of the Division of Public Service of the Railroad Administration, has reported to Secretary McAdoo in favor of installing a barge line on the river, according to press reports. If his recommendations are carried out, we may expect improved service and reduced rates in heavy freight transportation. And anything that will improve service and reduce rates in these times will be an undisguised blessing. Let us have river transportation.

It is Coming—Some More.

President Wilson and Secretary Baker issued some new regulations on July 1, which strengthen previous reguations concerning the use of liquor by officers and men of the army. Heretofore, it was permissible for enlisted men to drink in their own homes, or when guests in homes outside the government zones; now, they may not do that. By the new regulations, dry zones are also established around every camp where as many as 250 men are stationed for more than thirty days. The new regulations were isued on recommendation of the Attorney General, the Judge Advocate General, and the Committee on Training Activities. What is good for the soldier is good for the civilian. Let the good work go on till we have a "bone-dry" nation.

Death of Senator Tillman.

The death of Senator Benjamin R. Tillman, of South Carolina, removes one of the most picturesque figures in American politics. He was familiarly known as "Pitchfork Ben." His colleague in the Senate from South Carolina, in announcing his death to that body, paid the following tribute to him: "We all know the strudy character of the man, the splendid ruggedness of his nature. We did not always agree with him, but we all admired the motives with which he backed the position he did take. He steadily grew, in rounding out twenty-four years' service, in the estimation of his State and his country. They mistook in the beginning the manner of the man for his character and purpose." Character and purpose are, after all, the essential things in a man's life.

Patriotism Must Not Interfere with Profits.

A report of the Federal Trade Commission made to the Senate on June 29 indicates very clearly that there has been profiteering on a tremendous scale in practically all the essential commodities of life. Among the industries especially pointed out as showing the influence of the profiteering spirit, meat packing and flour milling are the most prominent. The report charges that five great meat packing concerns have monopolistic control of the meat industry, and they manipulate the market by every device that is useful to them, without regard to the law. This is merely an example of methods used by other industries cited. In other connections much has been made of the fine spirit of patriotism that has been shown by the princes of commerce in their personal activities in behalf of the Government—buying securities, heading patriotic campaigns, and the like. But the American people have come to feel that it is impossible to divorce personal and corporate righteousness. And the demand is becoming insistent that Congress take vigorous action in dealing with hypocrites who really put profits before patriotism. Now that the evil has been clearly pointed out in this report of the Federal Trade Commission, let us hope that the remedy will immediately be supplied.

President Wilson at Mount Vernon, July 4.

President Wilson delivered an address at Mount Vernon on July 4 which will easily take rank with the other great addresses he has delivered in connection with the war. There is a calmness about his utterances that indicates the philosopher, a simplicity that indicates the scholar, a breadth that indicates the statesman, and a spirit that indicates the Christian. After enumerating somewhat in detail the ends for which the peoples of the world are fighting, he uses these words: "These great objects can be put into a single sentence. What we seek is the reign of law, based upon the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind." We can well afford to meditate upon these words. They contain the deliberate judgment of the world's greatest leader concerning the aim of the war. It is an aim that we can afford to die for, as well as to live for.

SIDE-STEPPING.

No matter how skilfully it may be done, or how dangerous or inconvenient facing the issue squarely and honestly may seem, side-stepping is a very poor and, in reality, a very dangerous performance. Of course there is such a thing as a legitimate avoiding of an issue that one is not called on at the time to meet, but actual and deliberate sidestepping is a coward's trick that never gets anywhere and has led men and enterprises and nations into disaster thousands of times. If a thing is to be faced, and the job is somewhat manifestly up to you, the very worst and weakest and most foolish action you can take is to go around behind the barn and wait till time or Providence or some other man may work out what was evidently your duty and obligation. To begin with, neither time nor Providence nor any other man can well do what you ought to, and you will likely have to face the thing, or your neglect of it, again. And in the second place sneaking around behind the barn is poor business for an honest and courageous man. —Christian Guardian.

MOTHER'S DARLING.

Bounding like a football,
Kicking at the door,
Falling from the table top,
Sprawling on the floor;
Smashing cups and saucers,
Splitting dolly's head,
Putting little pussy cat
Into baby's bed.

Building shops and houses,
Spoiling father's hat,
Hiding mother's bunch of keys
Underneath the mat;
Jumping on the fender,
Poking at the fire,
Dancing on his little legs—
Legs that never tire.

Making mother's heart leap
Fifty times a day,
Aping everything we do,
Every word we say;
Shouting, laughing, tumbling,
Roaring with a will;
Anywhere and everywhere,
Never, never still;
Present—bringing sunshine;
Absent—leaving night;
That's our precious darling,
That's our heart's delight.

WHEN TABBY TURNED THE TABLES.

Once there was a little girl, named Josephine White, who lived in the biggest house on Cheery Street, and her father had the biggest car and store in the whole town. Mr. White was a very rich man, and nothing gave him more pleasure than buying things for his little daughter. But Josephine wasn't like most little girls. She didn't care for dolls and toys; she wanted real live things for her pets. The neighborhood children gathered every afternoon in her back yard to play with these pets, and, oh, such good times as they would have! For Josephine wasn't selfish at all, she shared her pets and playthings willingly with her friends.

She had a white goat called Nellie, a big rabbit named Pinky, an owl that lived in the hollow tree in the back yard, a little bantam hen and a brood of chickens, a gray squirrel, and a red fox; but her most beloved pets were a dog she called Towser and a cat named Tabby.

Now, Towser and Tabby had never been very good friends. Towser would chase Tabby in spite of all Josephine's coaxing, and Tabby wasn't a brave cat at all, no sir-ree! Whenever she saw Towser coming she just simply made a bee line for the nearest tree and didn't stop climbing until she reached the top. Her actions tickled Towser, and he never lost a chance of a chase.

But one day he came into the yard and found Tabby cuddled up in Josephine's lap. He had crept up near enough for Josephine to pat his head before Tabby saw him, and when she did she almost jumped out of her skin.

"Why, Tabby!" Josephine said sweetly. "Why are you such a coward when you have such sharp claws?" And, lifting one furry foot, Josephine made the cat scratch herself. And later, when Tabby grew old enough to find that she had sharp claws, she became braver. One day Towser began to growl, and Tabby paid no attention to him, but kept trying out her claws.

Towser didn't know what to think, but, knowing Josephine was there, decided Tabby wasn't afraid. Just then Mother White called her little girl to come into the house, and Josephine put Tabby down and hurried to answer mother's call.

Towser made a move nearer the cat, but to his surprise she didn't move; then he went closer, and finally stuck his mouth down to give Tabby a good shaking; but he missed his aim, for Tabby reached up her little velvet paw and gave him a good scratch that caused Towser to back off, howling with pain, and there they stood looking at each other.

"Oh, mother!" whispered Josephine, who had seen the affair from the door, "look at them! Tabby has turned the tables on Towser, and he doesn't know how to take it."

Mrs. White drew her little daughter close to her heart. "That's the way it is in real life, dear," she answered. "Often we treat people in a way that we never realize is unkind unless the tables are turned on us, and then we understand."

"I see, mother," said Josephine, and I'll try to remember to treat my playmates so there will never be any tables to turn on me."

And when you think about it, isn't Josephine's rule a good one to live by?—Alice Montgomery Barr.

POLLY LEARNS A NEW WAY TO IRON.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Polly one morning as she leaned on the ironing board. "I hate to iron."

"Why?" asked a squeaky voice, and Polly turned to see her little friend Gocomback smiling at her. "Why do you hate to iron?"

"Because it always makes my wrist tired pushing the iron, and my feet get tired standing still. Now, if there only was some way to iron clothes without straining my wrists it might not be so tiresome."

"Well, now," laughed Gocomback, "I know another way. I'll just take you to a little tailor shop I know of and let you see how they do it. Maybe you'd like to learn to press clothes the way that tailor does. Want to go?"

"Oh, yes!" cried Polly. "Any way would be better than having my wrists get so tired."

With a merry chuckle Gocomback blew three times on a tiny whistle hanging at his belt, and before Polly could blink her eyes away they sailed through the air and dropped down into the quaintest of streets.

"Where in the world are we?" exclaimed Polly, for she'd never seen such strange-looking people before.

"We're in Cairo, Egypt," replied Gocomback.

"But what have you brought me here for?" laughed Polly.

"To visit that tailor shop," replied Gocomback, leading Polly through the strange, narrow streets to the entrance of a queer shop. Here three men in curious loose robes looked as if they were trying to stand on their heads, their white turbans flopping in the breeze.

"What are they trying to do?" asked Polly.

"Ironing," replied Gocomback. "See—their boards are raised a few inches from the floor. Their irons are shaped like your flatirons except for the long handles. Of course you can see that those irons are a great deal larger.

"Each man places a block of wood on top of the iron and with his foot on it he guides the iron in the direction he wants it to go by means of the long handle. They iron fast and well, don't they? How would you like to iron that way?"

Polly laughed and shook her head. Just then Gocomback blew on his tiny whistle again and quick as a wink, Polly was standing before her own ironing board.

"No, I'd rather iron with my hands on my feet," laughed Polly, "even if my wrists do get tired."

So she set to work again, and before she knew it her ironing was all finished.—Blanche Silver in Times-Picayune.

HOW FOOLSCAP CAME TO BE.

Every one of us who has ever used foolscap—and that means, no doubt, every one who has been to school—has wondered how it came by its strange name. And now a writer has come to our aid with an explanation:

The name goes back to the time of King Charles I, who granted many monopolies for government support, and among them was the manufacture of paper. The watermark of the finest paper was always the royal arms of England. A great deal of this paper was used, so much that those who secured the sole right to sell it acquired large fortunes. Parliament at last set this monopoly aside and when King Charles I was brought to the scaffold, it was ordered that the royal arms be taken from the paper, and that a court fool with his cap and arms be substituted in derision of the executed king. From that day to this, paper of that particular size has been called foolscap.—Interior.

THE BIRDS IN THE DRUM.

There is a beautiful device by which the Japanese are accustomed to express their wishes for their friends. It is the figure of a drum in which some birds have built their nest.

The story told of it is once there lived a good king, so anxiously concerned for the welfare of his people that at the palace gate he set a drum, and whoever had any wrong to be redressed or any want, should beat the drum, and at once, by day or night, the king would grant the suppliant an audience and relief. But throughout the land there were such prosperity and contentment that none needed to appeal for anything, and the birds built their nest within the drum, and filled it with the music of their song.

New Orleans Christian Advocate

Published for the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise, use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least an inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Editorial

IT MUST BE DONE.

In our issue of June 27, we called the attention of our readers to an editorial statement in the Alabama Christian Advocate to the effect that that paper had received since Conference 4607 new subscribers, and that it now has a subscription list of 16,000. The Editor, in explanation of the magnificent showing, said, "Team work has done it." We reproduced that statement in order that Louisiana and Mississippi Methodists might realize the possibilities in extending the circulation of their official organ.

We go a step further now, and venture to say that something of the kind must be done, if the New Orleans Christian Advocate is to maintain its position as a creditable representative of our great Church. Everybody knows that prices on practically all commodities have increased enormously in recent months. It is especially true of the materials required for making a newspaper. And the end is not yet. The print paper market is unsettled, and every indication points to a still higher price for the grade of paper the Advocate has been using. We should like very much to use a better grade; it is a question now whether we shall be able to continue the grade we have been using.

In addition to this difficulty, a new postal law went into effect on July 1, which has materially increased our mailing expenses. The law seems to us to work an unnecessary hardship upon publishers, but that has nothing to do with its results; it is the law, and it has to be complied with.

Two solutions of the difficulty have presented themselves to the Editor and the Publisher as they have consulted concerning it. One is to increase the subscription price of the paper. Other periodicals have found it necessary to take this step in order to save themselves from actual financial loss. We, however, are exceedingly anxious to avoid this action. And we are not sure that it would accomplish the desired result. The unwillingness of old subscribers to renew their subscriptions, and the increased difficulty of securing new subscribers, might offset any gain arising from the higher price.

The other solution is to secure and maintain a largely increased number of subscribers. This appeals to us as the more feasible plan. As the circulation increases, the economic law of decreasing cost becomes operative, and at the same time, advertising space becomes more valuable. A circulation of nine thousand copies paid for would enable us to take care comfortably of the present cost of production, and, perhaps, make some improvement in the quality of our service.

We are convinced that it is possible to secure this increased circulation, if we go about it in the right way. According to the Minutes of our three patronizing Conferences for 1917, the total membership of our Church in Louisiana and Mississippi is 157,413. We evidently have the field within which to work, and we do not believe that nine thousand is an unreasonable estimate of the number of Methodists that ought to take their Church paper. And we believe that team work will bring it to pass. We do not question the interest and loyalty of our preachers and people taken individually; but we do feel that there has not been the concerted effort to extend the circulation of the Advocate that its importance deserves. There is absolutely no disposition on our part to find fault with our brethren, or to criticize them harshly—all we want to do, is to call attention to the situation. We believe that when we realize the situation, we will do what needs to be done.

In the development of this team work, we pledge our utmost of assistance and co-operation. We, Editor and Publisher, are doing our best to give the Church a creditable paper. That is nothing more than our duty, and we claim no credit for it. We often fall short of our hopes and expectations, as we do those of our readers; but we are trying to give them a good paper. Brethren, presiding elders and pastors, help us at your end of the line; say what good you can of the paper; speak of it publicly and privately; call attention to its value as the medium of official communications; stress its place in the home as a means of religious education. And send us subscriptions.

We want to make two definite suggestions that will give our pastors a good starting-point to work from. The first is this: Write to the Publisher to send you a list of the subscribers on your charge, being sure to give the post offices where papers are received. The list the Publisher will send you will show the date of expiration of each subscription. If the subscription has expired, secure the renewal. Renewals are worth at least as much as new subscriptions. Where the subscription is over due for any length of time and has finally to be dropped, there is an actual loss on account of postage and paper for which there is absolutely no return. The importance of securing renewals may easily be seen from the fact that within the next two months about fifteen hundred delinquents will have to be dropped unless their renewals are secured in the meantime. Brethren, get those renewals if you possibly can.

The second suggestion is this: Make an earnest effort to get all your official members to take the Advocate. If anybody in a pastoral charge ought to take the official Church paper, the official members ought to. But many of them do not. It has come to the ears of the Editor that there are some laymen in our patronizing territory, prominent in their local churches and in the Conference, who do not take the Advocate. It ought not so to be. Brethren, get your officials to subscribe for the paper.

We add just one other suggestion: Do it now. Write to the Publisher to-day for that list of subscribers; see those officials this week. Maybe you could see one or two this afternoon.

It must be done; team work will do it; let us have nine thousand subscribers before we stop.

SHORT SERMONS.

We have heard sermons of an hour or more that we enjoyed greatly and received much profit from; but we confess they have been very few. Some preachers have the divine gift of oratory that enables them to make their hearers oblivious of time and place. Our chief regret is when they stop talking. But most of us are not so wonderfully endowed, and we ought to take into consideration the feelings of our congregations.

After all, the length of a sermon has comparatively little to do with its effectiveness or its value. A good sermon may be short, or long, but that is purely incidental. A sermon is not good because it is long, and it is not bad because it is short; its content and its manner of presentation give it its chief value.

People generally like short sermons. Maybe they ought to like long ones, but they do not. It is much harder to preach a good short sermon than it is a poor long one. Therefore, we should practice the art of condensation. We are trying to reach the people, to reclaim and instruct and strengthen them. We should not be influenced too much by what people want rather than by what they need, but we must at least consider their standards of efficiency. If our long sermons are not reaching them, suppose we try some short ones, especially during the hot weather. It will be intellectually stimulating, if not spiritually profitable, for us to try to put every essential truth in a forty-five minutes' discourse into thirty minutes. Perhaps we shall find that we have not had to leave out very much.

"Have something to say, say it and stop," is a pretty good rule for preachers.

FUEL FOR NEXT WINTER.

The United States Fuel Administration is in earnest when it issues its warning about the probable scarcity of coal next winter. It may be hard for us to realize it now, when the mercury is hovering near the top of the thermometer, but we shall have some cold weather in a few months. And unless we take the warning seriously that comes from the Fuel Administration, some of us are going to have difficulty in keeping warm. "Buy your coal now," and "Cut a cord now," are two injunctions that should be observed by everybody.

But we are thinking especially of the situation as it affects our preachers. Some of them will have to move after Conference. There will be little time then, under the present strenuous conditions, to secure the labor to put in a supply of wood and coal. We urge that it be attended to now. This suggestion has previously been made in the columns of the Advocate, but we believe it is worth repeating. Every preacher should see to it that every parsonage has its fuel supply laid in before cold weather comes. If he expects to stay where he is, of course he will see to it; if he expects to move, all the more should he make brotherly provision for his successor, not as a gift, of course, but as a matter of forethought.

In some cases where it would be a manifest inconvenience for the preacher to obligate himself for next winter's fuel supply, the board of stewards might very well make provision for it. And at the same time, a supply for the church itself should be provided. Preaching and Sunday school and prayer-meeting are needed all the year through—but it is hard to enjoy them in a cold church.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. C. Selecman, formerly of the Louisiana Conference but now of the Los Angeles, will accompany Bishop Lambuth on his trip to England and France.

Rev. Paul B. Kern, a member of the faculty of Southern Methodist University, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Randolph-Macon College at its recent commencement.

We congratulate Rev. C. A. Battle and Mrs. Battle, of Baton Rouge, La., upon the arrival of a daughter in their home on July 4. We pray heaven's richest blessing upon the little one.

Southern University, located at Greensboro, Ala., and Birmingham College, at Birmingham, have been consolidated under the name, Birmingham-Southern. The old-new institution will be located at Birmingham.

Brother J. H. Ledyard, of Tupelo, Miss., and Brother W. S. Holmes, of Baton Rouge, La., are members of the Sunday School Board elected by the General Conference. No one will question their fitness for this work.

The readers of the Christian Advocate (Nashville) will miss something worth while if they skip "Bildad Akers at Junaluska." We wonder how many "forrard" men of the Jonas Bates type are to be found in our territory.

Dr. Luther B. Todd, presiding elder of the St. Louis District, has been elected secretary of the new Board of Finance, authorized by the recent General Conference. St. Louis has been chosen as the headquarters of the Board.

Rev. R. H. Harper, of Oakdale, La., spent last Sunday in New Orleans on his way to Lake Junaluska, N. C., to attend the educational conference. He preached Sunday morning at Parker Memorial, of which church he was pastor for four years.

Brother Q. R. Henry, a graduate of Centenary College, whom we knew in his student days, called to see us one day last week. He has been teaching, but is spending some time in New Orleans with a view to fitting himself for government work.

Rev. C. H. Strait, of Johns, Miss., has shown his appreciation of the Advocate by sending us a list of seventeen new subscriptions and renewals recently. We pray that the paper may be an effi-

We have in hand an obituary, with a request to publish, that is signed only with the initials of the writer, L. N. B. We cannot break our rule not to publish an anonymous communication, but if the writer will give us his name and address, we shall be glad to give it space.

We have received a card announcing the marriage of Mr. Henry Cook Selby and Miss Corinne Blount, at Little Rock, Arkansas, on June 8. Mr. Selby is a son of Rev. Robert Selby, of the Mississippi Conference. We invoke the benedictions of heaven upon the happy couple.

We have heard of more than one preacher who enjoyed the Seashore Divinity School as a result of the suggestion in the Advocate that congregations give their pastors the opportunity to avail themselves of the great benefits of that School. We hope the suggestion will be more widely followed next year.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions recently sent in: Rev. J. Loyd Deeell, McComb, Miss., 3; Rev. A. R. Beasley, McCool, Miss., 2; Rev. L. Carley, Ellisville, Miss., 2; Rev. H. J. Moore, Montrose, Miss., 2; Rev. Leon I. McCain, Hammond, La., 2.

A note from Rev. Olin Ray, Tunica, Miss., dated July 5, has the following: "We closed a great meeting here yesterday afternoon. The work done by Rev. V. C. Curtis and Rev. John Robertson will be remembered for a long time. The common topic of conversation is the success of the meeting. We shall ever thank God for their coming among us."

Rev. A. F. Vaughan, the pastor of our Carrollton Avenue Church of this city, returned Saturday night from the chaplains' training camp at Louisville, Ky., where he took the course prescribed for chaplains. He has received his commission and will leave in about thirty days for Hoboken, N. J., where he will make further preparation for service abroad.

Rev. John F. Foster, the widely-traveled and cultured pastor of the Bayou La Chute charge, of the Louisiana Conference, who has rendered valuable service at Centenary College by doing considerable teaching, is greatly in demand as a speaker for special occasions. For range and accuracy of information, we doubt if the Louisiana Conference has his superior.

We have just received a note from Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of Columbia, Miss., asking us to state that Bishop Kilgo, on account of his recent illness, has been compelled to cancel his engagement to dedicate the church at Columbia on July 21. He has promised, however, to be present on September 1, and the dedication has been postponed till that time.

For the first time in its history, the Divinity School of Paris has overstepped its traditions and has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Macfarland is now in Paris as the Federal Council's special commissioner to aid the French Protestant churches.

Rev. J. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Seashore District, Mississippi Conference, requests us to announce that Rev. G. S. Harmon, of Poplarville, Miss., will assist in the Seashore Camp Meeting, which begins August 6. In his note Brother Jones says: "Too much cannot be said for Brother Harmon as an evangelist. He is a strong preacher. His messages take hold upon those who hear him."

We worshiped last Sunday morning with our Louisiana Avenue congregation, of which Rev. A. J. Gearheard is pastor. After a fine sermon, at the close of which the communion service was held, a fine young boy was received into the membership of the Church. On Sunday night, we heard a helpful sermon at First Church, by the pastor, Rev. W. H. Coleman. At the close of the service two young ladies applied for membership.

Rev. L. E. Crooks, of Greensburg, La., in sending us a new name for our subscription files, states that he is just beginning his revival campaign. He is praying for a great revival that will reach the many young people of his charge that they may be developed into strong, Christian characters. We join him in that prayer. We know of no more important work than that of enlisting the young people in the service of the Kingdom.

Rev. E. K. Means, our pastor at Monroe, La., is the author of a volume of Negro stories just from the press of G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London. The dedication is short but sufficient: "To Robert H. Davis, who taught me how, and 'Ittu,' who kept me at it." We hazard a guess that "Ittu" is his charming wife. We commend the book to those who enjoy the humor and quaint philosophy of the Negro. We hope to give a fuller notice later.

Mrs. Ella K. Chadwell, of Nashville, Tenn., granddaughter of Bishop John C. Keener, has recently presented to Southern Methodist University a large collection of valuable books, geological specimens, pictures, and other articles collected by the Bishop during his long life of travel and study. This valuable contribution will take its place with the famous collection of books and manuscripts recently presented to the University by Rev. E. L. Shettles.

Rev. J. L. Evans, our pastor at Haughton, La., and son of Rev. C. C. Evans, of the Mississippi Conference, was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office last Friday. He was on his way home from the Seashore Divinity School, of which he gave a glowing account. He reported his charge as making fine progress. On an assessment of $19 for the war work fund of the Louisiana Conference, he has sent to the treasurer $104. That indicates patriotism re-enforced by religion.

Rev. W. G. Evans, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, now a useful local preacher in New Orleans, called at the Advocate office one day last week to extend greetings to the new Editor. He has an important position with the Leyland Steamship Line, which handles a large business through this port. Some of its vessels, Brother Evans informed us, have a freight capacity equal to that of 550 freight cars. We hope to accept an invitation to inspect one of these great boats.

According to a recent announcement, the Bishops have appointed the following members of the Commission whose duty it is to protect the educational standards of the Church: Dr. R. S. Hyer, President of Southern Methodist University; Dr. W. P. Few, President of Trinity College; Dr. C. M. Bishop, President of Southwestern University; Dr. C. R. Jenkins, President of Wesleyan College; Dr. W. A. Webb President of Randolph-Macon Woman's College; Dr. John O. Willson, President of Lander College; Dr. J. M. Williams, President of Galloway College; Dr. W. T. Wynn, President of Martin College; Dr. Andrew Sledd, Professor in Candler School of Theology.

friends, and nearness to children and kinsfolk. It matters little with a Bishop where he may be or what may be his situation, but he does wish to know that his loved ones are closest to those whom they know best and whom they have loved through the years. Moving my residence would do nothing except take my wife away from nearness to our children and put her among strangers without adding any advantage to the work. We have our little home, and we have just made the last payment on it, and it is her home, and while I am willing to go anywhere and fall where death overtakes me, I wish her to have what comforts she can, as I can no longer count much in her comfort and her affairs, and she makes not one word of complaint.

Having said this much, permit me to say a bit more. I write you as brethren upon whom rests the same burdens and whose hearts and lives are bound in the bonds of heavenly fellowships. I have spent my entire life in connection with the Methodist ministry, and have regarded it the greatest brotherhood in earth. They have something in common not known to any other body of men, and any signs of decay in their traditional love and confidence are to me painful beyond measure. And I frankly confess that the unjustifiable suspicions which, to say the least, some thoughtless brethren labor to create against your brethren whom the Church has appointed to the tasks of the episcopacy, are to me amazing. I know your Bishops. I have been with them under all possible circumstances, and I know beyond the shadow of a doubt that their devotion to our Church and the doctrines of our Church is beyond all suspicion. They watch the acts of each other with far more care and frankness than they watch the acts of their other brethren. They are hard-working men, unselfish in their alms, and little given to thoughts of personal comfort. They have their chief joy in fellowship with their brethren, and it can but pain them to have lodged against them an unjust suspicion. I know that the overwhelming majority of our preachers and our people love their Bishops, but there are two or three editors who seem to entertain the notion that the Bishops are "inefficient," and some things they write are not calculated to add to the confidence which should pervade our ministry. I do not know why, but it is true that our Bishops are not lasting as long as they once did. No living man can fill one appointment out of ten that we are called on to fill, and when we have done all that can be done by one man little seems to have been done.

Do not understand that I have written thus freely to apologize for my brethren in the episcopacy. They need no defense. Nor does anything I have said have any reference to me. I do not claim to stand as tall as my colleagues. What I have written is solely to assure you that in all their labors your brethren in the episcopacy are men with a single heart and a steadfast faith. Let no person with an unkindly attitude of mind toward your Bishops mislead you into an unjust suspicion and make our labors more difficult. If you deem this open letter rather too frank, I trust you will credit me with nothing except a desire to express to you some of the secret thoughts and inner feelings of one of your brethren who desires to labor among you with abiding confidence and a holy purpose. No church can be built up by creating suspicions against any sphere of the ministry, and the person who gives himself to such a policy forfeits his rights to the confidence of saintly people.

Fraternally,

JNO. C. KILGO.

ANOTHER GIFT OF $2500 TO THE MILLSAPS COLLEGE DORMITORY.

Dear Brother Carley: I take pleasure in announcing that another big-hearted Mississippi layman, who is too modest, however, to let his name be published, has just made a gift of $2500 in cash to the Millsaps College Dormitory fund, this being the third contribution of $2500 that has been made during the last two months and a half. These gifts, together with a number of smaller contributions, are all highly appreciated, and help to insure the early success of our dormitory campaign.

Yours fraternally,

M. M. BLACK, Commissioner.

Jackson, Miss., July 6, 1918.

CAMP SHELBY PASTOR.

It is imperative that all subscriptions made at the last session of the Mississippi Conference to the support of our pastor at Camp Shelby be paid at once. These subscriptions were taken with the understanding that they were to be paid during the early part of the year. Many have remitted their amounts promptly, more have failed to do so.

The expenses of our pastor are great and his needs at this time are urgent. We must realize five hundred dollars on these subscriptions within the next few days. Brethren, will you not get out at once and get this money and send it to me by the first mail after it gets into your hands?

Some of the subscribers seem to resent personal appeals for settlement, but are not so concerned about the credit of the Church in the premises. The Board of Missions assumed certain obligations based upon full payment of this subscription list and finds itself embarrassed because of failure to get prompt remittances. "The King's business demands haste." Fraternally yours,

CHARLES W. CRISLER.

Treasurer Mississippi Conf. Board of Missions.

WAR CONDITIONS

— REFLECTED IN —

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

SALLIE STEWART GURLEY was born near Kossuth, Miss., on December 13, 1869, and died at her home on May 31, 1918. She was happily married to Mr. James Morrison, on December 20, 1888. Of this union were born three sons and four daughters. Her life was beautiful and her death peaceful. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South, and reared her children in the Church. She was seemingly in the best of health and radiated cheerfulness in her home and among her friends until the day of her death. While in conversation with her youngest child, she was suddenly called to her eternal home, leaving her friends and loved ones to grieve, not because her Savior has called her to a better home, but for the sad vacancy left behind her here. She is survived by her husband and seven children. Her oldest son, Jessie, is serving "somewhere" in France, while Robert, the second son, is at present stationed at Camp Pike, Ark. The other son, Lionel, and the four girls, Elizabeth, Roselind, Margaret, and Sarah Alice, remain at home to cheer the husband and father in his great affliction. Her pastor,

J. L. NABORS.

ABRAHAM B. JOHNSON ended his earthly journey on May 19, 1918, and went home to a well-earned reward. He was born on June 26, 1847, in this same community. In youth he gave his heart to God and joined our Church at Soule's Chapel in Lauderdale County, Miss., where he has been a useful member ever since, for forty years a faithful steward. On November 18, 1869, he was married to Miss Henrietta Robbins, who survives him. There were born to them two sons and five daughters, all of whom are living except one daughter. No one could have been taken from this community whose bright face, good life, glad testimony and effectual praying would have been more greatly missed, not only by those of his own family but also by the entire country-side. Men like this have been the Church's stay, the pastor's friend, the State's strength, and must ever be if our institutions abide. The writer was by his side when the end came. His last words were that he had no dread for the future and was ready to meet his God; so we can not afford to grieve for we shall find him in that better world where suffering will be no more and where eternal joy shall reign.

His pastor, A. J. DAVIS.

ELIZABETH FRANCIS THOMPSON FELDER, wife of R. H. Felder, was born on Sept. 13, 1837, and died on August 28, 1916. She was the daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth Thompson, of Pike County, Miss. She had five devoted sisters, and one brother, who died as a Confederate soldier. Sister Felder had an ample personality physically, mentally, and spiritually, and impressed all who knew her as a strong character. She was always interested in people and proved herself a friend to the high and low, rich and poor, alike. She laid strong hold on the virtues of religion, and though not emotional, was at times deeply stirred by them. She united with the Church early in life and lived a consistent Christian to her death, her faith in God growing stronger and her devotion to her church becoming more marked until God called her home. I was her pastor for two years. Her house was the preacher's home and a paradise for the children and grandchildren. Truly, she was the wise woman of Proverbs who looked well to the ways of her household and whose husband and children rise up and call her blessed. She is not dead but asleep in Jesus, awaiting the resurrection morn, for many times has she told me she was ready to go.

J. W. THOMPSON.

R. H. FELDER was born on October 9, 1824, in Pike County, Miss., where Magnolia depot now stands. He moved to Topisaw at the age of fifteen years, where he made his home most of the time until his death in the early part of this year, 1918. He went to war in 1861 and the next year he was made first lieutenant of the Thirty-third Mississippi Regiment and commanded the Company in Capt. Lamkin's stead. Just after the war, in November, 1862, he was elected sheriff of Pike County and served for four years. He believed in clean politics and served his county honestly and faithfully. On January 19, 1865, he was married to Francis Elizabeth Thompson, with whom he lived happily until she passed away on August 28, 1916. Five children blessed this union, four of whom are left to mourn their loss—Mrs. W. M. Sullivan, of Columbia, Miss.; Mrs. W. D. Beacham, and Messrs. John H. and Hugh Felder, all of Summit, Miss. "Uncle Bob" was a loyal member of the Methodist Church. It was my pleasure to be his pastor when he was about 85 years of age, and for two years he attended almost every service, missing only in case of sickness. His eager, upturned face was an inspiration, and he was always ready to encourage his pastor. He was the first to bid me welcome and the last to bid me Godspeed. I shall never forget his tender, tearful farewell at Topisaw parsonage gate and at Sister Beacham's home where I visited him a short time before his death. He was so anxiously awaiting God's call and told me, "I am waiting, longing to cross over." He and his good wife were among the main supporters of Topisaw Camp Ground, and their influence will be realized in the world to come.

J. W. THOMPSON.

The death angels came to the home of Brother W. T. LATHAM, June 29, and called him home to live with God. Brother Latham was born in Webster County, Miss., September 7, 1859, and died at his home, Noble, La., June 29, 1918. Brother Latham was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from his early manhood, and was ever faithful to his Church and to his obligations. "Do right" was his word; he believed if we would only do right that whatever we might need in this life would be supplied by the great Giver of all things. Often when people would speak of calamities, drouths, wars, and the like, he would say: "If we do right," so and so will be all right. Brother Latham was one of the most faithful men to his pastor I ever knew. He was always interested in the pastor's family. All along he would call on us to see if we needed anything, and when he found that something was needed he always supplied the need. No one will miss Brother Latham more than I. All he dreaded of death was the "sting," he said; for more than a year he has talked freely to me about dying, and he would always say, "I am ready when God gets ready." On Friday before he died he asked me to have Brother S. S. Holladay to assist me in his funeral, and said that he wanted the Masons to bury him after we got through; he added, "I will be in a happier place than you while you are putting away my frail body." His place can never be filled here. "Weep not for father as those who have no hope," for he is in heaven now, awaiting your coming; when your call shall come he will be among the first to meet you at the pearly gates of the new Jerusalem.

R. T. WARE, Pastor.

AN APPRECIATION.

Our friend and co-laborer, Mrs. H. C. Turner, entered into rest June 3. As a Missionary Society, we shall miss her wise counsel and her saintly influence. She was the last of the charter members of the Woman's Missionary Society and one of its life members. In the early days of its organization the burdens and problems fell heavily upon Mrs. Turner and some others "who passed on before," and so faithfully did they bear them and so well did they lay the foundation of the Society that it has since always been an active organization.

Though for several years, because of feebleness, Mrs. Turner could not be with us as in other days, still we knew she prayed for us and, as far as she was able, helped in the work done. Her presence was a benediction that we felt, even without realizing its source, and now that she is with us no more, still the blessing remains to strengthen and encourage. To her family and loved ones we extend our sympathy; as a Society we assure them of the debt we owe them, because of what Mrs. Turner did for us. In their sorrow they have the sweet assurance that all is well with her, for when life's evening drew on and the lights grew dim, she heard the Master's voice saying: "Beloved, it is enough; come up higher."

AMENDMENT TO THE CHARTER OF STANDARD COMPANY, INC.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Louisiana,
Parish of Orleans.

BE IT KNOWN, that on this Tweaty-fifth day of June in the year 1918; before me, J. KENTON BAILEY, a Notary Public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned,

PERSONALLY CAME AND APPEARED, William B. Reily, Jr., herein appearing in his capacity as President of the "Standard Company, Incorporated," and William B. Reily, herein appearing in his capacity as Secretary of said corporation, which said corporation was organized by an act before Wm. Andrew Collins, Notary Public, on February 23rd, 1916.

And said appearers declared that a special meeting of the stockholders of said corporation, at which all of the stockholders were present or represented by proxy, was held this day at the domicile of said corporation, by virtue of and pursuant to a unanimous waiver of notice, agreed to and signed by all of said stockholders in person or by proxy, and that at said special meeting of stockholders, by the unanimous vote of all of the stockholders of said corporation, all consenting and agreeing thereto, and by resolutions unanimously adopted, Article I and Article III of the charter of said corporation were altered, amended and changed so as to read as follows, to-wit:

ARTICLE I.

"The name and title of this corporation shall be 'STANDARD TEA AND COFFEE COMPANY, INCORPORATED.' It shall have a period of duration of ninety-nine years, unless sooner dissolved. Its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, State of Louisiana. It shall have, possess and exercise all of the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by law upon corporations of this character. All citations and other legal process shall be served upon the President, or, in his absence, upon the Secretary."

ARTICLE III.

"The Capital Stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at the sum of FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS, divided into Five Thousand Shares of Ten Dollars each, which stock shall be paid for in cash before issued. Ten Thousand Dollars, represented by One Thousand Shares, shall be denominated 'COMMON STOCK,' and the balance of Forty Thousand Dollars, represented by Four Thousand Shares of said stock, shall be denominated 'PREFERRED STOCK.' Said Preferred Stock shall have a preference and priority over said Common Stock in the assets of this corporation and shall be entitled to a dividend of Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue upon the par value of the same. Said dividends shall be cumulative and shall be paid in preference to any dividend on the Common Stock. In the event of liquidation or disposition of the assets of this corporation, the holders of said Preferred Stock shall be paid the par value thereof, together with the dividends above provided, before any payment is made on the Common Stock.

The Common Stock shall own the remainder of the net earnings of this corporation after the payment of the dividends on the Preferred Stock as above provided, or as much thereof as may be distributed by the Board of Directors and not reserved for the surplus or undivided profits.

Each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote in all stockholders' meetings for each share of Common Stock standing on the books of this corporation in his name, to be cast in person or by proxy, and the majority of the votes cast shall control any election or issue in all stockholders' meetings, but no vote on any matter shall be allowed to any stockholder on account of any Preferred Stock standing in his name.

This corporation may begin business as soon as Five Thousand Dollars of its Capital Stock is subscribed and paid for in cash. The Capital Stock of this corporation may be increased to One Hundred Thousand Dollars in either Preferred Stock or Common Stock, or partly in both, as shall be deemed best at a stockholders' meeting. The One Thousand Shares of the Capital Stock at present outstanding shall be classed and denominated as "Common Stock" and shall be so marked upon the face of the certificates by the Secretary of this corporation upon presentation for that purpose by the several holders of said stock. The remaining Four Thousand Shares of Preferred Stock shall be sold and issued, from time to time, at not less than par and for cash, as the Board of Directors of this corporation may authorize and direct. And this corporation, through its Board of Directors, shall have the right to call in and cancel any outstanding shares of Preferred Stock, in blocks of One Thousand Dollars at a time, upon the payment of the par value thereof, provided dividend amounting to Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue to the date of cancellation is or has been also paid on said stock."

All as will appear from a certified copy of the resolutions of the meeting of said stockholders, hereto annexed and made a part of this act.

THUS DONE AND PASSED in my office in the City of New Orleans, State, of Louisiana, on the day, month and year hereinabove written, in the presence of William Andrew Collins and Daniel W. THE PRENTISS (MISS. CONF.) CHARGE.

We have just closed a successful campaign on our charge. Brother Bennett, our Conference evangelist, was with us at three of our churches. We started in at Bassfield on the second Sunday in June. The good Lord blessed our labors from the very start. The meeting ran through Friday night with interest growing to the last. Eleven joined the Church. It was said by some to be the best revival held there in years.

Our next objective was Carson. The people for miles around were there on the third Sunday to greet us. The church was overflowed. The power of God was manifested; the people were intensely interested and the day was well spent for the glory of the Lord. Many people were blessed during the meeting and many were saved. Eleven were received into the Church at the close, which was Friday night.

On the fourth Sunday we entered on a siege of Prentiss. I don't think I ever saw the people more attentive and more really interested than in this meeting. The meeting grew in interest and power all through the week and when the last night of the meeting came the church could not hold the people. The meeting closed the fifth Sunday night. There were eleven received into the Church.

Brother Bennett is truly a strong preacher. His work is thorough and his sermons are clear, forceful and plain. He never wearies in serving the Lord and the Church. He preached three times and sometimes four times a day the whole time he was with me.

We held three street services that proved to be a great drawing-card for the meeting. Men heard the gospel on the streets who had not heard it in years. Only eternity will reveal the good that was done, and I believe time will show the good results that will follow the revival. I feel somewhat lonesome since Brother Bennett left. We all love him, and his name will live long in the minds of our people. May the good Lord bless him and honor him with good revivals wherever he goes; may he live long to be a blessing to the Church.

JAS. M. LEWIS.

A MISSISSIPPI REGIMENT AT CAMP BEAUREGARD.

By this time the 140th Field Artillery, which is stationed at Camp Beauregard, La., is a familiar term to the people of Mississippi and many of their friends elsewhere, this regiment having been made up of Mississippi boys. The 140th has won for itself the desirable reputation of being among the leading men of the entire division, both in personnel and in conduct.

For nearly a year the regiment was unbroken except for an occasional transfer, but recently we sent a goodly number away for service "over there." The vacancy made by those going overseas has been filled by men of the new draft, all of whom are splendid men and will make good soldiers.

The people of Mississippi have been very generous in contributing to the welfare of our boys ever since they came into service, all of which is genuinely appreciated by them. At present we need a number of things that would add to the comfort and attractiveness of "our home," as the boys are pleased to call our quarters, and to the general welfare of the men. These things are made possible only by the contributions of our friends. We think to mention this is all that is necessary. Any funds sent to the chaplain will be promptly acknowledged and carefully used for the benefit of the regiment.

In the meantime I stand ready to serve the people at home in any possible way. Very fraternally.

A. A. STANLEY, Chaplain.

LETTER FROM CLINTON, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Here are a few lines from Clinton. We think we are progressing a little. Since we last wrote you we have held our "Children's Day." Had a good program. Collection, $13.25. During the exercise, the Young Ladies' Bible Class presented to the Sunday school a beautiful silk "Service Flag" with 21 stars.

Our revival meeting began on June 20 and closed on June 30. Rev. Lastie N. Hoffpauir, of Franklinton, did the preaching, which was of a high class, revivalistic from beginning to close. The Church was very much revived. There were four additions on profession of faith. Clinton showed its appreciation for the work done in a substantial way.

We have added some new lights and installed a magnificent Epworth organ in our church. Our collections are somewhat behind, but we think we are pulling the lines so as to drive into Annual Conference with a full report.

Brethren, pray for us, that "we may come rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us"—that our little corner may not languish under our administration.

Fraternally yours,
A. J. COBURN, P. C.

WINNING THE WAR.

Labor is divided on the wet or dry issue. So are farmers and doctors and merchants and lawyers and preachers.

But war-time prohibition is not the wet or dry question. It is the food question. The liquor business consumes food equal to five million pounds of bread a day. Labor is a unit against that.

It is the fuel question. The beer business requires millions of tons of coal a year. It is said on good authority that the coal used and the cars required for its transporation would have averted the heatless, and hence wageless days, with millions of loss to laboring men and their families. Labor takes an undivided stand against that.

It is the transportation question. Last year when uncounted tons of potatoes, fruit and other perishables rotted for want of cars, the beer business used 500,000 cars and the locomotives to haul them. Labor is against that.

It is the man-power question. With the need for men far outrunning the supply, with the mothers and the maidens of the nation being mobilized for the rigorous toil of the farm, the manufacture. sale and transportation of beer requires 300,000 men in nonessential work. Trust labor to oppose that.

It is the win-the-war question. If the Allied armies had been stronger by ten per cent—probably by but five per cent—history would have written the story of the "spring drive" of 1918 on the other side of the page. The men, money, food, fuel, cars, buildings, profits, capital and business enterprise required in the beer traffic would have furnished the men, money and material to have strengthened our lines to a Gibraltar against which the German waves of shock troops would have dashed themselves to pieces. All labor, wet and dry, is for that.

And Congress should stop the waste, and stop it NOW! Not in the interest of "temperance;" not to speed prohibition; not to make men sober by law; not for sentimentalism—BUT TO WIN THE WAR.

Our food conservation will remain a farce until Congress ceases to save at the spigot while the beer bung is wide open. Let Congress first cast the five million loaves out of its own eye, then shall it see more clearly to cast the thick slice out of the nation's eye.

Every labor council and local, the men and women in every factory and shop should pass resolutions urging immediate war-time prohibition, not because they favor dry as against wet, but because they are patriots ready for any sacrifice to help to win the war. These resolutions should be sent to both senators, and to all the congressmen of the State. And every worker should write a card or letter of like purpose to his senators and representatives.

Let every organization and individual do his bit to hasten and insure victory.—The Unionist, Chicago, Ill.

Maybe So.

For a week the pupils of a kindergarten school had been studying about the wind, its powerful effect, etc., and the subject was getting exhausted. In an effort to stimulate interest the teacher in her most enthuiastic manner said:

And without a moment of hesitation they answered, "The conductor."—Selected.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The past session of the Divinity School was as good as any we have had, if not better. As far as the real practical results are concerned, I believe it the best.

I am off on a great trip given by one of our best laymen. I go to the great training school at Conference Point Williams Bay, Wis. I accept this as the opportunity of my life and am hoping that it will better prepare and fit me for the work in hand.

I am hoping that this trip will put something from me worth while into the District Sunday School Institutes. I am going to try to keep them in mind and am hopeful that I may return with something new for each department of Sunday school work.

I return by the way of Lake Junaluska, N. C., where our own training school for Sunday school workers is. I am glad of this opportunity also.

I feel that I am offering the raw material for the Sunday school factories to work on, and I am hopeful that they will do a good job.

I am anxious that all our Sunday school workers in the Mississippi Conference will keep the district institute dates in mind and begin to plan to go.

Pray for your Field Secretary.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

What does a preacher need most to help him in the great offensive against the world, the flesh, and the devil? I would say, family altars. Then what does a church need most to make it effective? I would say, a man that would teach his people how to have family altars. Cruel criticism, faultfinding, quarreling, and divorces are not the fruits of the family altar. Thousands of our people do not know that our Church has provided an excellent help in the Home Department Magazine that will meet their needs in family worship. This magazine will be mailed to a family for 35 cents a year.

A thousand new family altars in the North Mississippi Conference would change the religious atmosphere to an appreciable degree. A few men are at this foundation work—A. R. Beasley, J. G. Johnson, W. B. Baker, and J. A. George. Who will be next to join in the campaign for a thousand family altars during the next five months? Then report some of the results.

Teacher-training books have been placed in the following schools: Bluff Springs, Bethlehem, and Columbiana, on the Winona Circuit; Mt. Pleasant Union, and Marshall Institute, on the Mt. Pleasant Circuit; Noxapater and Mt. Pleasant, on the Noxapater Circuit; Pleasant Grove, Friendship, Poolville, and Sanders, on the Myrtle Circuit; Sherman and Belden on the Sherman Circuit; Bethel, on the Rienzi Circuit. It is a great thing to order the books, but a still greater thing to study them. One student, who lives in Senatobia, finished the course.

Mission study has been placed in the school at Vaiden, Bluff Springs, Columbiana, Sanders, Myrtle. Hind's Chapel has finished the course and raised $25 as a special for missions. We are training a new army for the greatest forward movement in the history of our Church. The thing that staggers me is that so few of our biggest men are taking hold of this main business of the Church—teaching missions. Do not wait for some one to tell you to do this work, but take the initiative and give your young people an opportunity to hear God's call.

Graded lessons for beginners have been placed in the following schools: Fredonia, Mt. Pleasant, Pleasant Grove, Poolville, and Sanders. Let me say again, that the Church has nothing else to meet the needs of the little child except the graded lessons. An intelligent, conscientious teacher will have nothing less than the best the Church affords. The work prospers as never before.

"THEY'S A KETCH IN IT."

Dr. Harvey Reeves Calkins was one day explaining to a group of church officers God's financial plan of weekly giving on a tithing basis. Turning to a shrewd farmer he asked if he had made the matter clear. The man replied, "They's a ketch in it." "Why, my brother, I intended to make it very plain," said the speaker. "Oh, it's plain enough," replied the farmer, "but there's a ketch in it, all the same, for I can see if we adopt that plan we'll be paying out more money than we intend to give."—The Missionary Voice.

Love never dies. Our partial knowledge dies amid the revelations of perfect vision. Faith will be needed no more where we know as we are known. Hope fades in fruition. But love abides forever. It never fails. Death may cut off the interchange of words, and acts of love, but its cold hand cannot touch that which is divine in origin, eternal in nature, and everlasting in duration.—Rev. F. B. Myer.

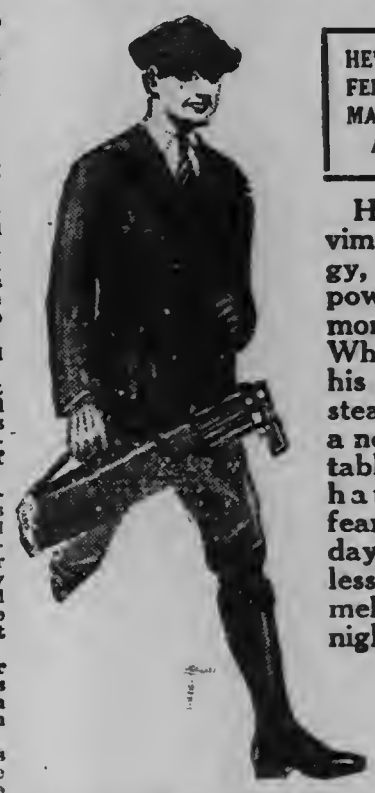
Physician explains How to help Build up Great Strength, Energy and Endurance

Cites Cases of Men Even 60 and 80 Years of Age Who Have Gained in Strength and Energy and Thereby Greatly Increased Their Mental Powers From Taking Nuxated Iron

Says a weak body means a weakened brain; weak nerve force means weakened will power, lack of sufficient iron in the blood has ruined many a man's nerves and cast him upon the rocks of Failure.



Commenting on the alarming prevalence of iron deficiency in the blood of American men and women, Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly Physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, said: "I have strongly emphasized the great necessity of physicians making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on year after year suffering from physical weakness and a highly nervous condition due to lack of sufficient iron in their red blood corpuscles without ever realizing the real and true cause of their trouble. Without iron in your blood your food merely passes through your body something like corn through an old mill with the rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind.

As proof of this take the case of General Horatio Gates Gibson, U. S. A. (Retired) who says that Nuxated Iron has brought back to him in a good measure that old buoyancy and energy that filled his veins in 1847 when he made his triumphant entry with General Scott into the City of Mexico.

Then there is Former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr of Chicago, who is past the three score year mark, but still vigorous, active, full of life, vim and energy. Former Health Commissioner Kerr says he believes his own personal activity today is largely due to his use of Nuxated Iron and that he believes it ought to be prescribed by every physician and used at every hospital in the country.

While former Health Commissioner Kerr is not himself a physician, still his experience in handling public health problems must give his opinion more than ordinary weight.

And then there is Former United States Senator Chas. A. Towne. Senator Towne says: "I have found Nuxated Iron of the greatest benefit as a tonic and regulative. Henceforth I shall not be without it. I am in a position to testify for the benefit of others, to the remarkable and immediate helpfulness of this remedy, and I unhesitatingly recommend Nuxated Iron to all who feel the need of renewed energy and the regularity of bodily functions. But, in my opinion, you can't make strong, vigorous, successful, sturdy iron men by feeding them on metallic iron. The old forms of metallic iron must go through a semi-digestive process to transform them into organic iron—Nuxated Iron—before they are so ready to be taken up and assimilated by the human system. Notwithstanding all that has been said and written on this subject by well known physicians, thousands of people still insist in dosing themselves with metallic iron simply, I suppose, because it costs a few cents less. I strongly advise readers in all cases, to get a physician's prescription for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—or if you don't want to go to this trouble then purchase only Nuxated Iron in its original packages and see that this particular name (Nuxated Iron) appears on the package. If you have taken such preparations as Nux and Iron and other similar Iron products and failed to get results, remember that such products are an entirely different thing from Nuxated Iron."

HE'S A LUCKY FELLOW—THIS MAN OF BLOOD AND IROM

He has the vim and energy, the brain-power and the money too—Why not be in his place instead of being a nervous, irritable weakling haunted by fear during the day and sleeplessness and melancholia at night?

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago and Former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, in commenting on the value of Nuxated Iron said: "This remedy has proven through my own tests of it to excel any remedy I have ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves, strengthening the muscles and correcting digestive disorders. The manufacturers are to be congratulated in having given to the public a long felt want, a true tonic supplying iron in an easily digested and assimilated form. A true health builder in every sense of the word."

MANUFACTURER'S NOTE—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by Dr. Sullivan, and others with such surprising results and which is prescribed and recommended by physicians everywhere, is not a secret remedy but one which is well known to chemists. Unlike the older inorganic iron preparations it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists and general stores.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI DISTRICT MEETINGS.

One of the standing rules of our Conference is that the District Meetings shall be held as soon as possible after the Council meeting; five of these meetings for 1918 have been held. The Corinth District meeting was held at Corinth as Miss Dunstan and I were returning from the Council. There was a good delegation present; the reports showed an optimistic outlook for the year and gave promise of each auxiliary's meeting the goal of ten per cent increase. Miss Rogers has a unique plan of an Honor Roll in her district, to be attained by those auxiliaries paying up by the quarter with the ten per cent gain added.

The Sardis District meeting was held at Como, May 24; there were seventy-five visitors, representing nineteen auxiliaries. Senatobia had the largest delegation. One auxiliary organized this year had four delegates. The entire meeting was filled with inspiration. On May 25 and 26 we held what may be termed "continuation meetings." To those who have read the leaflet sent out by Mrs. Lipscomb, "The Country Drive," it will seem that this was our plan, although we had not seen the leaflet at that time. Mrs. Riley was with me on this trip. On Saturday, with Mrs. O'Bryant, we went to Longtown to hold an all-day meeting, where we came in touch with Crenshaw and Cypress Corner also. On Sunday Mrs. Neblett joined us and we went out from Coldwater to Independence in the morning and to Greenleaf in the afternoon. At all of these places we had crowds. Pope was also included in our itinerary. One peculiarity about the Sardis District is that Mrs. Short has a number of workers in different sections of the district whom I shall call "assistant secretaries." Most of these were present at Como. Whenever she needs their help to organize, to visit weaker auxiliaries, or to plan for an itinerary such as we made, she never fails to receive response. This gives a strong organization throughout the district. Perhaps some others could use this plan to advantage.

The Columbus District meeting was held at Macon on June 11, and the part the Y. P. and Juniors took deserves special mention. The Round Table on Y. P. work was presented by the Brooksville and Macon Y. P. and was as strong a discussion as I ever heard. The Macon Juniors rendered an attractive program. On this same day Mrs. Haughton had her meeting at Houston. No account of this has come into my hands.

There is no doubt of the great value of these meetings. We need the touch with workers from other auxiliaries; we need sometimes the element of contrast to bring out some weak point; we must have the latest information to keep abreast. Do not minimize the necessity for holding them.

An Appeal.

The first half of the year has passed. Is your record for that time in advance of that period last year? I cannot close without appealing to you to show the greatest loyalty to the Missionary Society you have ever shown. This question is being asked of us, "Do you find the war activities interfering with the missionary work?" So far as reports are concerned, an increase is shown. But in some cases attendance has fallen off and this may work in the end to a loss; for to maintain our interest we must go on. I would that I could adequately present the responsibility that rests upon us in this time of crisis—for it is a time of crisis for the Church as well as the nation and the world. A new era will soon come, in which the Church must be ready to take its proper place. "We cannot prepare for to-morrow when it has already come." This is no place for a lessening of "war work;" we must do what we are asked to do along this line. But it is a plea for the maintenance of the interest in the work of the Church. Have you been staying away from the missionary society? Do not forget that each day of your life is a gift and a trust from God and you are a steward of time for which you must give account. Have you lessened your gifts through the channels of the missionary society? For so long have the calls for help come from those who know not God! We must not, through our indifference, add to the years of waiting. Are you uniting in prayer for the missionary enterprise of our Church? "There is a God for this hour and He wonders still why there are so few intercessors." "Give an account of thy stewardship." Luke 16:2.

Mrs. J. W. CONGER.

BIBLE A REQUIRED SUBJECT.

The decision of Columbia University to make knowledge of the Bible a requirement for admission is a significant sign of the times. The action was taken upon recommendation made by a committee representing Biblical instructors in American colleges and secondary schools. The course will include Old and New Testament history and the life of Christ. The wonderful revival in Bible study that has come out of the war is turning the attention of educational institutions to the Bible in a remarkable way. But more than this, the world is coming to see that the awful catastrophe which is devastating the world is the outcome of the materialism that has pushed the Bible aside and tried to furnish a civilization without its guidance.—Missionary Review.

JUNE ACTIVITIES AT ST. MARK'S HALL.

June 9 was a Red Letter Day at St. Mark's. In the Sunday school was observed Children's Day. The church was decorated with white daisies. An attractive program was rendered, which was enjoyed by the seventy-five persons present. A number on the "Baby Roll" were present, and a song of welcome was sung to them by the members.

Another feature of the day was the flag raising. The Italian flag was presented by Mr. Di'Micile. Rev. Mr. Romano received it with a stirring address. Mrs. A. Palmisano presented the service flag, the one star of which is in honor of her son. When the American flag was raised, Mr. John Saint made the address.

The third event of the day was the wedding of Miss Theresa Mandala and Mr. Joseph Ferari, which was celebrated at St. Mark's Church.

The regular monthly meeting of the Union Epworth League of the city was held at St. Mark's Church on June 11. The occasion was marked by the good attendance and large number taking part in the program. On the 16th, the Epworth League of Epworth Church conducted a temperance service for the St. Mark's League.

Two sacks of clothing and a box of new dresses for children were received from the auxiliary at Vivian, La. A linen tablecloth and twelve napkins came from the auxiliary of Shreveport.

When we are filled with love it is easy to work for God; it is easy to reach the fallen and the lost, if we can only convince them that love is the motive power; it breaks down every barrier. What we want is to be baptized with the love of God. If we are filled with love, there is no danger of backbiting, or of one person starting a false report of another; if we can only be filled with the love of God, we are going to be a power all through life.—D. A Fight for Life

It has been fight or die for many of us in the past and the lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's, called "An-u-ric." You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as Bright's disease, diabetes or stone in the bladder.

To overcome these distressing conditions take plenty of exercise in the open air, avoid a heavy meat diet, drink freely of water and at each meal, take Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets (double strength): You will, in a short time, find that you are one of the firm indorsers of Anuric, as are thousands of ueighbors.

SYLACAUGA, ALA.—"I suffered greatly with my back and kidneys. I called in doctors and they did me no good, but recommended an operation. I saw Anuric for kidneys and backache advertised so sent up to the drug store and got a package, and it cured me. This was one year ago. I was down in bed and had taken many different kinds of medicines but obtained no relief from them."—A. W. CUMBIE.

CAESAR, MISS.—"This is to certify I have been taking Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets for uric acid and kidney trouble, and would say to anyone who is afflicted with such, please, for your health's sake, try Anuric without delay. I had used several different remedies but to no avail, now I am recommending Anuric Tablets far and wide.

"I have known of Dr. Pierce's Remedies for 20 years, they are well worth using."—B. J. WILLIAMS.

Step into the drug store and ask for Anuric, or send Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c. for trial pkg. Anuric—many times more potent than lithia, eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

A LETTER FROM TERRAL, OKLAHOMA.

Dear Mr. Editor: We are spending a very pleasant vacation out here in Oklahoma. We know not how to thank God for our dear, good people in McComb for this lovely vacation to be spent at home with loved ones whom we had not seen for sixteen long years. We expect to stop over in Monroe, La., also Bryceland, La., to see loved ones there and the dear old home. We have not been there for twelve years. Our good people at McComb did not stop at just giving us a vacation, but they added a well-filled purse for all expenses. God bless them! Mrs. A. B. BARRY.

NO EASY ROAD TO SELF-MASTERY.

There is no easy road to self-mastery. The body must be subdued, the flesh mortified, the passions crucified, the cross taken, the race run, the battle fought. Every temptation, whether gradual or sudden, must be watched against; every impediment, whether slight or serious, must be thrown aside. We are naturally proud, discontented, selfish; that higher nature, which makes men humble, sweet, self-sacrificing, does not achieve the victory without a struggle. We are naturally prone to the indulgence which makes us the slave of our lower impulses; it is only by strenuous and long-continued effort, that we can ever secure over ourselves a serene and tranquil mastery.—Dr. Farrar.

CHRIST OUR EXAMPLE.

How easily and contentedly we speak of Jesus Christ as our example. Do we realize what it means? If we did, it would revolutionize our life. Do we begin to know our Bible as He did? Do we begin to pray as He did? How thoughtful He was for others, how patient toward dullness, how quiet under insult! Think of what it meant for Him to take a basin and towel like a slave and wash the disciples' feet! Do we stoop to serve? Can any one think of us that we "go about doing good"? Think of His words, servants of His: "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you." "Christ-like" is a word often on our lips. Do not speak it too lightly. It is the heart of God's predestination. It is our high calling.
M. D. Babcock.

Try It! Substitute For Nasty Calomel

Starts your liver without making you sick and can not salivate.

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs but a few cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.

The Itching and Sting of Blazing, Fiery Eczema

Seems Like the Skin Is on Fire.

There is a harrassing discomfort caused by Eczema that almost becomes a torture. The itching is almost unbearable, and the skin seems on fire with the burning irritation. A cure from local applications of salves and ointments is impossible, because such treatment can only allay the pain temporarily. The disease can only be reached by going deep down to its source.

The source of Eczema is in the blood, the disease being caused by an infection which breaks out through the skin. That is why the most satisfactory treatment for all so-called skin diseases is S. S. S., for this remedy so thoroughly cleanses the blood that no impurities can remain. Get a bottle to-day at any drugstore, and you will see results from the right treatment. Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in snch proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to imprnve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cnre ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortnnate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

C. V. TRUITT,
President Unity Cotton Mills.

Johnston, S. C.

I wish to add my testimony to the wonderful curative powers of the Shivar Mineral Water. For a nnmber of years my wife has been a sufferer from indigestion and nervous debility, and her condition had reached such a stage as to baffle the skill of our most eminent physicians. Her extreme nervousness and heart troubles at times were alarming and she had become almost a nervous wreck. The latter part of last May she began using the Shivar Water, which she has continued to this date with most satisfactory results.

DYSPEPSIA

Blaney, S. C.

I have suffered for many years from gastric troubles, stomach puffed and food sour. I have tried many remedies and a good many waters. Some have helped, but none have given me such relief as your Spring Water. I use it and recommend it to my patients.

W. D. GRIGGSBY, M. D.

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent qnite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for abont three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested yonr Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

BILIOUSNESS

Greenville, S. C., Feb. 26, 1914.

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my livermost marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

S. A. DERIEUX.

Buena Vista, Va., Oct, 2, 1914.

It is a great pleasure to tell you that your Water has heen a great benefit. I may say a great blessing, to me. My wife says it has helped me more than anything else I ever tried. I have been, for thirty years, a sufferer from stomach trouble.

LIVER AND KIDNEY

Ohoopee, Ga., Aug. 21, 1914.

I feel that it is due you that I shouid give my testimony, unsolicited, as to the benefits derived from the use of your Shivar Springs Water. I was unable to do my work, and had been under the treatment of physicians for six months for kidney and liver troubles when I decided to try your Spring Water, and now after using it for about thirty days I am able to do my work, feel good, and have gained ahout twenty pounds. I most heartily recommend its use to all who suffer from disorder of the liver and kidneys.

My wife has had a bad kidney trouble for several years. She has been using the water only about three weeks and it has already made her a new woman. Her color is much improved her appetite is all that she could wish for, her digestion seems to be perfect. We give Shivar Springs credit for it all.

GALLSTONES

Greenville, S. C.

Shivar Spring Water cnred my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as the doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. After drinking the Water she was able to get out of bed, and is today stout and healtby. I hope these few lines will be of help to some one suffering as my mother did.

My doctor said I would have to be operated on for gallstones, but since I have been drinking your water I haven't had to have a doctor.

W. H. EDWARDS.

Columbia, S. C.

My wife was a chronic sufferer from gallstones. She was stricken critically ill, and nothing but morphine seemed to relieve her pain by rendering her unconscious. My physician, who is a good one, seemed to do very little good. Rev. A. J. Foster, pastor of Shandon Baptist Church of Columbia, S. C., advised me to take her immediately to Shivar Spring. On consulting my physician he agreed that it would be best to do so without delay. In about three days after arriving at the Spring she was apparently relieved and had regained her appetite. She has suffered no ill effect of the trouble since. Please publish this for the benefit of sufferers

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 65—No. 29. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3256.

REV. H. T. CARLEY, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1918. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

"How careful, then, I ought to live!
With what religious fear!
Who such a strict account must give
For my behavior here!"

The hungry man is not satisfied with knick-knacks and light confections—he wants something substantial. So it is in the realm of the spiritual.

We owe children our love by reason of their innocence and helplessness; we owe them our care and guidance by reason of their possibilities. We generally pay the debt of love; do we pay the other?

Goodness is an abstract quality, but we nearly always think of it as concreted in character. Goodness is one of the Christian graces, one of the fruits of the Spirit, without which we cannot claim Christian character.

If I allow ignorant and sinful men to fix my standard of conduct, I have abdicated the throne of reason and done despite to God's Holy One. As I am answerable to God for my conduct, I must take his law for guidance.

Our brave sailor and soldier boys are not ashamed of their uniforms when they appear in public; rather they are proud of them, for they are the marks of their patriotic consecration. Why should the Christian ever be ashamed of the marks of his profession?

The success of a revival is not measured by the degree of excitement or emotion that is aroused. It is measured by the quickening of the spiritual currents of life, and the deepening of the springs of Christian character. It shows itself in a more perfect allegiance to the teachings of Christ.

"Time and tide wait for no man." This saying warns us to make the best use of our opportunities. How much is lost to our lives by a failure to do this! We live in spiritual poverty ourselves, and know nothing of the joy that comes from helping others. And at the end of life, we face failure.

We need not exercise ourselves trying to picture what heaven is, until we realize more perfectly what home is. The transition from home to heaven will be great, but the change will be more of degree than of kind. How can those who seem not to care for the lesser, hope to enjoy the greater?

There will always be those who are opposed to sending the gospel to the heathen, not because they object particularly to their having it, but because they do not want to help bear the expense of sending it. With many, it is a question, not of duty but of dollars. If the gospel could be sent without cost, very much less objection would be heard.

HOW TO GET A BETTER PLACE.

We are sorry for the man, preacher or layman, who does not constantly want a promotion—a better place. The motive behind this ambition should, of course, be unselfish—that is, it should result from a desire to realize fully one's own possibilities in the development of character, and to do the greatest possible amount of good. A heaven-inspired ambition always has been a condition of success. The caution is, be sure that the ambition is heaven-inspired. We have two suggestions to make especially to our younger brethren that we believe will help them to realize their own highest possibilities, and at the same time will very greatly help the work of the Church.

The first suggestion is this: Fit yourself to hold a better place. We believe that the Church's greatest practical need at this time is a thoroughly trained, efficient ministry. Modern life is very complex, and proper adjustment to all its requirements is becoming increasingly difficult. Positions of leadership can be filled satisfactorily only by those who are willing to pay the price of necessary preparation.

In most of our charges that are desirable from a worldly point of view, the social requirements, for example, are strict. We may profess a contempt for the conventionalities of social life; but that does not at all change the fact that these conventionalities have become fixed and are observed unquestioningly by those who have been reared in surroundings of culture and refinement. Their observance is not, to be sure, a condition of purely moral perfection, but it is a very simple test of social adaptation. No congregation of cultured people cares especially to have a preacher who is embarrassed, or who causes embarrassment, by his ignorance or disregard of the simple rules of social propriety. In matters of dress, of personal appearance, of table etiquette, of social intercourse, of habits of speech, the preacher who wants a better place ought to be sure that he is unobjectionable. And this is largely a matter of careful attention to such things.

The general cultural requirements are no less strict. Our people are, as a rule, more intelligent, perhaps, than we give them credit for being. They read the daily newspapers and current magazines, and a good many of them are not unfamiliar with the serious currents of thought that are controlling the policies of the world to-day. The preacher who never reads a new book, who is not tolerably familiar with the daily happenings of world interest, who is not able to join intelligently in discussion of topics of vital importance, is not likely to be sought for as the pastor of a strong church.

We will not speak of the religious and spiritual requirements; they are fundamental, and are presupposed in all cases. We cannot believe that any of our preachers are lacking in these particulars.

The second suggestion is this: Make a better place of the one you now have. The ideal appointment has not yet been evolved. There is room for improvement in the best we have; and in some of our charges, there is room for a great deal of improvement. If the authorities of the Church fail to recognize at once our fitness for a better place than the one we now have, we should not allow ourselves to become discouraged—we can overcome their lack of vision by making a better place for ourselves. If every preacher in our Church, no matter what his position is, would deliberately and courageously and determinedly and religiously resolve to make his present appointment the best of its class in the Conference, the welfare of the Kingdom would be tremendously advanced, and at the same time there would result an enlargement of power and a strengthening of resources and a widening of vision that would make him forget all about place in the greatness of the opportunity where he now is.

Do you want a better place? Then prepare yourself for it, and make a better place of the one you now have.

WHAT THE WAR WILL COST.

We have become accustomed to think of the cost of the war in terms not merely of millions, but of billions of dollars. No man can tell how long the war will last, or how many billions of dollars it will take to win it. But the chief cost is not going to be measured in terms of dollars—it must be measured in terms of human lives. Already our list of killed, wounded in action, and missing, has reached more than ten thousand. These are men who are our brothers and fathers and sons and husbands and sweethearts. Who can count the tears that have fallen, the moans of anguish that have gone up, the agonizing cries of sorrow, as the names of those who have fallen have flashed over the wires to their loved ones? And this is but the beginning, so far as we can judge. The end may come soon—God grant that it may—but if it does not, many more lives will be sacrificed for the world's good.

Is it worth it? Ask the pardoned criminal if liberty is worth the intercession of his friends; ask the radiant mother if her noble boy is worth the pain and anxiety of his rearing; ask the triumphant Christian if his joy and hope of glory are worth the Cross. Yes, it is worth it. It is a tragedy that it should have to be paid, but when the world is made safe for democracy, and Hunism has been blotted from the face of the earth, while we mourn with those who have lost their loved ones, we shall with them thank God that in our day men have counted their lives not dear, and have freely poured out their blood that this might be a fit world in which to live. It is worth it not only for what it gains for the world, but also for what it shows the world it already had—MEN.

We hear it said, now and then, that the Church ought to do this or that, because of what the world will think of her if she does not do so. Is the Church of Christ to shape her conduct by the standards of the outside world? In some of its conceptions the world is right; but the proper gage of duty for the Church is not what unchristian men would think, but what the Master would think. Too much concern for promiscuous public opinion is not apt to be conducive to the true welfare of Zion.

THE FRONT LINE—THE INNER LINE.

The defenders of the Inner Line steady and constant kneel,
Some bent, some grey or crippled, some threescore years and ten,
Just praying, always praying, for the Front Line fighting men.

These cannot lead a sortie, nor breast the ocean's foam,
But their fervent prayers as incense rise from church and cottage home.
The poor man and the wealthy all form the Inner Line,
Linked by a common sorrow in a brotherhood divine.

You can hear old voices quaver, you can see the slow tears fall.
Yet the Inner Line keeps steady, while flag and honor call!
They pray, and who can measure such prayers' resistless might?
They trust the Lord of battles—He will defend the right.

THE MYSTERY OF SUFFERING.

At the very heart of the mystery of pain is the mystery of suffering innocence. The problem becomes acute when we reflect on the outrages committed upon helpless women and children in Belgium and portions of France, or when we try to visualize the unspeakable massacres of helpless Armenians. A measure of light has been vouchsafed to us, however. Life is so inextricably interrelated that the good or evil of even a single individual benefits or injuries an ever enlarging number. The slight cause is ever the parent of far-reaching consequences. It is necessary to remember that no man liveth unto himself and that the law of mutual inter-relation has brought us not only the mystery of suffering innocence, but also the mystery of undeserved joy. In many ways we all reap where we have not sown.

As for the mystery of suffering innocence, we know beyond a doubt that God cares. The Cross of Calvary is the guarantee of God's saving interest in all creatures. The sufferings of Christ are the pledge of God's eternal love. The compassionate Savior has revealed the boundless mercy of our God. Already in this life we see how God is ever turning suffering to good account. All things are said to work together for good. The bee that stings is the producer of honey. God's sovereignty is surely manifest in this, that He makes even the wrath of man to praise Him. Wonderful is the grace and might of the God and Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. If in this world we see the wonders of divine Providence and find surrounding us the evidences of the lofty ministry of pain, we may leave to God's mercy and wisdom the destiny of those whose untimely end we bemoan or whose joy was turned into mourning by the fiendish acts of men. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

It is not for us to know the details of the divine Administration nor have we the knowledge to judge finally of the ways of God with men, but we know that God is rich in mercy and that the issues of life shall be to the praise of the glory of His grace. The inconceivable resourcefulness of Omnipotent Love will provide far more than our imagination can span, for all who have been bereft of the treasures of life and who in the day of calamity turned the eye to heaven's inmute appeal. When the long story of human sin and sorrow is ended and Death has laid a blighting hand upon life for the last time, God will appear in sovereign grace as the author of a mighty salvation and Jesus Christ, His best gift to men, will have as the fruit of His redeeming love a multitude whom no man can number. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise Him, who is the help of my countenance, and my God."

THE SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY.

By Rev. Hoyt M. Dobbs, D.D., Dean.

New emphasis in all lines of endeavor has been laid during the past year upon the importance of producing trained workers for the tasks made necessary by the righteous action of the President of the United States in espousing the cause of democracy and of the allied nations of the world. The soul of democracy is the spirit of Christ. The aims of the President and of the American people are one in the great struggle to make the world safe for democracy and democracy safe for the world.

No discerning mind underestimates the significance of these days in the history of the world. The Church, naturally, has felt the stress of the time as has every other institution, religious, educational, social, industrial and political. This was to be expected. It is in keeping with Apostolic Christianity and its purposes from the beginning.

On all sides it is very generally agreed that in the rebuilding of the world, the principles of Christianity and Christian institutions will have even a larger place. Thoughtful men now recognize the fact that the forces of human progress include both spiritual and material factors. Heredity and environment are influential ones, but personal initiative and divine grace are now also included as worthy and well qualified in shaping the destiny of the individual and of the group.

This is therefore the hour of a great opportunity for the Church and its institutions. Fortunately the opportunity is realized. No longer is it necessary to argue the importance of the demand for trained workmen in the ministry. The Chautauqua, the institute, the summer school, the schools of correspondence, and the training camps throughout our country render the question of ministerial training no longer a debatable one.

The School of Theology of Southern Methodist University enjoys the two-fold advantage of being situated in a city dominated by the forces of righteousness, and of being an integral part of an institution of higher learning where Christian ideals and spiritual values have first place. The recent action of the General Conference in bringing the whole Church into vital relation not only to the School of Theology, but to the entire University, is indicative of the attitude of our people throughout the connection.

The aims of the University in maintaining a School of Theology are both historical and practical. On the one hand, it is thought desirable to relate the work in a proper manner to all that has gone before; and on the other hand, to keep constantly in mind the needs and opportunities of the present time. The religion of the age must also be the religion of the ages, and we build in the present on the past, and for the future. The spirit and the method, therefore, which will yield the largest results will have neither stupid adherence to antiquity nor profane appetite for novelty. Christianity is a certain wonderful way of living, and the institutional forms which have housed it may change and be changed in many ways, but its energies will be continually operating more and more toward individual and social redemption. It is the conviction of all representative educators to-day that it is easily possible for men to be morally certain and intellectualy respectable at one and the same time. It is now considered a reasonable thing to "think in believing" and to "believe in thinking."

The leadership of the Church of to-morrow, if it is to prove equal to the tasks committed to it by worthy predecessors, must continue to be a leadership of apostolic character, trained mind, and forward-looking vision.

The call to the colors has taken from the ranks of the University a large number of the strongest men. The School of Theology has been pleased to make its contribution. A number equal to thirty-seven per cent of last year's enrollment of those studying for the ministry have gone into that form of service for the Government. President Wilson has urged us to keep the home-fires burning in the churches and to sustain the morale of our people at home. It is gratifying to note, therefore, that both the faculty and student body have shown officially their willingness to serve either at home or abroad as the Government and the Church may see fit to indicate. Judged by character, influence and ability, the ministerial students compare favorably with other groups in the life of the University. There are no artificial lines of division or separation either in the dormitory life or the work of the classroom. It has been thought profitable for them to preserve this solidarity, and for the religious leadership of the Church of the future to mingle in and with the normal life of the church, class-room and campus; and it has been likewise thought profitable for the lay leadership of the Church of the future to feel the influence of the young men preparing for the ministry.

Another settled conviction in the work of the University and the School of Theology has been and is that the standards of scholarship must not be sacrificed to the more practical demands of the hour. We have been fortunate in being so situated as to be able to combine the theory and the practice of the work of the ministry. Twenty-six of the students have had pastorates in and near the city of Dallas. Twelve of these student-pastorates have been in the Dallas District. It is a time-honored criticism of theological seminaries that they have sometimes yielded to the inclination to become detached from the main currents about them and that in some instances they have been not only inhospitable to new truth, but also indifferent to the great zones of neglected life around them. We have been able to guard against both of these tendencies by virtue of the fact that the University as a whole embodies Christian ideals, and that in a center of civic righteousness like the city of Dallas large opportunities are given the students for observing at first hand the significant movements of the religious world. In addition to all of this, it is fitting that attention should be called to the type of men in the faculties of the University. Thus it will be seen that the motive, the method and the surroundings combine to create the type of men in the ministry demanded by the age.

The students have usually made no requests for help. They have sought and obtained many opportunities for helping themselves, and even those who have accepted scholarships amounting to $125 a year have felt constrained in a majority of instances to make some reciprocation in the form of definite service in and around the University. Religion, patriotism and democracy have been exemplified in a satisfactory manner in many instances. Devotion to Christ, self-sacrifice and heroism have not been lacking.

During the year quite a number of the most distinguished men in both Church and State have addressed the student body. We deem it essential that the leadership of our own time be known and appreciated as well as that of other generations.

Attention is called to the fact also that two new members have been added to the faculty—Dr. Jesse L. Cuninggim, Professor of Sunday School Pedagogy, and Dr. Comer Woodward, Professor of Sociology.

Additional features in connection with the constructive work of the school for the ensuing year will be the organization of classes in Christian Sociology for the purpose of broadening the con tact of the student with the religious, economic, educational and social life of the community; and the organization of classes interested in the modern church and its management.

By action of the General Conference the School of Theology has been authorized to conduct a Correspondence School for all our undergraduate preachers west of the Mississippi River. This action of the Conference, under the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, brings more than four hundred young ministers into official relation to the University. The law becomes operative after the next session of the Annual Conferences.

The Faculty of the School of Theology have rendered most efficient co-operation not only in the classroom, but also have traveled extensively throughout the West and in other parts of the Church, preaching, holding meetings, lecturing and delivering addresses in behalf of the Government and of the Church.

Mention must also be made here of the splendid service rendered the School of Theology by Rev. Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon, President Robert S. Hyer and Mr. Frank Reedy. Bishop Mouzon's presidency of the Board of Trustees, President Hyer's administration of the University, and Mr. Reedy's management of affairs as Secretary and Treasurer have made possible the work of the School of Theology.

This briefly outlines the work of the past twelve months. We are profoundly grateful for whatever measure of success has been achieved. The University, after three years has to-day accredited representatives in two hemispheres engaged in the service of humanity. Its history is the basis for the belief that its future has boundless possibilities for humanity and the Kingdom of God.

THE APPEARANCE OF THE PREACHER IN THE PULPIT.

By Rev. Payton A. Sowell.

I attended a service in a Methodist church, a reasonably handsome city house of worship. The adjustment of the preacher's clothes to his person so impressed my mind that the caption to this article was suggested. Being a Methodist, I am concerned for the cause of Methodism.

I recalled that a short time before I had attended services in a church of another denomination in the same city; and the quiet taste with which the young preacher was attired reminded me of the contrast, not in the matter of costly clothes, but in the difference of the adjustment of the clothes as to tasteful appropriateness.

Preachers need to sit sometimes in the audience. It was a "woeful" day when vests were discarded by preachers in the pulpit. There is a great lack of the tasteful, when a preacher wears a short-waisted pair of trousers, and no suspenders, a long-waisted shirtbosom, and leaves his coat unbuttoned and swings his arms, in constant, meaningless gesticulations. He needs to sit before himself at least one summer Sunday evening to be convinced that the laws of the best taste suggest that the coat be buttoned, if a vest is discarded. When God gave direction to His priests, He was particular about the tastefulness of their dress. It is not necessary to be buttoned in a "clerical suit," but there are laws of moderation that should govern the preacher in his dress in the pulpit.

Away up in the hills of Tennessee, at the request of a presiding elder, I went to assist a young preacher, a man of fine personal appearance, and of a charming character. The presiding elder said: "If you can find an opportune time, say something to him about wearing a vest in the pulpit." When I saw him Saturday night in the pulpit, with a long-bosomed shirt and no suspenders, I resolved I would find the opportune time. As we rode over the hills, I mentioned the vest; I did so in the most courteous way I could. I do not know whether he buttons his coat or wears a vest, or whether he still slings his arms, and wears a long-bosomed shirt; but I know my love for Methodist preachers induced me to attempt to cure him of a thoughtless habit.

Little things enter largely into the sum total of our appreciated value. People may say nothing; they may not know what it is that shapes their estimate of the preacher. Some one has said: "It will add a thousand dollars to a preacher's salary, if he shaves every day." This is not true, in fact, but it points a lesson. Of all men, a preacher should so dress that his dress will cause no mention at all.

New Orleans, La.

THE MAKING OF AN ARMY CHAPLAIN.

The following account of the work of the training school for chaplains will be read with interest by many of our own Church. Southern Methodism is furnishing its quota of chaplains, each of whom has to take this training. The account was written by Arlo Ayres Brown for the Christian Advocate (New York).

"Attention!" "Right dress!" "Front!" "Keep your hands down!" "Don't mind that fly walking over your brain—he won't fall in!" "Right about, face!" "Forward, march!" "Keep your hands down!" "Don't smile; this is serious business." "Every man who talks unless the company is given the order 'At rest!' will be reported to headquarters!"

Ministerial Rookies.

You may have guessed the scene. It is a "rookie" company getting its first taste of marching and military discipline. Or, if you wish to change the scene, see them ready for equitation. "Get ready to mount!' "Mount!" "Fall in by twos!" "Forward, march!" "Close up!" "Don't let the horse ride you, ride the horse!" "What's the matter? Slip him a quarter and maybe he will go!" "Feet out of stirrups!" "Now trot!"

Serious business? No doubt about that, and good fun too. The officers are here as instructors to make chaplains of us, and while it is not pleasant to be "bawled out" for a mistake, the "rookie" would rather be held to such discipline by instructors who are his friends and helpers than to commit a violation of the rules later when the consequences will be more serious.

If anyone doubts the determination of the War Department to develop an expert corps of chaplains, let him visit the Training School for Chaplains and Approved Chaplain Candidates at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky. The writer reported for the opening of the session which began on June 1. He had looked forward to the privilege of going because it seemed no less than tragedy for a man who represented the Church in the army to be the only officer untrained for military service.

His expectations were high, but the facts exceeded his expectations. He expected some study, but he was hardly prepared to tackle a course of college grade with about thirty hours a week of recitation when the normal requirement in a college is fifteen. He found all this in addition to "setting up exercises" before breakfast, an hour of military drill and another hour or more of equitation each day.

But no man objects to hard work in a school if the incentives are sufficient and if the instructors are good. In this case the instructors are excellent, the incentives are compelling and the associations are inspiring. Every member of the school is especially pleased with his associates. Out of an enrollment of ninety-five who began work on June 1, thirty are Methodists (twenty-three being Methodist Episcopal), and twenty-six are Roman Catholics. The Baptists have fifteen, the Presbyterians ten, the Disciples five, the Lutherans five, the Congregationalists two, the Moravians and United Brethren one each. Not the least among the privileges of the school is the opportunity to associate intimately with pastoral leaders of so many denominations. From their general bearing as well as from their sermons it is impossible to tell what a man's church affiliations are.

If their former congregations could only see this company, once so dignified (perhaps), lined up in front of the mess hall with knife, fork and spoon stuck in their leggings, and their metal pans held out for food, they might have feelings of sympathy and unholy glee. If they could see them snatch a few moments of recreation at baseball or singing, their hearts might burn with jealousy, but if they could see them doing the week's wash with soap and scrub brush, the jealousy would soon take wings.

Where Adaptation Counts.

There is a rumor here that "adaptation" counts five hundred points of 1000. The graduates of the school who cannot adapt themselves to military life with its joys and hardships will not fail for lack of training, because as a school in adaptation it is about perfect.

The outcome only the future can show, but those who are here are extremely grateful to the War Department which sent them, to Chaplain Pruden, the commanding officer, and to his staff of instructors for such an opportunity. We covet for every new man who goes to the front as chaplain the privileges of such training. And the writer covets for his own Church, the Methodist Episcopal, the honor of sending into this form of world service the largest proportion of men trained specifically for their military and religious duties. It should become a common saying in the army: "Wherever you find a Methodist chaplain you will find a man who is 'on the job,' trained and expert in his duties."

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT SCOTT RICKETTS, DOCTOR OF LETTERS.

Born at Vicksburg, on March 5, 1843; volunteered at 18 years of age for the Civil War, serving throughout; after the war, teacher in following institutions:

University, Baton Rouge, La.; President of Port Gibson College, from 1867 to 1873; Whitworth Female College, from 1873 to 1893; first Head Master, Preparatory Department, Millsaps College, serving from 1894 to 1911; from then to time of death, Professor in the same department.

These dates prominently mark the biography of a good and great man. Biology fleshes and fills out such framework, and cannot be expressed briefly at all. The life of Dr. Ricketts is the property of a very great number. For more than half a hundred years the flow of his extraordinary graces and gifts passed into the lives of young women, men and boys of the State. His spirit held purest virtues, so blended as to multiply in constant abundance. The philosophy of his life was so generous towards men that he could not have known an enemy, and could unaffectedly claim all men for his friends. No man went to him and came away from him without a rich share of what had been already his.

Previous to his service at Millsaps College, the steadfast force of his personality had conveyed and fixed high ideals for the future of many young women, who would testify if they were here. With the rise of the Preparatory Department of the College, Dr. Ricketts continued and completed his inspiring work.

We inscribe our belief in him upon this record, that the high principles of his life—truth, faith, honor, integrity, purity, self-devotion to duty—harmonized a conduct which never suggested any possibility of real interruption, or stain, in manner or in action. In honor to such gifts and their employment we consecrate this page, to be treasured and preserved. Clean as sunshine he lived, and as vitalizing as sunlight was he to the multitude who knew and received from him.

A great part of his life remains in the present and future values of this College. Life used as Dr. Ricketts used his holds small likeness to the lake, placid, clear under blue or clouded skies. In active, penetrating, pervasive, positive manhood he moved as the long stretch of shining water. Along the lips of the stream gathered the thirsting, the hungering, reviving at the fountain of his spirit, resting in the clear quiet of his saintly spirit.

On behalf of the Board of Trustees,

W. H. HUNTLEY.

GLOWING.

By W. C. Page.

Near a limpid lake, whose waters were ruffled by the wind, whose waves lapped and scattered spray upon its mossy banks, there lay a stretch of shady woodland, where grew many wild flowers, shrubs and vines. It was nature's own garden—uncultivated and untrampled. These plants slept all winter under the friendly cover of the fallen leaves; or, perhaps the snow softly drifted, and nestled protectingly over them.

Winter past, the sunbeams began to warm, the showers refresh, and the rough winds to awaken these plants to the glory of springtime. The flowers opened their eyes, sighed, and fell asleep again, only to awaken full of vigor and renewed life.

It was noontide of a perfect day; a white violet raised its modest head and said shyly: "I am the harbinger of spring; when I come, soon the drone of the bees, the song of the robin, may be heard; other flowers follow my coming. I am so happy to herald the spring and help gladden the earth."

A wild rose grew beside a lifeless tree, its vines and tendrils reaching far up, and covering the barren branches with a profusion of green foliage and radiant blossoms. The rose lifted its lovely tinted face, and said proudly: "I am a child of summer;" she blushed and the pink of her cheeks grew deeper. "I do my best, to make cheerful my particular place, by glowing."

The leaves drifted, the winds sighed through the brown branches of the trees, the early twilight, quivered and died away, to reveal the brightness of the stars. Birds sang a requiem over the glories of the departed summer. All the earth was sad.

A cluster of golden-rod held up its bright head, and said: "I come to proclaim the autumn; the harvests are ready to be garnered, the grain ready for the reaper; 'tis the golden fruition of the whole year. I try to brighten my corner by glowing with all my might, content and happy if I can make this spot more cheerful."

The cold came, ice and snow covered the bare earth, the water of the lake was frozen—all nature slept.

A branch of holly waved its bright leaves, smiled and said: "I am winter's only child;" and it grew scarlet with happiness. "I make wreaths and trees for the Christmas cheer; I am happy to do my bit."

So it should be with mortals, for we are created, and placed where God wishes us to be, whether in the station of the stately rose, or the modest violet. We should do our best to gladden and make bright our corner of God's garden of the world by having our hearts to glow with his love; we should make cheerful our place by self-sacrifice and service to others. Are we making glad our nooks?

WAR CAMP COMMUNITY SERVICE.

What It Aims to Do.

By H. S. Braucher.

The experiences of history prove that in all wars the ordinary perils of civilian life are greatly intensified for the enlisted men who are called upon to sever the normal relations of life and endure the sustained stress of the most extreme physical hardship and emotional tension.

In the present gigantic world war into which the United States has been called to defend the most precious treasures it possesses and to use its full power for the establishment of the foundation of a permanent peace in the world, our government has sounded a bugle call. Out from the cities and villages long lines of brown and blue are marching towards the front to keep the stars of "Old Glory" there and to prove that right and mercy are greater than might and hate.

Wherever a man walks in the khaki or blue of Uncle Sam's uniform there is my brother or my son, my father or my husband. Whether he serves on the sea or on the land as fighter or helper, as bridge guard or gunner, about him glows a halo. His salt red blood and his keen nerves of steel, his sinuous muscles and white bones stand between me and the concentrated forces of scientific barbarism. There he stands with the blood of all nations pumping through his heart, saying to the world that democracy shall be safe, that every man shall have his opportunity to live under liberty, that in the future little nations shall not tremble before the swash-buckling bully nation, that only one throne shall be established, the throne of God in the heart of man, and only one dynasty shall prevail, the family of friends and neighbors.

Three great interests are left behind as the men fall in line for the training camp—the work interest, interest in home, and the interest in leisure. Of these in the ordinary duties of soldier and sailor, but one is adequately replaced. Instead of the daily task of earning a living, is the service rendered as duty to the country. That this new work shall be high grade and helpful to the man as well as serviceable to the nation, we all have confidence in our government to establish.

What shall be done to link the man in the camp to his home folk and retain for him the expressions of their love, especially in his lonely hours? How shall that leisure which he has so much enjoyed in fellowship with his friends at home be filled with wholesome recreation when the tents and barracks grow tiresome and he seeks companionship in the city near by, hoping for a time to find relief and relaxation from the vigors of military duty?

Nothing less than full capacity service will be satisfactory to the government that calls, the man who responds and the home town that sends. Capacity service cannot be rendered by the man who spends his time and strength out of camp in drink, vice or even in idleness. The government knows this, every thoughtful person knows it. The War Camp Community Service Program of the War and Navy Departments Commissions on Training Camp Activities has been built with the one purpose in mind of creating every opportunity for the American soldier and sailor to become the nearest perfect physically, the most alert mentally, the most sound morally of all soldiers and sailors the world has produced to date. The magnitude of this undertaking is better understood when it is recalled that there are camps scattered over the country, some of them with forty, fifty thousand men near cities of a few thousand people who have no adequate means of handling the leisure of the soldiers and, what is more critical, some of these camps near enough to large cities to present to the men most enticing temptations to evil which commercial exploiters can devise.

Without arguing for brotherhood it is intended to establish brotherhood by extending to the men in the camps the hospitality of the homes, the fraternal societies, the churches and other organiations in the camp communities. Without scheming for sentimentality, the deepest and sweetest emotions in the hearts of the men are to be given wholesome expression, for example in community singing, which is without doubt the highest and best form of patriotic, emotional outlet. Without capitalizing or shaming religion there will be established such contacts for the men that they shall find it natural to be religious, securing confirmation of their faith in God and themselves, facing death when it may come bravely, knowing their own souls and the soul of America cannot die.

It does not diminish the glory of the symbolism of the uniform or reduce the glow of the halo that America is happily placing about her enlisted men, to look upon them as human beings with all the natural desires and longing of "regular folks." The War Camp Community workers remember that the men for whom they are organizing the civic forces are genuine men who want places to go for wholesome amusement, who want the fellowship of young women in happy social ways, who want to see pictures, sing, go to lunch and dinner with kind friends, who want to swim and skate and play ball and tennis, who want the privileges of churches, club rooms, libraries, social centers, who want the best influences used for them and a chance to choose the better places and people instead of the worse. Everyone concedes the reasonableness of the work, but it requires ability and experience in the organization of the social and recreational forces of the city to get order out of chaos and with economy secure results.

Therefore the Commission has taken direction of the work in every camp community, placing one representative or more at each camp, who shall adapt the general plan of the commission to the locality and by utilizing present facilities and developing new ones, by getting the business interests, the educational interests, the church and home interests, the fraternal interests together, see to it that the off-duty time of the men is conserved for their own and the country's advantage.

REV. S. M. THAMES.

Whereas, Rev. S. M. Thames has been called from his earthly task to be with God and the redeemed who have gone before; and, whereas, Brother Thames was associated with every hour and circumstance of the history and development of Millsaps College from the inception of the plan for its organization to the day of his death; and as one of the incorporators, and as a member of the Board of Trustees, was for twenty-six years a loyal and devoted friend of the College, and gave himself unstintingly and ungrudgingly to secure its largest success; therefore,

Be it resolved, That in his going away we have sustained a loss which can never be repaired. We have lost a valuable and devoted friend of the College; but we have lost, too, one of the few of those pioneer spirits who remain of that noble company who wrought so heroically and unselfishly in the founding of this institution, and in steering it past the breakers that lie in the way of any new educational venture.

Be it resolved further, That, in recognition of the long and distinguished service rendered the College, we hereby record our very profound and sincere appreciation of the life and character of Brother Thames; and that we do acknowledge our debtorship, and the tender and affectionate regard in which we shall ever hold his memory. Though deprived of his wisdom and counsel, we hope to be worthy of his example of self-sacrifice and devotion.

A NEW THING UNDER THE SUN.

Dear Mr. Editor: I saw what I believe to be a really new thing last week. One, I think, was never seen before, and may never be seen again. Let me tell the Advocate readers in just a word about it.

At the request of our presiding elder, who was out of the district for a few days, I went out to Caledonia—16 miles north of Columbus—and held the third quarterly conference for that charge. As we entered the little town of Caledonia, a gentleman said to me, "I want to show you something unusual." I said, "Good; what is it?" He said, "The Methodist parsonage is the best house in this town." And, sure enough, there it was, a beautiful testimony to the love, loyalty and bigheartedness of the membership of that charge. Whoever even imagined that the time would ever be that a preacher would be given the best house in town to live in? It was something new to me.

Rev. W. W. Hartsfield, the pastor, is in high favor with his people, and is having a good year on this work.

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.

Some time since, an "elect lady" of Detroit, Texas, Mrs. M. A. Martin, owned a small farm, which she deeded to the Board of Church Extension, and thereby established a comfortable annuity for herself.

Only a few days ago, she sent in Liberty Bonds, amounting to $250, to establish a memorial loan fund in honor of her niece, Miss Nellie Evans, who died on the 19th of June, 1916. In this last letter she writes:

> "This small gift from Texas which was first loaned to my country, and after a short while will go to my Church which has been my home from early childhood, is a comfort to me, in honoring the name of my precious niece. This morning I have been thinking of the real benefit which has come to me through my dealings with the Board of Church Extension. The farm, which was a constant worry in repairs and tenants, which I exchanged for an annuity bond through Dr. McMurry, is now a source of comfort, and I feel that I am the one most benefited. I sincerely wish that other widows could see this work as I see it, especially those who have no dependents."

In answer to this very interesting letter, the Secretary wrote Sister Martin, in part, as follows:

> "I am sending you herewith Annuity Bond No. 163 for $250, in accordance with your request, having received from you Liberty Bonds of the same amount. In behalf of the Board of Church Extension, I thank you for this assistance rendered the cause of Church Extension. You may be interested in knowing that $250 thus left with the Board and loaned at 4 per cent, for aiding in the building of churches, will aggregate, by compound interest, in one hundred years, the sum of $12,623.72. At the end of two hundred years, at the same rate of interest, there will be to the credit of this fund a total sum of $637,433.48. During this time hundreds of new churches will have been made possible by your gift, and the money will continue indefinitely to increase in geometrical progression, and to honor God in helping to extend the Kingdom throughout the earth."

The Board of Church Extension affords a most remarkable opportunity for investments of this kind. Why not deposit money or Liberty Bonds with this Board, or deed good property to it, and receive annuity while you live, and, when the angels come for you, establish a memorial loan fund that will continually do good and increase in power and efficiency while time lasts?

Let us hear from interested parties. Literature will be sent on request.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION,
H. A. Boaz, Secretary,

THE APOSTLES' CREED AND THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

By Rev. Geo. H. Thompson.

Dr. J. W. Boswell has written articles for the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Wesleyan Advocate in which he quotes from my recent article on "Some Doings of the General Conference," published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, as follows: "My impression is that the phrase, 'Holy Catholic Church,' did not find its way into our Ritual by General Conference action, but by way of a commission chosen to act with a like commission from the Methodist Episcopal Church in providing a common Ritual and a common Hymnal for the two Churches." In answer to this he quotes from the General Conference Journal of 1902, as follows: "Resolved, That the Book Editor be directed to have printed in the Discipline, at some suitable place, the proper form of the Apostles' Creed, in order to uniformity in the use of it." This resolution was signed by James Atkins, S. B. Turrentine, J. H. Weaver, and W. W. Vicar.

It is a well established rule that no change can be made in the Discipline, unless the proposed change recite the paragraph to be affected, and the language to be adopted given. The above resolution fails in both essentials. Surely so general a resolution could not sweep away former specific legislation.

Dr. Boswell says: "From 1854 to 1902 the words CHURCH OF GOD were substituted for HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH. By what authority the change was made I have been unable to discover. The records of the General Conference, as far as I have examined, fail to show." I do not think he means to intimate that it was done without authority from the General Conference.

The History of the Revisions of the Discipline, by P. A. Peterson, shows that in 1854 the words, CHURCH OF GOD were substituted for THE HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH. In 1836 the following foot-note was inserted in the Discipline: "By Holy Catholic Church is meant the Church of God in general." This note was omitted in 1854. That this order remained for forty-eight years unchallenged is strong presumptive proof that the change was made according to law. This history shows that our fathers were troubled on this account as we are.

To determine what the "proper form" of the Aposties' Creed is, would be a hard task. The Greek Catholic Church, the Roman Catholic Church, and the Anglican Church say: "That He went down into hell (Inferno)." American Methodists said the same thing from 1784 to 1786. This was and is the ancient and revered form, but I find no Methodist pleading for it. Such changes become needful, not because of a change of doctrine, but because of the change in the meaning of words. Dictionaries have junk-heaps, just as shops have them.

When I was received into the Church the congregation prayed that I might be received into "Christ's Holy Church," but they did not pray for me to be received into the "Holy Catholic Church." The preacher received me into the Methodist Church, but Deity alone could admit me into "Christ's Holy Church." I was not asked if I believed in the "Holy Catholic Church," but I was asked if I believed in the "Church of God." I do not see, I cannot see, why Methodists should hold on to a phrase which has given them trouble for nearly a century, and a word which cannot be spoken without suggesting to a large majority of hearers the Roman Catholic Church. I confess to my inability to repeat the creed as we have it without an arrest of my mental processes and the dissipation of my spiritual yearnings. For my thoughts to be rudely taken from the throne of God, and involuntarily centered about the papal see at Rome, may show my weakness, but it does tell of my loss.

Not Well Enough Known.

We cannot accomplish much in the treatment of dyspepsia, however much we may temporarily relieve its symptoms, so long as the blood remains impure. It is a fact not well enough known by people generally that when the stomach, liver and other digestive organs are supplied with impure blood, the digestive process is impaired, so as to cause faintness and loss of appetite and sometimes a deranged state of the intestines, and in general all the symptoms of dyspepsia.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is of great service in dyspepsia, because it purifies the blood, making it the healthy stimulus the digestive organs must have for the proper performance of their duties. Hood's Sarsaparilla, especially if taken in a little hot water, has a "magic touch" in dyspepsia. Get it to-day.—Adv.

NEWS AND COMMENT.

What Would the U. S. Have to Pay?

A news dispatch from Paris says that Germany has demanded an indemnity of $3,500,000,000 from Russia. This demand grows out of the conditions stipulated in the Brest-Litovsk treaty. Immediate settlement of the claim is asked. This is merely an illustration of Germany's attitude in dealing with peoples who have come under her power. The finer qualities of mercy and justice have given way to heartless insistence upon payment of cash in hand. We wonder what the United States would be called upon to pay if Germany should win.

Seaplanes for Social Visits.

The newspapers last week carried an account of a visit by King Albert and Queen Elizabeth, of Belgium, to King George and Queen Mary, of England, to celebrate the silver anniversary of their marriage. That would not be an unusual occurrence in normal times. But these are not normal times, and the visit was made by unusual means. They crossed the Channel in seaplanes, the trip taking about fifty minutes. We confidently expect to see, after the war, the air filled with craft of all kinds for the convenience of travelers. Perhaps we shall not have to wait so long.

Is This Right?

The following news item is taken from a New Orleans newspaper: "Assistant United States Attorney Callan filed an information Wednesday against Belle Simms for selling liquor to a soldier. The woman pleaded guilty and was sentenced the time she had already served in jail." We have no disposition to insist that any unusually harsh penalty should have been inflicted upon the woman; but we do protest against the assumption that the crime is a trivial one that can be compensated for by a few days' imprisonment. The Government is doing all it can do to protect its soldiers against vicious influences that destroy their efficiency. It seems to us that its regulations should be efficiently enforced.

Who Knows?

According to a Washington dispatch, the Federal Trade Commission has charged the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and allied interests with conspiracy to stifle competition in the wholesale drug trade. We have no means of knowing anything about the practices of the wholesale druggists; all we know anything about is the prices we have to pay at retail drugstores for the simple remedies for ordinary ailments. We have at times thought that perhaps we were the victims of a peculiar combination of circumstances that were entirely beyond the control of the retailer, and that his conscience smote him when he took our money. We may have been right—he himself may be the victim of those "higher up." For a long time, though, the prices of drugs have been notoriously high.

Honor the Flag.

A California schoolboy recently whipped a schoolmate because he refused to salute the American flag at the proper time, according to a press dispatch. The school board, in recognition of his action, presented the pugnacious patriot with a little gold American flag pin, accompanied by these words: "We are giving you this little pin to wear, not because you have been fighting, but because you made a real effort to have the flag respected—the flag which protects us, our homes, our schools, our mothers and sisters and all things worth having and worth loving." That schoolboy probably could not give a very satisfactory definition of "patriotism," but he knew the flag stands for the country—a small symbol of a big thing—and he respected it accordingly. Let us always honor the flag!

Eugenics by Law.

The Georgia Senate has just passed a bill unanimously by the provisions of which a man would have to present a certificate signed by a reputable physician to the effect that he has no social disease or tuberculosis before obtaining a marriage license. The bill goes to the House for concurrence. This act may not become a law; but it is a strong indication of the newly-awakened social conscience that is demanding clean living on the part of those who would perpetuate the social body. It is a pity that common sense and good morals have to be reenforced by legislative enactment. Human nature is a peculiar thing. Paul realized it when he bewailed the doing of things that ought not to be done, and the leaving undone of things that ought to be done. And he knew the explanation—sin. But the world is getting better; it is going to be a pretty good place to live in, after awhile.

As Was Expected.

The German Foreign Secretary, von Kuehlmann, has lost his place. This statement causes no surprise to our readers who recall that some days ago von Kuehlmann made a speech in the Reichtag in which he declared that Germany could scarcely hope to win a victory by force and that diplomatic negotiations should be begun with a view to securing peace. These statements were so out of keeping with what the German people has been led to believe, and so contrary to the policy of the dominant party, that his downfall was confidently predicted. The facts in the case remain unchanged, however. All indications point to the fact that Germany is growing weaker every day. Undoubtedly, a new offensive will soon be undertaken on the Western front, but the Allies await it with the utmost confidence. The militarists of Germany refuse to believe the words of one of their great statesmen; they cannot doubt the proof of them that will be given in the shock of battle.

True Patriotism Stands the Test.

According to the press dispatches, an Alabama father recently turned his son over to the federal officials as a deserter from the army. When he did so, he said: "It nearly breaks my heart to have to arrest my own son and turn him over to the authorities on such a serious charge, but I cannot harbor him as a deserter or even countenance his act." The father and the patriot both speak in those words. The breaking heart of the father calls for our deepest sympathy; the stern act of duty compels our admiration. This is but an illustration of the spirit the American people have in this war, of the general attitude toward the slacker. Let us hope that the heroic act of the father will so react upon the son as to make him at last a brave soldier in the cause of liberty. It is, at least, an inspiration to the rest of us.

We Agree With Him.

At the recent meeting of the National Education Association, at Pittsburgh, Pa., Secretary Lane is reported to have said that 700,000 of the 5,500,000 illiterates in the United States are within the draft ages. He added that it is a shame that public schools are open only half a year, and a disgrace that teachers in them are paid less than a day laborer. There has been a good deal of criticism of the public school system of the United States, much of which, perhaps, is well-founded. But we protest that the fault lies more with the people in general than the teachers and educational leaders in particular. We believe that our public school teachers are among the most heroic and self-sacrificing of all those who are laboring for the public welfare. But what can we expect of them when we give them only half a year in which to carry on their immeasurably important work, and then pay them less than a day laborer can earn? We agree with Secretary Lane that it is a shame and disgrace.

Corn Crop May Be Short.

Reports from various sources indicate that the prevailing drouth in sections of Louisiana and Mississippi threatens to diminish the corn crop considerably. In view of this fact, farmers should show their business acumen, as well as their patriotism, by taking steps immediately to supply the deficiency with other crops. This is in keeping with the suggestions of the Food Administration officials. Practically everything now has a bearing on the winning of the war. The live stock industry in these two States has assumed large proportions. A diminished food supply will interfere materially with the production of meat. Our own soldiers and those of our allies must have an unfailing supply. The prices growers receive for these products are remunerative. By providing a sufficient food supply, our farmers put money in their pockets, and at the same time help the Government, without any semblance of profiteering. Build silos to save the corn that is raised, and plant forage crops before it is too late.

WE ARE STEWARDS.

Recognizing that we hold our property, not as absolute owners, but as stewards, and believing that our marvelous financial prosperity, without precedent in all history, is a definite challenge to our faithfulness, and, appreciating the opportunity to transmute material and perishable things into spiritual and eternal values, we direct the attention of our people to the world's inviting field and ask for investment commensurate with our means and adequate to the needs of our missionary enterprise.—Resolution of Laymen at Memphis.

"POLITICS IS ADJOURNED."

Since becoming the chief executive of our nation, President Wilson has, in his official and other public utterances, used many terse and pithy expressions which immediately came into popular use. His "watchful waiting," "we shall not turn back," "no gaps in the ranks," were at once taken up by the thousands of the devoted pupils of our "schoolmaster" President. One of the latest of his popular epigrams is "Politics is adjourned." Of course he did not mean that the art of civic government or the administration of public affairs should be suspended, as they have been in misguided Russia. Nor did he intend to intimate that good men should not become candidates for political office. He was referring rather to the machinations and manipulations of partisan politics which would divert so much man power from the essential things to the nonessentials. Purely partisan politics will not this year get a hearing. Men are too busy. With many States passing "anti-loafing acts" and with the Federal government declaring that all able-bodied men must be regularly engaged in some useful occupation, our nation is in no temper for long, bitter, and interest-consuming contests for political office.

Ecclesiastical and denominational politics is also adjourned sine die. The immediate task of the universal Church is too great to allow any of its man power to be diverted from its one supreme task of advancing the kingdom of God by needless and wasteful ecclesiastical politics.

The law abolishing loafing should be made permanent, and the permanent adjournment of the kind of politics which has cursed some of our commonwealths in recent years would be one of the beneficent by-products of the war.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

HOW GASOLINE LIZZIE LEARNED TO KEEP THE SABBATH.—Her Own Testimony.

Reported by Mrs. R. M. Brown.

Sunday, March 5, midnight. Well, at last this day is over. What a day it has been! My poor engine must be nearly dead, it groaned so hard. I have been tearing madly about the country, through wind and mud. I "look my name" tonight, I'm sure. "Gasoline Lizzie" my master calls me. I don't like it, for I know it can't be a pet name. Pet names are short. I fear it is given in derision. Why, I don't know. I do my best to behave properly and I feel very respectable indeed. In fact, my family is popular.

At present I am resting for the night, or supposed to be, for how can a respectable Tin Lizzie go to bed in soiled clothes and really rest, any more than a decent human can?

Maybe some day my master will learn to take better care of me. He is not so bad. 'Most every one likes him. I heard the black cook tell the chocolate washerwoman that my "marster was jus' spile'; bein' the only chile."

He was brought up religiously, loved to go to church with his father and mother, but now he says he has to work so hard all the week that he must have Sunday for recreation. So he sleeps 'till about 10 a. m., then off we go, like a pair of March hares. He likes to see how many other machines he can pass, utterly disregardful of my feelings.

To-day, after a mad race over some indescribable mudholes, I sprung my left rear axle. I was provoked. A fine way to show gratitude to God for his day! I wanted to go, like a proper Christian automobile, to the house of the Lord on Sunday. I snorted my disapproval. My master was angry and called me a cheap junk pile.

Of course he doesn't realize it is his own carelessness. Oh, dear! What is to become of us!

Sunday, April 2, 11 p. m.

To-day is quite different from that Sunday a month ago. Mr. Jim (my owner), and I were taking our usual Sabbath recreation. We had left the hot city pavements far behind and were speeding along a cool country road. The day was warm, and I felt as lazy as the humble bees that I buzzed past.

Presently we came in sight of a little white church nestled among the oaks. Several children and a few grown-ups were trudging along in the direction of the sweetly pealing bell. I felt an overwhelming impulse to stop at the low window and hear a good old-fashioned gospel sermon.

I had an inspiration: I'd be Balaam's ass. So I balked. I wheezed. I snorted and jerked sideways into an old rail-fence.

"There you go again," snapped Mr. Jim. He sprang out and examined me carefully. "Strange," he said, "I can't find anything wrong."

Just as he passed in front of me to get in, something passed near me that I thought must be the angel that stopped Balaam. My master looked puzzled. A fair sweet-faced girl in springtime dress of white and hat of green looked straight into my master's headlights.

Mr. Jim began, "Isn't this Miss ———?"

"Yes, Annie Lee. Aren't you Jim Miller, who used to attend old Third Street Church?" said the angel.

"Yes, Miss Annie, but not for the past eight or ten years. I've graduated, I suppose. Do you still live in the city?"

"Oh, yes, and still go to the same Sunday school. I come out here to help in this newly organized Sunday school, where I also teach week-day school. You see the car-line is so convenient."

My master seemed interested. He was fond of pretty faces. I was often nervous for fear he would hastily marry one of his many frivolous girl companions who were disgusting to me. Hence, I was glad when she said, "Won't you come in and help, too?" Mr. Jim reddened.

"I, no—oh, I can't help but I may as well come in."

Later, through the window I could see that she was acting as superintendent, chief teacher, and general mechanism of the school.

When they came out she accepted his invitation to go home in his car.

We made the trip wondrously well. I never knew my master to drive so carefully and smoothly. She was speaking: "I love a car like this, it is so unpretentious and plain but gives such good service. Some day when my teaching shall have netted me a little nest egg I shall invest it in one, to help me in coming out here—I'll consecrate it."

"What do you mean by consecrating it?" said Mr. Jim.

"Why, to the Lord, just as a man does his money, his talent, or his time, you know. There are several people out here too old or crippled to walk, that I coud take to Sunday school in the afternoon. It would be lovely to use to take flowers or fruit to the hospitals and shut-ins at home."

"My! What a little preacher you are!" said Mr. Jim, but he seemed to like both sermon and preacher, for that very evening at half-past seven he brought me to the front steps at home, and instead of the gay frolickers I had shrinkingly expected to rush about with, out came the Colonel, stepping lightly on his old "war leg," and behind him came my dear old mistress.

When Mr. Jim cranked me, he said, "Lizzie, old girl, I'm going to surprise you: we're going to evening service for the first time in your life."

I was so astonished I forgot momentarily to start.

Of course having the old folks on my hands I went my smoothest pace. After service, Mr. James Miller, Sr., climbing slowly in, said, "It's like old times to hear the night sermon, and my leg didn't hurt a bit." And Miss Annie and her mother were there too and we took them home. I felt glad to be carrying about five nice people like them. Tonight I shall rest with a light heart. Isn't it grand to feel really useful! Good night.

Sunday, Several Months Later.

Well, here I am again, Gasoline Lizzie no longer. I have a nice new name. Don't you think I should have? for I am no longer a wreckless desecrater of the Lord's day. I'll tell you how I got it. One Friday afternoon in May my master and I were skimming along towards the little schoolhouse which was so often our destination of late. We were both humming happily.

Soon we stopped and Miss Annie came out behind a group of laughing children, all of whom greeted us joyously.

We took the smallest ones home, then were off, we three, for a happy drive in the sweet, balmy air. I was buoyant. I felt that something was going to happen. My engine throbbed so loudly that it almost went dead.

When I calmed down, I heard Mr. Jim's voice in low tones, "I love you Annie. Do———"

I was listening so tensely that my radiator burst. Something also happened to my steering wheel (I have a secret notion what it was) and in spite of my most manful efforts I couldn't prevent a crazy zig-zag into a little ditch. No, we didn't overturn—just hung at a foolish angle. Mr. Jim wasn't angry this time. Laughingly he said, "Now, young woman, before I'll right this machine you've got to tell me you love me."

"But that isn't chivalrous. It's equal to the Sabine of old, clubbing the girl and carrying her off on his horse. Give me a fair chance."

At that moment a beautiful, massive machine came into view. It stopped beside us. The driver looked astonished that no one was trying to right me. Mr. Jim sprang out and exclaimed, "Why, the radiator's burst and the engine's dead."

"Don't mind," said the stranger. "I can easily tow you to town."

We were soon off. After a lengthy silence, my master said, in a chagrined tone, "I'm going to sell this old Gasoline Lizzie and get a real car that I can depend on."

I felt indignant and misused. It was no fault of mine that he forgot to drive straight when he was trying to use his right arm for other purposes.

But at the gentle reply I felt my hopes rising. "No," said Miss Annie, "don't sell her. It wasn't her fault. I feel as if she were almost human. She has made the spring a happy one for me. Think of all the good she does, carrying old and sick folk to church and for outings. I almost love her. You should not call her that atrocious name, especially now that from being a sinner she has become a missionary. She should be called, not Gasoline Lizzie, but Elizabeth, the dear little car."

I tried to honk.

Mr. Jim laughed. "Elizabeth she shall be. And I won't sell her. Now, I'll do as you say if you'll do as I say. You said you love the car. Well, then, will you not love the owner?"

I could not hear the low reply. But we still go to the little Sunday school, Mr. and Mrs. Jim and I, and Mr. Jim is the superintendent.

Honk! Honk! Good night.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Music is an essential part of a well-ordered religious service. It has at least two important functions. In the first place, it creates an atmosphere of worship. There is an emotional appeal in the tones of the organ and the blending of voices that stirs the spiritual nature and predisposes the soul to devotion. In the second place, music specifically enlists the congregation in the service and makes each member of it feel that he has a part in the exercises.

And yet it seems unfortunately to be true in a great many cases that whatever of friction and dissatisfaction arises in the church is to be traced to the management of the choir. Of course it should not be so; but sometimes we have to deal with situations as they are, and not as they ought to be. We believe a serious consideration of the subject will enable us to overcome many of the difficulties that so often have to be faced.

It shoud never be forgotten that the music is a part of the worship. It is not, primarily, a form of entertainment; it is not, specifically, an appeal to the esthetic nature; it is certainly not merely a convenient means of occupying the time in order that the service may be stretched out over a conventional number of minutes. The music is as much a means of lifting the soul up to communion with God, and of arousing the spiritual inclinations of the hearers, as is the sermon. If it has any less mission than that, it should be relegated to a relatively unimportant place in the program of worship.

When it is fully realized that the music is an essential part of the worship, the questions of selection and manner of presentation will solve themselves. No preacher will then wait till the beginning of the service to select hymns hastily that commend themselves to his judgment merely because he knows they are familiar to the congregation; rather, he will, with all seriousness and earnestness, take time enough to select those songs that will carry a real message that will fit in with the circumstances and nature of the occasion. And the organist and members of the choir will not under any circumstances be content with any special numbers of the musical program, no matter how beautiful and perfect they may be in composition, unless they contribute directly to the religious value of the service.

This conception of the function of church music will necessarily do away with the view that seems unfortunately to be held by some, that the choir is a concert organization the excellence of which is to be determined by its technical perfection in the rendition of difficult selections. Technical perfection and the highest possible class of music are desirable, but they should not be allowed to interfere with the devotional spirit of the occasion.

Should choirs be paid? In our judgment, that is purely an incidental question. We have never felt that musical talent, apart from moral character, is sufficient justification for the employment of any musician in the service of the church; but apart from that, it is a matter of the volunteer talent available, and the financial resources of the congregation.

DO THE NEXT THING NEXT.

This brief discussion is not an attempt, in any sense, to indicate the importance of the tasks that engage the attention of our people in the order of their importance; it is merely a practical suggestion that is intended to be helpful to those whose hearts are set on doing their very best in the situations in which they find themselves placed.

The most important work that confronts the preacher or the layman day by day is the work that needs to be done immediately. We once asked the late Dr. Felix R. Hill, who is said by competent judges to have been the most efficient pastor Southern Methodism has produced, to give us the secret of his success. His reply was to the effect that he always did the next thing, next. By following that plan, he said, his work never accumulated, and he always found that he had time for emergency requirements as they might arise.

We may have in mind some great task that we expect to undertake next week; a definite engagement for some future time may be uppermost in our minds a good deal of the time. But the little thing that needs to be done now, is more important than the big thing that is to be done later. It may be nothing more than entering a name in a book, answering a letter, making a call; but the fact that it ought to be done now, makes it, for the moment, the most important thing we have to do. The rule, "Never put off till to-morrow what ought to be done to-day," is beyond criticism.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASSES AND CHURCH ATTENDANCE.

We have had some opportunity to observe, in various places, the habit a great many Sunday school pupils have of leaving the church as soon as Sunday school is over. It is a bad habit. We do not think that very small children should always be required to stay for the preaching service, and there are doubtless occasions when it is altogether proper for older ones to leave. But it is distressing to see a well-filled auditorium during the Sunday school hour become practically empty before the preaching begins.

We believe a large part of the responsibility for this state of affairs rests upon the teachers of the classes. We realize, of course, that the teachers cannot control absolutely the actions of their pupils; but we believe influence could be brought to bear in a proper way that would greatly improve the situation. Many of the pupils are members of the Church; a kindly suggestion of their duty as such would sometimes be sufficient. But there should be definite teaching in the Sunday school concerning the importance of congregational worship. The Sunday school furnishes a large percentage of our Church membership, but it is not furnishing its due proportion of church attendants.

Unfortunately, some teachers do not stay for the preaching service; of course they cannot have much influence in getting their pupils to stay.

DEATH OF REV. J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

We give in another column a brief announcement of the death of Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, one of the honored superannuates of the Louisiana Conference. We had the privilege a few months ago of spending a few minutes in the sick-room of this noble veteran. Suffering had even then laid its mark upon him, but he was sweet-spirited and courageous, waiting calmly for the summons of the Master. It was a benediction to be in his presence. Many friends will remember in tender sympathy the bereaved family.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold lettters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. S. E. Flurry, of Philadelphia, Miss., has our thanks for three subscriptions, recently sent in. Brother Flurry is pastor of the Neshoba charge.

The press dispatches report the death on July 2, in Columbus, Ohio, of Dr. Washington Gladden, who for many years has been a powerful influence in the religious thought of the age.

Rev. J. E. Selfe, the wide-awake pastor of the Covington charge, Louisiana Conference, was a visitor to the city last Monday. It was our pleasure to meet him at the luncheon in honor of Chaplain Vaughan.

In renewing her subscription to the Advocate, Mrs. S. C. Stone, of Belen, Miss., says: "The angels of the Lord are encamping round about me in my loneliness and affliction." So they do with all who put their trust in him!

The board of stewards of the Louisiana Avenue Church, of this city, has set a good example to other boards by laying in a supply of coal for the parsonage; they have also bought a supply for the church. Rev. A. J. Gearheard is serving his fourth year as pastor of this congregation.

Drs. Thomas and Johnston, who have been laboring to secure additional funds for Hendrix College, Arkansas, report that the goal of $300,000 has been passed, and that the total may reach $500,000. A mighty strengthening of our educational institutions is one of the imperative needs of this quadrennium.

We learn from a news dispatch to the New Orleans Item that work on the new dormitory to be built at Grenada College will begin within the next few weeks. A new chapel will also be built before the next session. President Countiss and his colaborers are accomplishing great things at Grenada.

The pulpit is not the only place where a preacher may speak to the people: Dr. T. B. Holloman, our pastor at Vicksburg, Miss., makes use of the daily papers. Two recent issues of the Vicksburg Evening Post contain letters on vital subjects from his pen. We have no doubt they will accomplish great good.

Rev. Otto Porter has recently been appointed to the De Soto charge, Mississippi Conference, according to a note from him. In remitting for his own subscription, he says he wants to put the Advocate into as many homes as possible on his work. We commend him for this, and trust that he will meet with success.

Rev. R. M. Brown, pastor of our Felicity Church, this city, has been accepted for army Y. M. C. A. work, and has already reported to the training school at San Antonio, Texas, for preparation for his new field of labor. His family will remain in New Oreans for the present. His successor at Felicity has not yet been appointed.

Rev. R. H. Harper, the Louisiana Conference representative at the educational conference held recently at Lake Junaluska, N. C., was a caller at the Advocate office oh July 15, on his way home from the conference. He reported a profitable gathering, an occount of which he promised to give us for an early issue of the Advocate.

In order to develop the system of monthly collections for the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson, the presiding elders of the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences have appointed district agents to whom money may be paid. We commend this plan as one likely to provide adequately for the needs of this great institution.

Rev. D. R. McDougal, the pastor of the Calhoun City charge, North Mississippi Conference, in sending us a renewal subscription recently, for which he has our thanks, stated that he was just beginning a meeting at Pittsboro, in which Rev. R. H. Pigue, of La Center, Ky., was doing the preaching. The indications pointed to a good meeting.

From a personal note to the Publisher, we learn that Rev. Henry T. Young, Louisiana Conference evangelist, has just closed a good meeting at Campti, La., whcre Rev. John Sholars is pastor. As usual, Brother Young remembered the Advocate in his work, for which he has our sincere thanks. Brother Young's next engagement was for a tabernacle meeting at Tinus, La., beginning July 16 and continuing ten days.

Mansfield Female College closed the most prosperous session in its history last spring. The enrollment of 96 boarding students exhausted the rooming capacity of the dormitories, and several applicants had to be turned away. The faculty numbered 14, and the income for the year was more than $30,000. A new dining room is being built this summer, and another building is being equipped for dormitory use. President Bobbitt has made a remarkable record at Mansfield.

We acknowledge the receipt from Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, of the Mississippi Conference, of his latest pamphlet, "Sin: The Occurrence of the Word in the English and Greek Bibles; Its Origin, Meaning, Nature, Kinds, and Results." It shows an immense amount of work on the part of Brother Peebles, and an intimatc acquaintance with the Scriptures. We especially commend his discussion of the different kinds of sin, and the results of sin. Brother Peebles states that this is his twenty-eighth production, and that he is now engaged in writing his twenty-ninth. What an indefatigable worker he is!

We acknowledge the receipt from Brother W. P. Meador, of Hattiesburg, Miss., of a check for the renewal of his mother's subscription to the Advocate. Sister Meador is the widow of the late Rev. L. P. Meador, of the Mississippi Conference. Brother W. P. Meador is a useful local preacher, connected with our Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, of which the Editor was once pastor. We appreciate his kind words of greeting, and his invitation to come up and eat fried chicken and watermelon with him. He reports good things of the Broad Street Church and its pastor, Rev. W. A. Terry.

Our readers have probably seen before this an account of the burning of Junaluska Inn at Lake Junaluska, on Juy 10. The Advocate received the following telegram concerning it: "Junaluska Inn burned on the morning of July 10; no one injured. Summer conferences will not be affected; five other hotels will provide accommodations. Persons having made reservations at Inn notify J. D. Stentz to arrange other accommodations." The telegram was signed by Dr. George R. Stuart and Dr. John W. Shackford. While we regret exceedingly this great misfortune, at the same time we congratulate the Church that its program will not be interfered with.

The United States Government is not going to be content with merely re-educating and rehabilitating its soldiers who have been disabled by wounds, and fitting them for useful and gainful occupations; it is not going to leave them to shift for themselves, but will exert an active, continuing interest in their welfare. This does not mean that the Government is to coddle them or treat them as weaklings, but it is going to take an active interest in securing them work, and in other ways endeavor to make up to them the opportunities and advantages they lost by reason of wounds received in fighting their country's battles. Every Liberty Loan Bond and every War Savings Stamp purchased aids in this work.

On Monday, July 15, the Methodist Preachers' Meeting, of New Orleans, entertained Chaplain A. F. Vaughan, pastor of our Carrollton Avenue congregation, at a luncheon at the Monteleone Hotel. Brother Vaughan has recently compieted the course of training at the chapains' training school at Louisville, Ky., and has received his commission as a chaplain in the U. S. army. He has the rank of first lieutenant, and is under orders to report to Hoboken, N. J., early in August preparatory to assignment to work. Suitable resolutions were adopted by the Preachers' Meeting and presented to Chaplain Vaughan as a mark of esteem on the part of his brethren of the local churches. The occasion was altogether a delightful one.

We acknowledge the honor of a visit recently from Rev. F. B. Hill, of the Patterson chargc, Louisiana Conference. He had come to New Orleans to accompany Mrs. Hill part of the way to Montgomery, Ala., where, as a member of the National Defense Council, she has gone to assume the superintendency of a hospital. She is eminently qualified for this work, having had wide experience bcfore her marriage as a trained nurse. Brother Hill is a native of England, who is rendering splendid service in the ministry in this country. He has two sons in the English army in Palestine, one of whom, the younger, was recently so severely wounded that he had to be taken to the base hospital; the latest news from him was to the effect that his condition was improving. The elder son is connected with the army paymaster's office. Brother Hill also has three nephews in the war, two of whom have been taken prisoner. One of them, an officer in the engineering corps, was recently so severey wounded that his life was saved only by the transfusion of blood; he lost an arm. Brother Hill told us that a recent letter from his daughter, who lives in England, gave the following in illustration of the strictness of the food administration regulations: two ounces of oleomargarine, eight ounces of sugar, and two ounces of tea are allowed one person for one week. "Food will win the war—save it." Needless to say, Brother Hill's pastoral charge is in good shape.

REV. J. L. P. SHEPPARD PASSES AWAY.

Dear Brother Carley: One of our Old Guard has left us, and our Conference is poorer through his loss. All who knew him loved him, but to those who really knew him there has come a great loss, and they each feel the absence of his genial and cheery soul.

On Tuesday last, in the cool of the morning, Brother J. L. P. Sheppard, of Mansfield, entered his reward. He was in his seventy-seventh year, and had been a member of the Louisiana Conference since December, 1880. He was ordained deacon in 1876, and elder in 1882.

The greater part of his ministerial life was spent in the northern part of the State, while his last years were spent in Mansfield. After his being superannuated, he and his family made their home there, and his influence was felt in many ways throughout the community, religiously, socially, and in all civic questions.

He was quite a friend to Mansfield College, and at one time mortgaged his own home to raise funds to tide the college over some financial rocks.

The funeral was conducted from his late residence on Wednesday, July 10, by Rev. R. H. Wynn, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, and Rev. Jno. F. Foster. Dr. S. A. Steel was out of the city at the time, and thus was not present.

A good man has gone from us, faithful and true. His last months were spent in weakness and pain, but his faith was bright, and his outlook happy. He spoke of death without fear and planned his funeral, making all the arrangements.

May the Father abide with his aged companion, and with each member of the family!

A suitable memoir will be furnished later.

STATISTICAL BLANKS.

The Commission on Statistical Blanks appointed by the General Conference met in the Publishing House at Nashville, July 3, 1918, and arranged blanks for Annual, District, Quarterly and Church Conference reports. The secretary was directed to give notice through the Church papers that the old forms for statistical reports would be used during the present conference year, as collections made under the old form of assessments cannot be reported on blanks prepared in accordance with the Financial Plan adopted by the General Conference of 1918.

Respectfully,

APPEAL FOR PAINE COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: We recently suffered a serious loss by fire here at Paine College, when the rear end of Holsey Hall, a frame dormitory for men, was burned. Stored in this part of the building were furnishings and supplies to the value of more than $1500, most of which was a total loss. Altogether we can hardly replace this loss at present high values with less than $5000. We will recover only about $1000 insurance at best, and there was no insurance on the supplies lost. The fire was purely accidental, and but for the fine work of the Augusta fire department our loss would have been much greater.

In view of this special need, I am writing to ask the many friends of this institution to favor us with a liberal contribution to aid us in putting our work in good shape for the coming college year. It is imperative that we secure $4000 for this purpose this summer. Kindly make check payable to Paine College.

Yours very truly,

ALBERT D. BETTS,

President.

THE CHRIST-GOVERNED SOUL.

And for individuals the universal rule is: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks unto God and the Father by him." Each true Christian heart is a theocracy—a Christ-governed soul. Not ruled by external appliances nor by mechanical rules, nor by the mere effort to follow a prescribed example; but by the indwelling of Christ's spirit, by a vital force communicated from himself. The spring of the Christian life is here—"Not I, but Christ liveth in me." This is the source of all the beautiful and fruitful Christian lives that ever have been, of all that are, and of all that ever shall be.—William Garden Blaikie.

WAR CONDITIONS

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

The death angel came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Sykes on June 6, 1918, and took from their embrace their darling and only child, LEON. God lent this precious child to them for the space of three years and nineteen days. While it is hard to give him up, yet we know that God doeth all things for the best. You can never call him back but you will know where to find him. Everything that fond hearts and loving hands could do was done to relieve the little sufferer, but it was a task only God could perform. So, dear parents, let this comforting thought rest with you: If you love his Savior you will meet him by and by. One bright jewel has gone on before to await the coming of papa and mamma. A FRIEND.

FROM BIENVILLE, LA.

It is with great pleasure that I attempt to tell you a few things concerning our meeting at Bienville, which has recently closed. I launched the meeting myself, preaching on Sunday morning, and at night. Rev. H. W. Cudd reached me on Monday night and stayed until the close of the meeting.

We had what I pronounce a fine meeting. It seemed from the very beginning that quite a number of people were interested, and the interest kept growing as the meeting continued. The congregations were fine, and I am sure that the town and surrounding community felt the spirit and influence of the meeting.

Brother Cudd is a fine man to work with; not only is he a fine man in a social way, but he is a spiritual man; he preaches with a great degree of confidence in Christ, believing that through his messages God will save souls. He believes in the old time gospel, that it is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe. He is not afraid to preach it, nor is he ashamed. I trust that God may use this man for the advancement of his kingdom. I will say that any of the brethren who stand in need of good help will make no mistake in securing Rev. H. W. Cudd.

Our accessions numbered about fifteen, most of them on profession of faith. In connection with this little write-up, I say with pleasure that my people remembered the pastor and family in the way of a nice pounding. We were very thankful and appreciative of same.

A LETTER FROM GRAND CANE, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Just a word from Grand Cane charge. We began the Conference year with no unusual demonstrations. On February 6 we bought a charge Ford car. The pastor purchased half interest. The assessment for the pastor has been raised to $1400. The Conference assessments have been provided for, except at one church, and will be there soon. Cantonment money has been raised to about twice the assessment. We have had good Children's Day collections. One member, Mr. R. Moseley, has begun the support of a lady missionary in China, half support. I am looking for a man to take the other half. The Woman's Missionary Societies are preparing to repaint and refurnish the parsonage. Much of the money is in hand. I have held one good meeting. Evans, of Haughton, preached for us; he is promising. Elders, keep your eye on Evans. I have planned a charge evangelistic meeting at Grand Cane, led by Thurston B. Price. We are planning to have the charge revival next year at Stonewall, and have written to engage Rev. Raymond Browning for it. The Grand Cane meeting will begin on August 25. Rev. C. D. Atkinson will help us at Stonewall this year. Now, Mr. Editor, we are getting on nicely. Many have told us that they are glad the time limit is removed. We don't feel that we are so apt to be moved at the expiration of one or two years. Things are more stable. Men are not so apt to be picked up and hurled away without a reason, as used to be. Some small things, such as $35 improvement on the church, and pounding of pastor, we hardly care to mention. Send us fifteen sample copies of the Advocate and we will try to get fifteen new subscribers.

H. W. LEDBETTER.

REVIVAL AT SOUTH MANSFIELD.

The revival services at South Mansfield, commencing June 23 and ending July 2, were a great spiritual success.

The people early in the spring requested the pastor, Rev. Leland Clegg, to conduct the meeting himself, and to this he consented after some hesitancy. The first service gave indication of marked interest, and on the evening of June 23 it is said that there were more people gathered in the church to hear Brother Clegg's sermon on "Jonah" than had ever been seen at a service of its nature. The congregations grew and the seating capacity was increased by the chairs from the Sunday school auditorium of the church at Mansfield. The morning services were unusually well attended and spiritual. It was acclaimed by the town to be the greatest meeting ever held in South Mansfield.

Some of the visible results are: There were twenty-six additions to the church, 11 by certificate, 1 from the Second Baptist Church, and 14 by profession of faith and baptism. The Sunday school has been on the upgrade for a good while, and now we have the largest Sunday school we have record of. The Ladies' Society will adopt a course of mission study, which will be beneficial. On the second Sunday of the meeting Brother Clegg preached on "God's Great Pay Day," basing his remarks on a portion of Exodus 2:9, after which four infants were very impressively dedicated to God by the pastor. Some subscriptions were gained for the Advocate, along with other good things. In token of their appreciation of the work done, the people gave Brother Clegg a purse amounting to $127.25. This is the largest sum ever raised during a meeting. The Lord was with us in great power and wonderfully blessed us.

OBSERVATIONS AT RIPLEY, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: I am just back from a good meeting at Ripley, Miss., where I have been helping young Brother W. S. Norton, the pastor, in a nine days' meeting, in company with Rev. W. A. Wilson, our engineer local preacher. The pastor, I am sure, will report the meeting, but I desire to make some observations.

I found that Ripley Methodism had made splendid progress in the past 15 years. I left the Corinth District 15 years ago this fall. I was the first man the district ever paid over $1000 salary; now the district pays more than $2000. Ripley charge has steadily grown, and now has the finest class of really religious men to its membership I have seen. The church is just beginning to know her strength, to realize the possibilities that lie out before it as a church.

The people are well pleased with their new pastor, Rev. W. S. Norton, who came to them from Emory University a few months ago. He is a member of the North Georgia Conference. I hope he can be induced to transfer and remain with us. He is modest and of solid worth. Then, Brother W. A. Wilson, who was with us, is very attractive to all the people, and especially to the children, being an engineer and a witty Swede. He is affable, and has a genuine case of religion. He says many great things and no foolish, extravagant things; evidently, he has been studying since his conversion, a little more than two years ago. Any pastor who gets the service of Rev. W. A. Wilson will get good help—help that will abide in good.

My personal convictions are that the meeting at Ripley will have lasting results for good, and that the Ripley charge is to-day one of the most pleasant, spiritual and hopeful for the future in the North Mississippi Conference.

MATISM AND INDIGESTION.

tically all physicians and medi-riters are agreed that there is a relationship between Indigestion Rheumatism. This view is sub-ated by the fact that Shivar g Water, which is probably the American mineral water for Dys-a and Indigestion, relieves Rheu-matism and the Rheumatoid disease, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these dis-eases are probably related and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physi-cian, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Blad-der troubles and in Nervous and Sick headaches and find that it has acted nice-ly in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will puri-fy the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggra-vating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and con-sulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes of Virginia writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheu-matism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was en-tirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

DOCTOR URGED AN OPERATION

Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Was Cured.

Baltimore, Md.—"Nearly four years I suffered from organic troubles, nervousness and headaches and every month would have to stay in bed most of the time. Treatments would relieve me for a time but my doctor was always urging me to have an operation. My sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before consenting to an operation. I took five bottles of it and it has completely cured me and my work is a pleasure. I tell all my friends who have any trouble of this kind what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—NELLIE B. BRITTINGHAM, 609 Calverton Rd., Baltimore, Md.

It is only natural for any woman to dread the thought of an operation. So many women have been restored to health by this famous remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after an operation has been advised that it will pay any woman who suffers from such ailments to consider trying it before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

SOLDIER TELLS OF HEROISM OF RED CROSS NURSES UNDER FIRE.

Private A. C. McLeod, the first American soldier to be wounded in France, was hurt when the Germans bombed a Red Cross hospital. He owes his life, he believes, to the Red Cross nurse who stuck by him in the shattered ward, and saw that he had prompt surgical attention. Two of the nurses were wounded by the same bomb that hurt Mr. McLeod, but the rest of the women, it was stated, were as cool as the men. Here is his own story in which it will be noticed the Red Cross nurse is given the principal place:

"Our hospital, a British-American one in Flanders, was bombed the night of September 4, last. I was working in this hospital, at which I had been assigned to the transportation section. The patients who could do so went to the bomb-proof cellar when the air-raid opened, but there were a number of soldiers so badly wounded that they could not be moved. A number of nurses stayed with the soldiers, and I remained to help.

"Suddenly, a bomb made a direct hit and exploded near by. It pretty nearly cleaned out the hospital. My legs were smashed to a pulp and I was raving with pain. I won't describe the scene about me, for that would be too horrible. A nurse stayed by my side. She stuck to me and saw that I had prompt surgical attention, and I probably owe my life to the immediate amputation which was ordered. The bombing of this hospital cost one nurse an eye, and another a foot. The rest of the nurses were as cool as the men. I can't say too much for the work of the American Red Cross in France."—Red Cross Bulletin.

TIME OUT.

Gratitude.

"It says here that a wealthy Western man has left $500,000 to the woman who refused to marry him 20 years ago," said Mrs. Gabb, as she looked up from the newspaper she was reading. "That's what I call gratitude," commented Mr. Gabb.—Cincinnati Inquirer.

What Did She Mean?.

Henry: "I will be good for a penny, mother."

Mother: "Henry, you must understand right now that a son of mine must be good for nothing."—Exchange.

Music With His Meals.

A young blood went into a cafe in Eldorado the other day, and, pointing to the first item on the menu, asked the waiter to bring him some of that.

"Sorry," said the waiter, "but the orchestra is playing that."—Kansas City Star.

Clear Enough.

Old Farmer (to soldier son just returned from the front): "Well, Dick, what be these tanks like that there's so much talk about?"

Son: "Why, they're just wobbling thingamabobs, full o' what-you-may-call-'ems, and they blaze away like billyo!"

Old Farmer: "Ay, I heard they was wonderful things, but I never could get any details afore."

He Knows Now.

In the early days of the war the officer in charge of a British post deep in the heart of Africa received this wireless message from his superior officer: "War declared. Arrest all enemy aliens in your district."

With commendable promptness the superior received this reply:

"Have arrested seven Germans, three Belgians, two Frenchmen, two Italians, an Austrian and an American. Please say who we're at war with."—American Boy.

We live by faith, not by sight. We do not preach that all is disappointment—the dreary creed of sentimentalism; but we preach that nothing here is disappointment, if rightly understood. We do not comfort the poor man by saying that the riches that he has not now will he have hereafter—the difference between himself and the man of wealth being only this, that the one has for time what the other will have for eternity; but what we say is, that that which you have failed in reaping here, you never will reap, if you expected the harvest of Canaan. God has no Canaan for His own; no milk and honey for luxury of the senses; for the city which hath foundations is built in the soul of man. He in whom Godlike character dwells has all the universe for his own.—Frederick W. Robertson.

NUXATED IRON

The Power Behind Strong, Keen, Red-Blooded Americans

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator Richard Rolland Kenney of Delaware, at present Major of the U. S. Army; General John L. Clemm (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

NEGRO EDUCATION A NATIONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

At the recent meeting of the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association, Dr. J. H. Dillard, the Southern president of the Slater and Jeanes Boards, presented a plan for national assistance to colored public schools which was heartily endorsed by that body.

National aid to Negro public school education, Dr. Dillard declared, rests on justice to the Negro, to whom the nation which enslaved and then freed him owes an education which will fit him for intelligent and efficient living under the conditions of freedom. It rests also on justice to the South, which "should not have been expected to bear the whole burden of the Negroes' public education." "For the presence of the Negro, and his use as a slave, were due, not to the South alone, but to the whole country," which "as a whole, consented and abetted."

The South has done much, "yes, very much, as the great reduction in illiteracy well shows." Yet, "it is still true that in most parts of the South the terms of Negro schools are too short, and the pay and consequent fitness of the teachers too low. Longer terms and better teachers are the two outstanding needs."

The plan calls for aid for Negro public schools in fifteen States, from Delaware to Texas, with the possible addition of West Virginia and Missouri, all Federal funds being used to increase salaries, a step which would insure better teachers. The amount proposed is "for fifteen years one-third, for ten years one-fourth, for five years one-fifth, of the amount expended each preceding year for all purposes of Negro education from public funds, in each country and city, and for each State institution of higher grade."

Accurate figures are not available; but the maximum yearly total contributed by the government would probably be about $2,000,000—certainly not over $3,000,000, "a small sum for the whole nation to pay in performing a high duty and achieving a widespread benefit:" for "the prosperity, the safety and the health of the nation depend upon the spread of knowledge, intelligence, efficiency, and enlightened purposes among all citizens of every race and calling."

With the backing of the National Education Association, and embodying both justice and patriotism, it is hoped that this plan will become a reality, to the benefit of the nation, and of both races concerned.—Southern Publicity Committee, Mrs. J. D. Hammond, Secretary.

Doctors Say Calomel Is Best Medicine

According to the world's greatest physicians and medical experts, calomel is the best and most universally useful of all medicines. Medical authorities prescribe calomel for almost every disease and explain that it is the best and surest of all system purifiers. They say that calomel cleanses the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys and purifies the blood from all poisons, making the system pure and clean so that nature can quickly restore the health.

Now that science has purified calomel of all its nauseating and dangerous qualities, the new kind of calomel, called "Calotabs," is even more popular than the old. As a liver cleanser and system purifier Calotabs are more effective than the old-style calomel, yet are entirely delightful in effect. One Calotab at bedtime, with a swallow of water—that's all. No nausea nor the slightest unpleasantness. Next morning you awake feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you please and go where you please—there is no restriction of habit or diet.

Calotabs are sold only in original, sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your druggist recommends and guarantees Calotabs, and will refund your money if you are not delighted with them.

PIANO LESSONS VERSUS MUSICAL EDUCATION.

There are thousands of systems of musical education in use in our country. Indeed there are about as many methods of teaching piano as there are teachers. Every teacher has his or her own individuality and it appears most prominent in his or her method of teaching. The American system of musical education is so complex, so incomplete, so lacking in uniformity that it has been very difficult to secure in even the country's foremost colleges and conservatories a well rounded musical education that takes up in a systematic and progressive manner the various necessary topics. Sad to say, the instruction has been so inadequate, as far as a well rounded musical education is concerned, that most of our young folks have taken mere piano lessons. Merely their fingers have been trained, not their minds. They have learned to be skilled and brilliant players without ever realizing what they are playing, without appreciating the spirit, the rhythm, the soul of their music. And so there is a difference between a mere piano lesson and a musical education, a vital difference.

The difficulty has been in the absence in our public schools and colleges of a standard method, a complete text book of music. There is, and always has been, at the disposal of the pupil the world's greatest music but it is in scattered form and every piece separate. No subject of the importance of music should be studied in this disjointed manner.

Happy to say, the standardization of music teaching and school credits for music study are subjects receiving serious attention by educational authorities throughout the country. It will soon be the rule in the high school, rather than the exception, to give credits toward graduation for outside study of music. A number of the world's most famous artists, including such men as Leopold Godowsky, Emil Sauer, Josef Hoffman, Stillman-Kelly and others, have made this great work possible by the publication of what is known as the Progressive Series of Piano Lessons. Covering as it does the theory of music and the fundamental principles of piano playing in a correlated manner, it fully meets all the requirements of such a text. It will eventually mean that the individual private music teacher, by using this text book and method of teaching and study, may enter her pupils into the high schools, colleges and conservatories with full credit for all work done. It will eliminate the loss of a great deal of time spent in rambling unnecessarily over subjects already fully covered. It will furnish for the musical world a systematic form of piano study with a thoroughly correlated study of each topic taken up progressively and will furnish a basis by which all credits may be easily given, a standard on which the cause of musical education may be well founded.

These great artists deserve a great deal of credit for the tremendous effect of such a text. The Progressive Series of Piano Lessons has already been adopted by thousands of the country's foremost conservatories, colleges, high schools and private teachers. Its influence is far reaching, and it is hoped that the time is not far off when our boys and girls may safely begin their musical education in any part of the country with the assurance that all work done, either under private teachers, or in schools, will give them full credit in the further advancement of their musical education.—Adv.

WHO WAS WRONG?

The judge (to jury who have retired several times without agreeing): "I understand that one juryman prevents your coming to a verdict. In my summing up I have clearly stated the law, and any juryman who obstinately sets his individual opinion against the remaining eleven is totally unfitted for his duties." The Solitary Objector: "Please, m'lud, I'm the only man who agrees with you!"—Passing Show.

Most of the coldness and indeed most of the criticalness that we experience in the Church is of our own making and is self-generated. In a great household there must be varieties, both of taste and temperaments, and if we have the right attitude and spirit we will come to the House of God not as critics, but as lowly contributors to the weal and happiness of each and every one of its worshipers, be they rich or poor, be they high or low; be they fashionable or unfashionable, be they clothed in silks or homespun.—St. Mark's Outlook.

WHAT IS A CALORIE?

Since food conservation has become a vital factor in carrying on our war against Germany, the layman has encountered in his reading the new word calorie. This word, which formerly appeared only in scientific journals, now jumps at once from the daily papers, from the magazines, agricultural and trade press. In a way, the food administration is partly responsible for the increased use of the word, and, as a result, has received letters from all parts of the country asking, "What is a calorie?" Some people have gone so far as to suggest that it is the name of a new breakfast food, while in one instance an inquirer stated he had heard that it was a new type of explosive discovered by the War Department, and wanted to know what the food administration had to do with it.

When fuel is thrown on a fire under a boiler heat is produced. This heat is required in order that the engine may perform its work. To do work of any kind requires energy. Food used or burned in the human machine produces energy to maintain the normal heat of the body and to do its work. Work done by the body comprises not only that which requires muscular or mental exertion, but also involuntary exertion, such as the beating of the heart, the expansion of the lungs, etc. The chemical process within the body which transforms our food into energy is similar in nature to the process which takes place when fuel is burned over fire—though, in the body, the burning takes place very slowly and in every tissue, instead of in one central place. The value of food is determined by the amount of energy it yields to the body; and it also has a building and regulating strength.

It was necessary that a unit be established for measuring the amount of heat produced when food was completely burned. The unit chosen or universally adopted as the unit for measuring fuel value or energy value for any kind of food is called the calorie. It represents the same principle in measuring as the inch or foot, the unit of measuring length; the pint or gallon, the unit of volume, and the ounce or pound, that of weight.

The calorie is the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of one kilogram of water 1 degree C., or one pound of water approximately 4 degrees F. Our requirements of food, so far as the amount is concerned, can therefore be expressed in the number of calories needed for each person per day. It must not be forgotten that the calories must be derived from the proper kinds of food.—Bulletin.

A MORNING PRAYER AND RESOLVE.

I will try this day to live a simple, sincere, unselfish life; repelling every thought of discontent, cultivating cheerfulness, self-control and the habit of co-operation; practicing economy, friendliness and helpfulness. And as I cannot in my own strength do this, or even with a hope of success attempt it, I look to Thee, O Lord, my Father in Jesus Christ my Savior, and ask for the gift of the Holy Spirit. It is a blessed secret, this living by the day. And one can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall; any one can do his work, however hard, for one day; any one can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly and purely till the sun goes down. And this is all that life really means to us, just one little day at a time.—Bishop Vincent.

JUSTICE AS WELL AS MERCY NEEDED.

"We need not dream we can decelve or bribe God by exalting His love and mercy at the expense of His righteousness and holiness. God is not too good or merciful to allow a man to reap the legitimate and inevitable result of his sowing. He is altogether too righteous and holy to obliterate the distinction between sin and righteousness by treating both on the same plane in His administration. 'As righteousness tendeth to life: so he that pursueth evil pursueth it to his own death.' Reaping what we sow is a fundamental law in all realms, and is simple, just, natural, divine, and merciful. Sin's eternal penalty is a merciful provision of God for society's protection, as well as for the perpetuity and the protection of virtue itself."

Permanent Muscular Strength cannot exist where there is not blood strength. Young men giving attention to muscular development should bear this in mind. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives blood strength and builds up the whole system.—Adv.

EVERY MAN JACK OF THE WOMEN.

The American women on war service in Paris were addressed by Harry Emerson Fosdick, of Union Theological Seminary, at one of the Friday evening addresses at Hotel Petrograd, the American Young Women's Christian Association Hostess House, in a simple, straight-forward, straight-dealing talk, "confidential like," as between man and man." The war is bringing men and women into the confidence and breadth of relationship which marks true good fellowship among men. When Mr. Fosdick referred to the members of his women audience as 'every man Jack of us,' perhaps it did ring with the colloquialism of the front trenches, but every woman there recognized more clearly her serious and essential place in the war world because she could be talked to in this way.

This keen observer has been on the actual front, at the listening posts; he has been up in an airship over the lines, he has talked with officers who believe that wireless destruction will be the next invention of hideous war, and he has met men, "roughnecks," out of whose mouths flowed "liquid blasphemy," who, when they met little children on the street of a half-ruined village, went with the children to see their home, spent all their pay filling the larder which had been empty for days, and collected 200 francs to pay the funeral expenses of the baby who had just died.

American soldiers never can resist the appeal of little children, and, Mr. Fosdick concluded, "Never again will I call any man commonplace." Every woman there felt a benediction of the spirit when the story was told of the child who saw a star near the moon and knew that God had put out a service flag for his Son.—Y. W. C. A. Bulletin.

CERTAINLY!

A man who wanted a horse for general use went to a dealer and explained that he wished to buy a nice, quiet, good-looking animal that could be driven by his wife in a dog-cart, and that would not object to being hitched up to a lawn-mower. The dealer listened attentively, and then asked, "Would you like him to wait at the table, sir?"—Youth's Companion.

MUSIC DEPARTMENT OF WHITWORTH COLLEGE

Miss E. McVoy, Miss Annie Blue, Miss Emma Hoffman and Miss Helen Rosser are the Music Teachers of Whitworth College, 1918-1919. Miss Lois Cooper will spend a year at the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore, under the renowned Boyle.

The Lincoln County Times has the following to say of the two new teachers:

The two teachers who have been secured to fill the vacancies in the Music Department of Whitworth College come with splendid recommendations, and Dr. I. W. Cooper feels that he is offering the Brookhaven people unusual advantages in presenting these women as members of his faculty. For piano teacher, and teacher of Harmony and Music History, Miss Emma Hoffman of New Jersey has been appointed. She is a graduate of the New York Conservatory of Music, pupil of the following distinguished teachers: August Fraemcke, Rubie Goldmark and Henry Von Hofe. She has had several years' experience in her chosen work and has won recommendations for her pedagogical ability as well as her concert work, as she has an unusual repertoire at her finger-tips and a thorough enjoyment of her art both as pianist and teacher. She comes to us from Blackstone College, Virginia, where also taught last year the Voice teacher, Miss Helen Rosser. Miss Rosser is a resident of Texas, having graduated from the school in Dallas, and continuing her work under the renowned Edwarde Clarke of the Bush Conservatory. She holds from this Conservatory a teacher's certificate and a diploma in Voice. She comes to us well recommended as a singer and director and teacher. It is thought that patrons of our college will be quite pleased with the work turned out by these women, and the college congratulates itself upon having secured such excellent talent.

Ever Salivated By Calomel? Horrible!

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

ARTICLE III.

"The Capital Stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at the sum of FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS, divided into Five Thousand Shares of Ten Dollars each, which stock shall be paid for in cash before issued. Ten Thousand Dollars, represented by One Thousand Shares, shall be denominated 'COMMON STOCK,' and the balance of Forty Thousand Dollars, represented by Four Thousand Shares of said stock, shall be denominated 'PREFERRED STOCK.' Said Preferred Stock shall have a preference and priority over said Common Stock in the assets of this corporation and shall be entitled to a dividend of Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue upon the par value of the same. Said dividends shall be cumulative and shall be paid in preference to any dividend on the Common Stock. In the event of liquidation or disposition of the assets of this corporation, the holders of said Preferred Stock shall be paid the par value thereof, together with the dividends above provided, before any payment in made on the Common Stock.

The Common Stock shall own the remainder of the net earnings of this corporation after the payment of the dividends on the Preferred Stock as above provided, or as much thereof as may be distributed by the Board of Directors and not reserved for the surplus or undivided profits.

Each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote in all stockholders' meetings for each share of Common Stock standing on the books of this corporation in his name, to be cast in person or by proxy, and the majority of the votes cast shall control any election or issue in all stockholders' meetings, but no vote on any matter shall be allowed to any stockholder on account of any Preferred Stock standing in his name.

This corporation may begin business as soon as Five Thousand Dollars of its Capital Stock is subscribed and paid for in cash. The Capital Stock of this corporation may be increased to One Hundred Thousand Dollars in either Preferred Stock or Common Stock, or partly in both, as shall be deemed best at a stockholders' meeting. The One Thousand Shares of the Capital Stock at present outstanding shall be classed and denominated as "Common Stock" and shall be so marked upon the face of the certificates by the Secretary of this corporation upon presentation for that purpose by the several holders of said stock. The remaining Four Thousand Shares of Preferred Stock shall be sold and issued, from time to time, at not less than par and for cash, as the Board of Directors of this corporation may authorize and direct. And this corporation, through its Board of Directors, shall have the right to call in and cancel any outstanding shares of Preferred Stock, in blocks of One Thousand Dollars at a time, upon the payment of the par value thereof, provided dividend amounting to Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue to the date of cancellation is or has been also paid on said stock."

All as will appear from a certified copy of the resolutions of the meeting of said stockholders, hereto annexed and made a part of this act.

FROM BROTHER SELBY.

My Dear Brother Carley: You may say for me through the Advocate that I have recently received a scholarship equivalent to $5000 from L. N. Dantzler, Biloxi, for the education of a young minister in the literary or theological school. Where is the young man who needs this aid?

I also have the beginning of a scholarship for the education of a young man who is going as a medical missionary. The young man will enter the medical school of Emory this next session.

Another splendid donation has come from that princely layman of the North Mississippi Conference, E. M. Fant, in the amount of $2500. He has contributed to date to Emory, $3000.

All these gentlemen have done a service for the ministry of our great Church that will live as long as the world stands.

My good friend, Brother Dantzler, has made it possible in the long run to provide for the education of many scores of young men for their high calling. Long may he live!

I wish there were many others who might see their opportunity in perpetuating their interest in ministerial and missionary medical education for the young men of the Church. If there are persons contemplating such donations, I would be glad to have them communicate with me so I may visit them regarding it.

Yours very sincerely,
ROBT. SELBY,
Commissioner for Mississippi,
Emory University.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE POSTPONED.

The Epworth League Conference of North Mississippi, to have been held in Holly Springs in the month of July, has been postponed indefinitely on account of the illness of Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo and conflicting of dates of other prominent speakers. This notice is given by order of Rev. J. H. Holder, Conference President.

Holly Springs, Miss., July 14.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

NOTICE.

In remitting for Bibles, send us money order or registered letter. If a check is sent add 10 cents to pay exchange. We have to pay 10 cents to collect out-of-town checks, and therefore cannot accept checks unless 10 cents is added for collection.

TO THE PREACHERS AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS OF THE JACKSON DISTRICT.

The District Sunday School Institute will be held at Florence, on August 27, 28. We expect every preacher, Sunday school superintendent, and teacher in the district. Do not fail us. Be sure to hold Children's Day service; take a collection in each church for Children's Day fund.

Florence will care for all who come. Send names of delegates to Rev. B. H. Williams. J. M. MORSE, P. E.

Editorial

"Open thy windows, gracious Lord,
On us the promised blessing pour,
Till the parched gardens of our hearts
Stream with thy love once more."

Family prayer is not as common as it used to be, more is the pity; we sometimes fear that personal private devotions are neglected more than they ought to be.

A man's stature is to be measured not only by what he accomplishes, but also by what he wills. Achievement may fall short of aspiration, but the true standard of judging is the one as well as the other.

Religion is not a garment that may be put on or laid off at will; it is a principle of life, a motive that lies back of all our activities. We do not "get religion"—we become religious. The spirit of Christ is manifest in all we do and say, if we are really his.

Some people seem to think that wide reading is the sure mark of the thoughtful man. The thoughtful man is usually a great reader; but he thinks his own thoughts, nevertheless. The real danger is not that we shall read too much, but that we shall think too little.

Fair warning of approaching danger should be sufficient for an intelligent man; if he heeds it not, surely, he can blame no one but himself for what follows. Yet every day men disregard the warnings against sin, fondly imagining that all will be well in the end.

The fact of influence is one of the most solemn in life. The body dies but the influence of the life goes on. Whether for evil or for good, eternity alone can show its effects. How terrible to be an eternal curse—how blessed to be a help to generation after generation!

The question of the world's getting better, is simply the question of the individual's getting better. I have no right to be pessimistic, to complain that things are going from bad to worse, until I have made all the progress possible in my own life. While I am trying to improve myself, probably others will be trying to do the same thing. And then my complaint will be groundless.

A good deal is being said nowadays about getting ready to meet conditions after the war is over. Doubtless we shall have to face many new problems and deal with new conditions; but Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, and the world is not going to change beyond the necessity for the application of the principles of his teachings. The world's need after the war will be just what it is now—Christ. The true Christian is prepared to meet any situation that may develop.

THE NEW MEMBER.

This is the season when the Church usually makes its largest ingathering. Revivals are being held in many of our charges, and many young men and women, boys and girls, are assuming the obligations of Church membership.

These new members, at the time of their reception into the Church, publicly express not only their desire and purpose in connection with the religious development of their own lives, but they also acknowledge themselves bound, by virtue of their membership, to perform certain duties in relation to the Church. These duties are voluntarily assumed, as a matter of course, but they are inseparably connected with membership.

These duties should not be lightly considered, or lightly treated. It is a serious matter to stand before the altar, in the presence of the congregation and in the sight of God, and make a definite promise to do certain things. The violation of that promise is not to be thought of or countenanced by one who has thus solemnly dedicated himself to the service of God.

One of the most frequent charges brought against the Church is that its members do not live consistent lives. It is true that this charge is frequently unjust, and that mountains are made out of molehills; but the lack of attention on the part of some people to the simple duties of Church membership is constantly embarrassing the Church and hindering its work in almost every community. Let our new members take heed to perform faithfully the obligations they have so recently assumed.

But there is another matter that needs to be considered in this connection: the preacher and the congregation are under a heavy obligation to the young Christian. The new convert is entitled to, and has a right to expect, such sympathy and co-operation as will make it as easy as possible for him to develop normally and happily into mature Christian character.

The custom that obtains, in some of our congregations, of extending the right hand of fellowship, is a beautiful one; but that does not end the duty of the congregation. Only those who have struggled against temptations and difficulties know how great is the value of a word of encouragement and sympathy spoken at the proper time. Harsh criticism will sometimes crush an earnest but discouraged soul, when a kindly word would refresh and strengthen. No member of the congregation is called upon for officious interference in the peculiarly delicate problems of the expanding religious life, but in a thousand ways a sympathetic interest can be shown that will be welcome and helpful.

The preacher, by virtue of his position if nothing else, is charged with a solemn responsibility that he cannot possibly lay aside. It is his to counsel and direct the young life in ways that will result not only in the development of the personal religious life, but that will also enlist it in forms of religious activity that will bless the Church. It is just at this point that the pastor has one of his greatest opportunities. One of the crying needs of the Church is for leadership; this leadership must be developed from within. Here the pastor has the opportunity to discern the qualities of those coming into his church which, properly cultivated and directed, will make for efficiency and progress in the years to come. The greatest man after all, perhaps, in the kingdom of God is he who can lay hold of and develop those lives that will be the mainstay of the Church in the future. Our ministers and missionaries and teachers and officials of all classes must constantly be recruited from the ranks of those who are steadily coming into the Church. Some fine material is coming in this summer; but unless it is taken hold of, and properly developed, much of it is going to be lost. And the responsibility for the loss will rest upon the pastor.

THE INVISIBLE BURDEN.

Some sorrow, sooner or later, comes to everybody. It is the common lot of mankind and no one expects to escape it. The promises of God sustain us in our troubles, and the sympathy of our friends cheers and strengthens. When the burden rests heavily, then some friend takes his stand beside us and lends of his strength to make it bearable.

But sometimes the burden we have to bear cannot be seen by our friends, and then we have to struggle on alone. We can never know how heavily laden are some of those we meet on the streets every day, whose companionship we enjoy in familiar business and social intercourse. The burdens they carry are heavy indeed, but they are invisible, even to the eye of friendship.

Here is a father, whose son, away from home, in his wilfulness and recklessness has departed from the path of righteousness and has come to sorrow and shame. The news has not spread abroad, but it has come to the father; he must not let the world know of his heartache and sorrow. Bravely he struggles on, almost crushed by the burden that no one sees.

In that home is an afflicted loved one, the very nature of whose affliction brings humiliation and anguish. Day by day the load must be carried, without a word of complaint or sign of weariness; the world must be faced calmly and cheerfully—the smile must not change into a frown. But day by day the shoulders are bending under the strain of the burden that must remain unseen.

There is one whose family relationships are so broken up by discord that home is scarcely more than a mockery; but the world must never know that peace has departed. The burden of unhappiness must be carried, but it must not be seen.

And so it is; the one who may seem happiest to us may be the one whose heart is almost breaking. We would help him if we knew his need; but we cannot know. He must go on, cheerfully, bravely, hopefully, bearing his invisible burden.

But, thank God, there is One who sees and understands.

The ministry of the Spirit in the world is constant. It is not dependent upon times or places, or any of the conditions of life; but it may be reenforced by all of these.

THE SONG OF A HEATHEN.

(Sojourning in Galilee A. D. 32.)

If Jesus Christ is a man—
And only a man—I say
That of all mankind I cleave to him,
And to him will I cleave alway.

If Jesus Christ is a God—
And the only God—I swear
I will follow him through heaven and hell,
The earth, the sea, and the air.

—Richard Watson Gilder.

WE MUST WIN AS CHRIST MUST.

Your great work, O Christian, is not to save your own soul, but to overcome the world as Christ overcame it: to overcome it by loving it, and ultimately saving it. How? "With man it is impossible. But with God all things are possible." Repent of your selfishness. Trust Christ with all your heart. Christ will, by his spirit, live in you, reproduce his own life in you, and make you what you never can be either by merit or by effort. "In me," he said, and the phrase is pregnant with vital significance—"in me," in living union with me, like the union of the branch and the vine, like the union of the members and the body, "ye may have peace." The peace not of pride nor of despair, but of disinterested and triumphant love.

Let us renounce all laziness and all cowardice. Let us never again yield to the subtle and deadly charms of selfishness. Let us in the strength of God overcome the "world" which flourishes upon the damnation of the young, the ignorant, the helpless, the friendless. It is time that all this deviltry should cease; and that the ears of a tender-hearted God should not longer be filled, morning, noon and night, with cries of agony and despair. It is time that human society should be reconstructed on a Christian basis, that brotherliness should take the place of selfishness, and that the kingdom of Jesus Christ should be established in every land and in every heart. Let us lay aside all forms of Satanic selfishness. Let us put on the whole armor of God. Let us fight against the "world" with the utmost energy of our nature. To cheer us in the conflict, the Son of God reminds us that he, too, has fought and won upon the same glorious field of strife. And he gives us the inspiring promise, "To him that overcometh will I give to sit down with me in my throne."—Hugh Price Hughes.

SOME MARKS OF A GROWING CHURCH.

Anything that is alive and healthy wants to grow—will grow. Little pigs, babies, oak trees and men, nations and churches normally and naturally grow. If the baby ceases to weigh more every time he is put on the scales, solicitous mother immediately looks for another food. If the nation's population is discovered on the decline, sober and wise statisticians and physiologists begin scanning carefully reports of vital statistics to find and remedy the cause.

The proper, ordinary business of an individual Christian is growing in Christliness. Paul recognized and constantly reminded young Christians that they should be careful to keep growing "until they attained unto the * * * measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"—till they "grew up in all things unto Christ who is the Head." Soon after he ceases to be a growing Christian, a man ceases to be a Christian at all. Stagnation in personal religion means sure death.

A church, too, must grow; at least it must want to grow. When a church neither grows nor longs to, an epitaph may as well be prepared. "When there is no vision (of growth) the people perish." Dr. George B. Dean pointed out startling conditions recently when he said that 39 Methodist Episcopal Conferences reported a loss in membership, 9 others barely held their own, one-third of our churches did not enroll a single person in preparatory membership, and that it took 39 members of the Church to make a net gain of one last year. It is very humbling to our Methodist evangelistic pride to be told such things. The only bright ray in the picture is that "barren" churches and Conferences do not want such conditions, and are earnestly praying and working for future growth.

Again, the most noticeable thing about the church of the first disciples in Jerusalem is that it grew and kept growing. Pentecost morning there were 120; Pentecost night there were 3000. And the accessions didn't stop when the eloquence of Peter's sermon was over. "The Lord added to them day by day those that were saved." Sporadic revival gains did not mark the first Christian church; regular, daily, healthy gains, saved people every day, were the distinguishing and delightful feature of that primitive band of disciples.

Are there any features of that constantly growing church in Jerusalem which may give suggestion to other churches that want to and ought to be added to daily? Doubtless a careful perusal of the story of our "mother church," in the second chapter of Acts, would yield valuable suggestions and make clear some of the marks of a growing church.

One noteworthy characteristic of this growing church (though it is true the name "church" was not then in use) was that the people recognized that "The Lord added to them day by day. * * *" They had the correct understanding of the source of growth, the producer of development: God did it. It was not Peter's preaching, and it was not James's administrative ability; it was not John's kindly spirit nor James's plodding work; it wasn't community of goods nor love feasts that were responsible for their constant accessions; it was the Lord's doing.

A church that grows to-day must recognize that at the outset. No "methods," no "efficiency plans or charts," no eloquence in the pulpit or music in the choir, no contests or publicity work will produce a healthy, steady growth. These things may have value as secondary aids. But the only one who can really make a church grow is the One who makes a pansy, or a baby, or a pine tree grow—"God giveth the increase." It is a necessary thing that a church and anxious pastor should recognize that to begin with.

Another clear trait of these early disciples, whom God multiplied so constantly, was constancy in worship. "Day by day, continuing steadfastly with one accord in the temple," is indication aplenty that they did not "go to church" spasmodically or intermittently, but constantly, steadfastly. It was the determined and regular custom to go up to the temple to worship. They did not say, these early lovers of Jesus, "We have outgrown the old Jewish temple; there's nothing in it for us now." They didn't remark in the morning, "I guess I won't go up to the temple to-day; not feeling quite right," or "I don't care for that priest who officiates to-day," or "I can worship just as well here at home with a good book."

No. Going to worship was not a debatable question among the members of that church in Jerusalem. It was a matter of course. And it will be so among the members of any church which really grows. It will be as much an accepted part of the Sunday regime as dressing or eating breakfast. The family will no more think of questioning at the breakfast table whether they will go to church than father would on Monday whether he would go to work, or open the store, or the children wonder whether they had better go to school. When attending the church service of worship is not a regular, accepted part of the members' program, and is left to moods or weathers, it is not to be expected that the non-members will be led to think very highly of the necessity of worship and church in a life.

Another mark of the mother church was practical brotherhood. "Had all things in common, * * * parted them to all according as any man had need," tells the story of the simple, unconstrained brotherliness of the believers. This "community of goods" was nothing forced on them. It was purely voluntary and spontaneous. Not a political socialism saying, "What's yours is mine;" it was a religious brotherhood saying, "What's mine is yours." Because they were genuinely interested in each other and bore one another's burdens, they put together all their possessions and relieved the needy out of the common fund.

Of course such actual community of goods is not essential to a prosperous church to-day; but the simple, unfeigned brotherhood which did the thing then is essential to-day. In a church that men are attracted to, "brother" must be more than a word taken glibly on the lips. It must be a word full of heart-interest and practical concern over those so addressed. It must mean that the members are ready with time, sympathy and money, when needed, to make good their membership vow "to promote the welfare of the brethren." When will brotherhoods in Jesus learn the secret of the spreading brotherhoods in masonry, forestry, husbandry—the fraternal spirit and practical help in need? "Brotherhood" is a word to conjure with to-day. Everywhere, from the Boy Scouts troop to the diplomatic council chamber, fraternity is the object desired and discussed. But such desires and discussion are mere "sounding brass and clanging cymbals" unless the brotherhood extends to actual words and deeds of everyday life. And there is no place where brotherliness must be more naturally and genuinely exhibited than in a church of Jesus, humanity's elder brother.

One can discern other things, such as their joyful disposition, their unity of heart, which distinguished these primitive believers and doubtless enabled God to give them daily new members. But these are enough; and these are not to be restricted to Jerusalem of the first century. There is nothing, either recognition of God, the growth-giver, regularity in worship, or practice of brotherhood, which cannot be duplicated in any body of Christians anywhere in the twentieth century. And these marks must be seen, these conditions must be met, before the Lord can day by day add saved ones to our number.—John Leonard Cole, in Christian Advocate (New York).

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

By Miss Belle D. Pennington.

A few words about the Seashore Divinity School, which closed July 3, may interest those who were not present.

It may be said that the tenth session of the Seashore Divinity School was most successful, enjoyable, and enthusiastic, from every point of view.

On Tuesday evening, June 24, the opening address was delivered by the president, Dr. C. W. Crisler, who outlined the program and spoke of the benefits received by the students attending the Divinity School, and the influence of the Church in molding the future progress of the world.

Dr. Henry Nelson Snyder was then introduced, and gave his first address on "The Literary Interpretation of Moral and Religious Ideas." Printed words fail to convey the charm of these lectures. Dr. Snyder is a magnetic speaker, gifted with humor, whose satirical play upon words is most pleasing.

On Sunday morning, Dr. Ozora S. Davis, hailing from Vermont, but at present President of the Chicago Theological Seminary, preached to the people; but on week days he taught the young preachers how to preach.

Dr. Cadmen M. Cobern, Professor of English Bible and Philosophy in Allegheny College, held the nine o'clock hour throughout the session.

At the close of Dr. Cobern's last lecture, Rev. H. M. Ellis voiced the prevailing sentiment that Dr. Cobern's lectures were most valuable and interesting, and he hoped Dr. Cobern would be heard next summer. The President endeavored to secure a promise from Dr. Cobern that he would deliver a course of lectures at the Divinity School next summer. Dr. Cobern, after listening to Dr. Crisler, accepted the invitation amid applause.

On Wednesday evening, the beloved Dean, Dr. H. H. McNeill, addressed the classes, and gave certificates and diplomas to the divinity students. Those graduating were:

Rev. M. J. Bouterse, Alabama Conference; Rev. C. P. Jones, Mississippi Conference; Rev. W. H. Winstead, Mississippi Conference; Rev. Lambuth Evans, Louisiana Conference; Rev. S. C. Moody, Mississippi Conference; Rev. Guy Ray, North Mississippi Conference.

During this session the fund of humor that always pervades the Dean's remarks was prominent, and the Dean often regaled his colleagues by humorously holding "the mirror up to nature."

Dr. Davis found the Seashore Camp Ground to his liking. He remarked that the Seashore Camp Ground is the most wonderful and valuable piece of Church property owned by any denomination in the land, and it is a wonder that the Conferences do not take hold of it and improve it.

Dr. Snyder seemed to enjoy his cordial welcome and said that he felt perfectly at home on the camp ground.

Dr. Cobern seemed to enjoy the companionship of his fellow ministers and showed his delight on all occasions.

The absence of Dr. Frank Parker, Mr. Henry Ahrens, Dr. R. H. Wynn, Rev. W. W. Drake, Rev. Wm. Schuhle, Dr. J. M. Henry, and other friends of the School, was much regretted.

MRS. JOHN F. WYNN.

Mrs. Pauline Gorton Wynn, wife of Rev. John F. Wynn, of the Louisiana Conference, was born in Natchez, Miss., on August 1, 1844, and died on June 19, 1918, having almost completed her seventy-fourth year. She was the daughter of Joseph Gorton and Olive Fuller Wilmarth, and in their home she, along with two sisters and two brothers, received a Christian training through the plous precepts and consecrated example of her parents, which led her in early life into a clear experience of saving faith. She did not have the opportunity of a college education, but in addition to the local schools in her home community, she attended a private school in Troy, New York, where she received a good education for the time in which she grew up.

On December 25, 1862, she was married in Waterproof, La., to Rev. John F. Wynn, who was then in the beginning of a long and useful ministry. For fifty-six years she stood by his side and proved a devoted wife and an effective companion and assistant in a ministry of more than usual fidellty and spiritual helpfulness.

She was the mother of eight children, two of whom died in infancy. The remaining six, Rev. Robert H. Wynn, D. D., President of Centenary College, J. W. Wynn, of Rayne, La., Mrs. Octavia Rickey, wife of Rev. H. W. Rickey, of the Louisiana Conference, Mrs. E. W. Wall, of Baton Rouge, La., Miss Alice Wynn, of New Orleans, and Miss Mary Wynn, of Crowley, are still living and all are active Christian workers. The influence of such Christian homes as that in which Mrs. Wynn herself was reared and that in which she was for so many years the active center and inspiring force, cannot be overestimated. It is through such homes that the true Christian succession is maintained and the world's final redemption will be made possible.

For thirty-eight years, Mrs. Wynn's life was spent in humble parsonage homes in different sections of Louisiana. During these years she reared her children to manhood and womanhood, with such success in their spiritual training that each one of them in childhood, some at a surprisingly early age, entered normally into the Christian life.

The force and practical efficiency of her life in the home were strikingly illustrated in the fact that in spite of the care of a large family, the financial and other limitations that were always present and the inaccessibility of high schools, every one of her children was given a good educational equipment for life.

Perhaps nothing in Mrs. Wynn's life was quite so evident and characteristic as the simplicity and completeness of her Christian character. Her faith and devotion were sincere and unfalling. When the experience and life of Christian perfection were presented to her as a present possession, she sought and claimed such an experience, and for more than forty years, steadfastly but unobstrusively, she "walked with God" in a life of which none who knew her intimately could doubt that she was truly "made perfect in love." She was a devoted student of the Word of God, and in her last illness, when confined to her bed and too feeble to hold up the Book, she would still ask for her Bible and her glasses.

Her unselfishness was a notable characteristic. Her thought was always for the comfort and welfare of others. She literally gave herself, throughout her long life, in service of every kind. When, during her last long illness, she saw members of her family busying themselves in thoughtful ministries to her needs, she said, among her last rational utterances, "I am so afraid my daughters will make themselves sick."

Her life was indeed a life of prayer. With a deeply spiritual view of life, and a faith of unusual simplicity and directness, she carried "everything to God in prayer."

In her later years there were times when, through physical weakness, she was subject to spells of depression, when she was tempted to doubt her spiritual experiences; but those who knew the unchanging spirit and purpose of her whole life never had any doubt as to her unclouded spiritual sky.

As a pastor's wife, discharging without stint the duties of her position, she left in every community in which she lived the sweet aroma of a rich and helpful Christian life, and many in different sections of the State prize the memory of her saintly character. From several of these communities, during her last lingering illness, letters came to her telling of the good she had done and that her influence was still felt, though years had passed.

In 1900 her husband felt forced to retire from the active ministry on account of the increasing infirmities of age; and from that time till her death, their home was in Crowley, La., where her godly life, her Christly ministrations and her spiritual vision were a comfort to many hearts. Every pastor who had the privilege of visiting in the family circle found inspiration in her fellowship and carried away more blessing than he brought into the home. For several years she served with fidelity and success as president of the Woman's Missionary Society in Crowley. But whether in official capacity or not, her hands were always full of helpful ministries. Near her home was a large community of poor neighbors who quickly learned to come to her for help in all their troubles, confident of her sympathy and assistance. A former pastor wrote to the family, "Mother Wynn's face was always an inspiration to her pastors. Her love and devotion to the poor of South Crowley was the most Christlike ministry I have ever known." In the long, lingering illness which preceded her death, there were periods when she was delirious, but in these seasons the expressions which came from her lips were characteristic of the lifelong tenor of her thoughts: "If it's Jesus' will, Amen." "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done." "Jesus take me." These and other unconscious expressions indicated that the subconscious mind was permeated by the one thought.

Her death and burial were the occasion of universal grief in the community where she had lived for nearly eighteen years. "Rich and poor, from the neighbor of wealth to the washerwoman's son, Protestant and Catholic, wept over the peaceful face in its last sleep."

Such a life can not die. The gentle spirit, released from mortal sufferings and earthly limitations, lives on in fellowship with God. The influence and memory of it, like a sweet perfume, abide to bless the friends who await a happy reunion in the day of resurrection. The blessed hope of that reunion will be an inspiration and comfort to the lonely husband with whom she has wrought so faithfully and the sons and daughters who owe their spiritual hope and life so largely to her.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP FOR SOLDIERS OVERSEAS.

The value of maintaining all the possible ties that bind a soldier to his home town and to religious influences is undoubted. Not only must men who have such ties maintain them, but those who have not, need them. One of the most important of these ties is membership in the church in a soldier's home town to which his parents and friends belong. It has happened again and again that the soldier desires to join the church after he has found Christ in some far away camp. How shall he join the church?

In the case of the men in the camps in this country the situation has been met by having the soldier join a church of his own denomination in the camp community, and his membership has then been transferred by letter to the church of the same denomination in his home town. This method is effective and feasible in the case of men in America, but in France it would be practicable only in exceptional instances, since churches and ministers of the various American denominations are not within reach of most American military units.

For this reason the General War-Time Commission of the Churches has prepared a form for receiving the statement of faith of a man overseas, which may be transmitted to the church of his choice in his home town, and used by that church as a basis for admitting him to membership. Where an ordained minister of a man's own denomination is accessible, the minister may either definitely receive the man into church membership, or transmit to the church at home the man's confession, to be acted upon by the local church, whichever may be more in keeping with the practice of the denomination. If such a minister is not available, the use of the form makes it possible for a chaplain or other ordained minister of a different evangelical denomination than the soldier's own, to receive his confession of faith and transmit it to the church at home. The church at home may then act upon it as if the soldier had appeared at the church to make his confession in person.

The statement is addressed to the minister and members of the church and asks the applicant to answer these four questions: What has led you to become a Christian? Why do you desire to join the church? Do you accept Jesus Christ as your Lord and Savior and is it your purpose to lead a Christian life? Have you been baptized? Space is provided for the signature and for certification and comment by the chaplain. The form also asks for the names of the man's parents or next of kin, in order that the pastor of the church may inform them, and suggests that membership date from the date of the application, rather than from the date of the church's action if the church so approves. Then should any casualty occur while correspondence is en route, the applicant's friends will have the comfort afforded by his membership in the church. It is suggested that the church write as regularly to the new member as to one of its own family.

The form has been prepared in consultation with leading clergymen in a number of denominations, but in no way commits any church to the suggestions made in it. It is believed, however, that it provides an effective way of connecting closely to the church at home the great numbers of men who are sure to draw near to Christ in the sacrificial struggles of the war.—Federal Council Bulletin.

FOUR PATRIOTS TRUE.

By Ulysses Grant Foote.

Four good men stood,
With true manhood,
At parting of the ways—
One way led to the battle plain;
One way led to the golden grain;
One way led to a street called Main;
And one way led to a freighted train.

One said:

"I'll go and give my strength and life,
Out where the battle reeks with strife."
The sun was in his face; the fires
Of freedom burnt his heart. His sires
Had fought one day at Brandywine!
He smiled and took his place in line.

One said:

"If he must go so must he eat.
I'll gather in the corn and wheat,
I'll herd the cattle and the sheep,
And raise his food in heap on heap."
And off he went to reap supplies
Beneath the bending summer skies.

One said:

"If he will touch the smiling earth,
Till she will give us all she's worth,
Till meat and bread there's ample store—
Then trains and ships must bear it o'er."
He hurried off to do his part;
And smiled for gladness in his heart.

One said:

"It must not be that I shall fail
While these all fight or reap or sail!
I'll pay the freight. My gold I'll give,
That none may lack, and freedom live."
He hurried off down to his bank
And piled his coin in rank on rank.

The nation's hearts all beat as one;
And thus it is the victory's won.

New Orleans, La.

A LETTER FROM CHAPLAIN VAUGHAN.

Dear Mr. Editor: With your permission I would like to say a few things to my brethren of the Louisiana Conference. On July 5, I was commissioned a chaplain and first lieutenant in the National Army for the duraton of the war. The War Department was very considerate in giving me an entire month before reporting at the port of embarkation, so I have the privilege of remaining with my family until the early part of August. I regret very much to leave my good people of the Carrollton Avenue Church, and to miss a meeting of the Annual Conference is a source of much sorrow.

It may be of interest to the readers of the Advocate to know something of the experiences of a candidate for the chaplaincy in the Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., near Louisville. When candidates for the chaplaincy have been approved by their denominational war committees and the Federal Council of Churches, they are recommended to the War Department, and, if accepted, ordered to report at the Training School for a five-weeks' course of training. The candidate enters as a private, special quarters being provided for members of the Training School. I entered on June 15 and we had a total enrollment of 175. The oath of allegiance was taken, the men were enrolled in the school and were sent to the Quartermaster's Department to be fitted out in the uniform of a private soldier. It was a funny looking crowd at first. All of them were there—the fats and leans, tall ones and short ones, red heads, bald heads and empty heads. We fell heir to the suits that had been worn by the men of the first school. I have one consolation now—some other fellow is wearing that outfit I labored with. Some fit and others didn't, but, anyway, we looked like soldiers. The men were divided into platoons, with a platoon leader, who was a sort of presiding elder, a "go-between." Just here the spirit of democracy did not prevail, for the faculty, like the Bishop's cabinet, selected the men they wanted and announced it. I was a member of the fifth platoon and I am glad to say my platoon leader was a Southern Methodist until he fell out and then an Episcopalian from New York was promoted to that exalted position. It would have been interesting to an outsider to see the inside of our barracks. The cots were arranged in perfect order, but the interesting part was what was on them and under them, and also lined up along the wall—straw hats, civilian suits, etc. I may say in passing that many of them came into use again, for a number of the candidates were sent home to their people where they may continue their ministry as before.

It requires a little time to get accustomed to army life, and a little courage and patience, too. Our program began at 5:15 when reveille sounded. No "beauty naps" are allowed in army life, no early morning coffee; do you hear that, Ivy Hoffpauir? We have fifteen minutes in which to bathe and dress, then come "setting up" exercises for half an hour. For several days shaking hands and slapping a fellow on the back were considered a most serious offense, for, together with sore arms, backs and legs, there was the added discomfort of the "shots" for smallpox and typhoid fever. "For the love of Mike, fellow, lean off my arm," was a common expression, and often it came with real enthusiasm. We had breakfast at six, a few moments to spare to wash our mess kits and clean up the quarters, for there was inspection nearly every day and the "house had to be in order," else there would be some uncomplimentary things said about you that you would never want your wife to hear. Drill came at 7:30, lasting for one whole long hour, and I pass on hurriedly. The lecture period began at 9 o'clock and lasted until 12, consisting of lectures on army regulations, court martial, and international law. After the noon meal we had an hour of French, and if the truth must be said, it was then that the majority of us got in our afternoon nap. There was horseback riding at 2, and a number of conferences. We usually got to bed at 10:30, tired out, about the happiest crowd of preachers in all the world. How those men did sing, and how pleasant it was "for brethren to dwell together in unity!"

Aside from the regular course of study, there were a number of lectures on various subjects. Two chaplains just from France discussed the work of the chaplaincy and explained many things that will be helpful when "we get over there." An English army officer lectured on gas and gave several demonstrations to our very great discomfort, but it was extremely edifying. We were favored with a visit from the Assistant Secretary of War; and also the General War Board visited the school by way of inspection. They gave us much encouragement and assured us that our work was highly regarded by the War Department and every assistance would be given to us.

I want to say just a word about the faculty. It is composed of experienced chaplains who are selected because of their ability along certain lines. The Methodist Church is represented by Chaplain Chillingsworth, one of the most spiritual and capable men on the faculty. Of course, it is impossible to accomplish a great deal in five weeks' time, and, unfortunately for us, our time was cut down to three weeks because of the immediate and urgent need of chaplains in France. We were just given a faint idea of what army life really means, and are able to report to our commands without embarrassment. The instruction is along practical lines and we were greatly impressed with the frank and earnest spirit of the men in charge of the school. They told us that we were to be shepherds of souls and our greatest task was to help men to be religious. We begin the army life enjoying the rank and privileges of the first lieutenancy, but we are chaplains, ministers of religion. That is the highest honor that can come to any man.

There are many other things I wanted to say, but this letter is long enough. I shall miss my brethren, and the thought of being so far away from home for such an uncertain length of time is no easy thing to comtemplate. But I believe God has called me to this work and I want to do it for His glory. It is a wonderful privilege and a great opportunity that no one could despise. May God bless our people and hasten the day when there shall be peace upon the earth again.

MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A called meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Education of the Mississippi Conference was held in Jackson, Wednesday, July 10, to consider a proposition that the Board administer a fund raised by Dr. I. W. Cooper for the education of young preachers. This responsibility was accepted by the Committee for the Board upon the following conditions:

1. That the money shall be loaned only to those who purpose completing their college course.
2. That the loan shall be without interest until the college course is completed.
3. That the notes shall bear interest at 6 per cent after completion of course until the principal is returned.
4. That the Board shall require the endorsement of the pastor and one business man of the community where the student lives.
5. That no student shall be loaned money who is near a high school where he may be prepared to enter college, but the case of a student who must board while engaged in high school work will be considered.
6. That, if for any reason the borrower fails to preach after having used the fund, he will be expected to refund with interest at 6 per cent the amount loaned him.
7. That the maximum annual loan shall be $150, which shall be paid quarterly in advance.

The Committee voted unanimously (though a protest was entered by Dr. Cooper) to name the fund "The Cooper Ministerial Efficiency Fund of the Mississippi Conference."

For a number of years, aided by large-hearted laymen, Dr. Cooper has been enabled to assist annually a few young ministers to secure their education, and now the plan assumes permanent form, with semi-annual payment of subscriptions extending through a period of eight years.

The maximum subscription is $200 semi-annually, the minimum $1. One of the best known laymen of the church subscribed $75 semi-annually while the committee was in session. There is one subscription of $400, another of $250, a few of $100. The plan is to aid 25 young ministers annually while pursuing their college studies. Students desiring aid from this fund will be furnished applications by the Secretary of the Board of Education, Mississippi Conference. The preachers of our Conference are requested to open their pulpits to Dr. Cooper that he may present this cause to our people. A ministerial educational loan fund is assured.

OUR CHANGING ATTITUDE TOWARD THE FOREIGNERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

By Rev. O. E. Goddard.

There was a time, and that time is not in the remote past, when the average American, even the average church member, had but little concern about the foreigners who chanced to live in his vicinity. In many cases it was worse than apathy, it was antipathy and contempt. Now that these belated and handicapped races are showing such loyalty, such devotion to our country, we are becoming ashamed that we ever maintained such an undemocratic, unbrotherly and unchristian attitude toward them. They are proving to be a powerful asset in this world war for democracy. Many good people are beginning to ask, "What can we do to show our friendly attitude toward these races?" Anything and everything that we can do to Americanize and Christianize them will be helpful to them and self-protection to the Government. The easiest, the most helpful and the least expensive thing that churches can do along this line is to open night schools for adult foreigners. It is a monumental blunder to allow these peoples to settle in great aggregations, speak their own language, sing their own songs, publish their own papers, and reproduce here the life they loved across the seas. Under such conditions the process of assimilation will be slow and ineffectual. But if these peoples will acquire our language, sing our patriotic songs, read our history, imbibe our patriotic atmosphere, the process of assimilation will be accelerated immensely.

This is the time of times for our churches to show themselves friendly to these foreigners. The church in which many of them were reared exploited them, charged them exorbitant prices for funerals, marriages, etc. Many of them feel that the church is a mercenary institution, watching for an opportunity to filch more money from them. If the pastor can go to them and offer to open a night school in which they may be taught to speak, read and write the English language without one penny of expense to them, it will be a demonstration to them that the church doing that has no mercenary motive. Every church ought to have in it some men and women who would gladly render services as teachers gratuitously. It would be a labor of love, the influence of which is immeasurable. Surely no church would object to setting apart a room to be used four nights in the week for this night school. (The school need not run on Wednesday and Saturday nights.)

If one hundred of our churches will open such schools, say in October, and run them until March, it will make a new era in our Methodism. Thousands of foreigners will change their attitude toward the churches. I do not entertain the hope that thousands will attend these night schools. But all who do attend will spread the news that here is an institution that loves them well enough to render a service valuable to them without pay. It will be known not only throughout this country, but many letters will go across the seas telling of what the church is doing for them over here. One night school can set in motion influences that will pervade two continents. Moreover, the church that does this will be blessed. Many of our churches in direct contact with foreigners are suffering because of an unchristian attitude toward foreigners. How can a church prosper which has no concern for these weaker races for whom Christ died? They must have the Christ attitude toward these peoples if they would be the recipients of Christ's saving power.

I am asking one hundred of our pastors to try out this experiment in their churches this winter. I trust when the pastor proposes this that he shall have the hearty co-operation of his officials—indeed of his whole church.

SHIPBUILDING RECORD-BREAKERS DISPROVE HURLEY'S BEER PLEA.

When Edward N. Hurley, Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, expressed fears to Congress last week that a nation-wide ban on booze would retard shipbuilding, hundreds of brawny patriots who are pounding out ships in Camden in record time replied:

"Tell it to Tommy Mason!"

Tommy Mason was superintendent of the construction work on the Tuckahoe, the naval collier turned out of the yards of the New York Shipbuilding Company in twenty-seven days, breaking a world's record.

After the launching of the Tuckahoe, Charles M. Schwab, director of the shipping board, sought Mason to learn how he and his men had made such phenomenal speed.

"I want to pass your secret along to the other shipyards," said Schwab.

"No booze," replied Mason. "That's the secret."

Schwab didn't testify before the Congressional Committee last week in the hearing on war prohibition, or he might have repeated the story as Tommy Mason gave it to him.

Yard's Most Efficient Gang.

He might have told them Mason's group of workers, each of whom received a reward from Schwab, not only broke a world's record in turning out the Tuckahoe, but how it has attained a reputation in the Camden shipyards as the gang that can do the fastest work, has fewer absences from all causes, and 50 per cent fewer accidents than any other group of workmen of the same size in the plant.

He might have told how Mason, when the order of the day in the nation's shipyards was "speed up," watched to see that no boozers got places on his gang. Mason has spent almost a lifetime in the shipyards, and experience told him that booze and efficient work don't mix.

There were just two exceptions to Tommy Mason's ban on boozers. They were two riveters, whom he permitted to remain in his gang for awhile, although he knew that they "took a drink or two" in the morning before they came to work.

But Mason also discovered that it was several hours each day before these two men reached their maximum speed, and occasionally they failed to report for duty.

The Superintendent took a pencil and paper and did some calculating. He found out what the delay of these two men was costing the work of the gang. He deducted the number of rivets which "a drink or two" in the morning was costing.

He found that sober riveters had a larger average of rivets to their credit at the end of the week, and the two boozers left. The Tuckahoe's record satisfied him that he is on the right course.

Tommy Mason isn't the only shipbuilder who has arrived at the same conclusion. Heads of plants in Camden have asked the excise commissioners to close the city's saloons in the morning until after the workmen have reported for duty.

Booze Cuts Efficiency 20 Per Cent.

Opinions of Hurley and Bainbridge Colby to the contrary, these practical business men say that rum lessens the efficiency of shipyard workers 20 per cent. And a 20 per cent delay in ship construction these days may mean disaster. Excise commissioners in Camden complied with the request, and saloons were closed in the mornings. But now the men go to work on various shifts at all hours of the day, and the saloons open inviting doors. Besides, superintendents cannot be as particular in their choice of men to-day as was Tommy Mason when he picked the gang that broke the record on the Tuckahoe. Laborers are not so plentiful. Sometimes it is necesary to take a man who is known to be a boozer or try to run the plant short-handed.

With labor conditions, and the absence of restraining laws thus helping them, saloonkeepers in the neighborhood of Camden's shipyards are doing a rushing business. Workers line up outside to wait their turn at the bar. According to events in Washington last week, Tommy Mason's secret of the Tuckahoe's record has not reached Chairman Hurley and some other members of the shipping board. It should also be stated here that Tommy Mason is no "prohibition fanatic," as some of the booze allies call them. When a clergyman, who is pastor of a church attended by a member of the shipbuilding firm, heard of Mason's refusal to hire boozers, he went to Mason to congratulate him.

"Now don't get me wrong," replied Mason. "We may both be against booze, but for different reasons. My objections are based on the fact that it lessens the efficiency of the men. I'm against booze because it interferes with the building of ships—and we need ships."—North American, Philadelphia.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

Dr. H. A. Boaz, Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, will dedicate our new Epworth Church, at Lexington, Ky., on Sunday, August 4, and will perform a like service at Dalton, Mo., on Sunday, September 1.

The new Secretary of the Board of Church Extension visited Florence, S. C., last Sunday, to assist in raising the church debt. A goal of $13,000 was set for the day's work. Dr. Boaz preached morning and evening, and assisted in a personal campaign during the afternoon. At the close of the night service, instead of securing the $13,000, as was expected, the total sum of $21,300 had been pledged, payable on or before August 15, 1918. This is the "Texas way." The Florence people are charming and liberal.

The Board of Church Extension, in connection with the Centenary Movement, is planning a unique program, to help interest our people. Six booklets, fresh, crisp, new and sparkling, are now in preparation, to be mailed to our people, one each month for the next six months. These booklets are of unusual interest, covering the story of Church Extension from a new view-point. Should any reader of these lines desire these booklets, let him address the Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

A check for $468.76, covering a bequest from Mrs. M. R. Gerald, of Thomson, Ga., to the Board of Church Extension, has just been received from the executor, Mr. P. B. Johnson. This establishes a Memorial Loan Fund in the name of Mrs. Gerald, which will continue to do good throughout all time.

A good brother in the Tennessee Conference has recently contributed $1600 to the Loan Fund Capital of the Board of Church Extension, on the annuity plan. Concerning this item, he writes, "I have made provision in my will for the Church Extension Board to receive a small sum. If you care to have it now, and will pay me annuity, I will mail you check." How much better for this money to be put to work building churches! This sum will bear annuity at the rate of nine per cent during the lifetime of the donor and his wife.

We are glad to announce the receipt of a draft for $5000 from Mr. W. W. Ball, the executor of the estate of Rev. W. F. Taylor, D. D., long a member of the Kentucky Conference. Brother Taylor provided in his will for $5000 to be paid to the Board of Church Extension. This establishes a Loan Fund to be known as the W. F. & Mary Taylor Loan Fund. This money will be loaned perpetually at four per cent, to be used in building churches and parsonages. Because of the compound interest feature, it will grow continually, by an ever-increasing progression. At the end of fifty years, should there be no loss sustained, this fund will aggregate $355,365.

—REFLECTED IN—
TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

NEWS AND COMMENT.

Love Laughs.

According to a newspaper report, a marriage ceremony was performed recently, with the bride at her home in Maryland, and the groom "somewhere in France." Cable communication was established, with the bride and a minister at one end of the line and the groom and a chaplain at the other end, and the knot was tied. "Love laughs at locksmiths," and a good many other things besides. Why not?

The Government Likes Cash.

The United States Railroad Administration has put the freight business on a cash basis. After August 1, all freight bills will have to be settled within twenty-five hours after the bills are received; if forty-eight hours additional are desired, a bond will have to be given. This is good business—and the Government is a business institution. If the country as a whole could pay cash as it goes, people generally would fare better.

The Cotton Harvest.

The forecast by the United States Department of Agriculture indicates one of the largest cotton crops the South has ever produced. The problem of gathering it is a very difficult one, in view of the general scarcity of labor. Measures are being considered, looking to the importation of laborers from Mexico to assist in the harvest. Every effort will be made to save this commodity, which plays an important part in the manufacture of munitions as well as in world commerce.

"Give 'Em a Lift."

A New Orleans newspaper has taken the lead in getting owners of automobiles to extend to our soldier boys the courtesy of "giving 'em a lift" when they are riding about the city with empty seats in their cars. It is altogether a commendable movement. We are wondering if there are not many weary ones in civil life to whom we might give a "lift," not by means of a ride in an automobile, but by a cheery word or a kindly act. Many a heart is hungry for sympathy.

We May Expect Efficiency.

The congressional resolution authorizing him to take over and operate for the period of the war all telegraph, telephone, cable, and radio lines, has been signed by President Wilson, and in all probability action in accord therewith will soon be ordered. Government control for the period of the war is a different thing from government ownership, but the one may lead to the other. In any case, we may expect the Government to deal justly with its employees; and to render efficient service.

It is Coming—Even in Louisiana.

The saloon interests of Alexandria, La., have done everything in their power to evade and defeat prohibition legislation, even though it has been in keeping with the Government regulations for the protection of soldiers. Their attitude shows how little concerned they are about anything except their own mercenary interests. But they are steadily being defeated. The District Court, meeting at Alexandria, has just declared the Cooper dry zone law constitutional, legal, and valid. Of course the saloon keepers have taken an appeal, but in the meantime the saloons are closed.

They Must Have Enough!

The complaint has been made by some captured German officers, so an Associated Press dispatch says, that the regular officers of the German army send the reserve officers forward during an engagement, while they remain in the rear. If any objection is made by the reserve officers, the regular officers hold a court martial and inflict severe punishment. We do feel sorry that anybody should be imposed on, but we are not surprised that the German regular officers like to stay away from the front; our soldiers, with those of our Allies, have made it a decidedly unpleasant place. And the worst is yet to come!

We Cannot Condemn Now.

A London dispatch on July 17 stated that Lieutenant Quentin Roosevelt, the youngest son of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, was killed in a fight with enemy airplanes on July 14. Many people have bitterly criticised the ex-president for various public utterances and acts, but the voice of criticism will be hushed now in the presence of the great sorrow that has come to him, a sorrow that makes brothers of us all. The father's simple words will find an echo in thousands of bereaved hearts throughout the land: "Quentin's mother and I are very glad that he got to the front and had the chance to render some service to his country and to show the stuff there was in him before his fate befell him."

Who Knows the Difference?

The food administrator for Louisiana has written the governor of the State calling his attention to the widespread complaints about short weights and the necessity for some remedial action. The complaints are directed especially against grocers and ice dealers. We want to know what the difference is between giving short weights and plain stealing. Apparently some men who would be highly insulted if they should be accused of stealing, are very indifferent about the accuracy of their scales. If we may judge by reports that have been made, consumers are paying thousands of dollars every day for things they never get. We hold the opinion that some reputable business men are in need of good consciences as well as of good scales.

We Wish He Could.

An announcement from Washington says that President Wilson has decided that, with matters of tremendous issue demanding his attention every day, he cannot afford to take a vacation this year and that he will remain in Washington throughout the summer. We do not doubt the wisdom of his decision; we shall feel safer while this "prime minister of the world" is constantly in touch with the situation. Never in the history of the world has a man shown himself more perfectly fitted for the responsibilities of leadership than has President Wilson in the present world crisis. But we wish he could find time for a little relaxation from the tremendous strain under which he must be laboring. We move to give him a year off with full pay, after the war.

We Hope Congress Will Do It.

According to a press dispatch, the board of aldermen of New York City has petitioned Congress to enact legislation that will prevent landlords from rent profiteering. The complaint was that property owners had raised their rents far above any just or reasonable limit, and that the practice had become general throughout the country. This is simply one of the many cases in which the love of money has surpassed every other affection. It is a sad comment on human nature that some men are always ready to take advantage of the misfortunes or necessities of others to benefit themselves. If the same circumstances did not often reveal shining qualities of soul in many persons, we should become despondent. We hope Congress will pass legislation that will make all profiteering unprofitable.

Malnutrition of Children.

One of the great evils attending the present war is the marked increase of malnutrition among all classes of society, remarks a recent writer in Good Housekeeping. The substitution of new foods of uncertain value and the increased cost of living have resulted in decreased vitality and lowered resistance to disease, especially tuberculosis. This is a most serious situation, one that demands intelligent attention. Parents everywhere should see to it that their children are provided with foods that contain all the elements of nutrition that are necessary for maintaining constant growth and development. The war itself will permanently incapacitate thousands of our citizens for productive labor; if the new generation is under-nourished, the situation will be deplorable in the extreme. The least we can do for our children is to give them strong bodies.

The New German Offensive.

The new offensive launched by the German military authorities last week seems to have been the most inoffensive of all the major attempts of the enemy. Our forces were on the alert, and every preparation had been made to meet the expected attack. The element of surprise, upon which the German commanders have relied so much, was practically wanting. The fighting seems to have been more in the open than usual, and the troops of the Allies showed themselves thoroughly capable of taking care of the trained legions of the Huns. The American soldiers maintained brilliantly the highest traditions of their country. General Foch, the commander in chief of the Allied armies, took advantage of opportunities to hurl counter-offensives against the forces of the enemy, and substantial gains were made. We hope and pray that this engagement marks the beginning of the end; but if it does not, we will maintain our courage and our confident faith that victory for our righteous cause is assured sooner or later. We glory in the record that is being made by the soldiers of the United States.

The Hun Propaganda.

Revelations are constantly being made that show the extent to which the German Government attempted to influence public opinion in the United States in its behalf, long before our Government had been forced into the war. The latest disclosure of such plans is that brought about by the investigations in connection with the arrest of Dr. Edward A. Rumely on the charge of having bought a controlling interest in the New York Evening Mail for the purpose of using it to convince the American people that Germany was fighting a just and righteous war. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were at his command, it is charged, and efforts were made to influence papers throughout the United States, especially in the far West. Perhaps we shall never know the extent to which German craftiness and treachery went in attempting to mislead us as a nation; but we know enough now to realize that the most intimate and confidential business and social relationship were betrayed by secret agents of the German Government. Even now, in all probability, these sinister influences are at work to poison the minds of our people, not only in connection with the war itself, but also in connection with our relations with Germany after the war. The severest test of patriotism should be applied in every case where there is even the slightest suspicion of ulterior motives.

Can any Church dare to be provincial in this hour of international realization? The Chinese are serving back of the lines in France. The African fights with the European in Macedonia. The Japanese Red Cross heals the wounded in Flanders. The Hindu strives beside the Englishman for world democracy. WHO IS TO JUDGE?

A number of men drawn from widely-apart sections of the United States were gathered in the office of a country hotel in Oregon one stormy Sunday afternoon, and the talk was running along lines of food conservation, a "meatless Tuesday, wheatless Wednesday" announcement on the wall having served to introduce the subject.

There was no heat, no rancor, in the talk. Every man present was a patriot, ready and willing to do anything, to make any sacrifice, if the best interests of the nation might be served thereby. And so the conversation ran along, humorously for the most part, with anecdotes of "food-saving methods I have used" as its principal feature, until a man from Ohio, who had been half listening to the talk, half reading a newspaper, quite unexpectedly started something.

"I see it is proposed to kill the dogs," he observed quietly, his eyes upon the paper.

A tall man wearing a flannel shirt—a rough, hard-looking man, scowled alertly.

"What for?" he asked.

"Same old thing. The food they eat will be needed by more important factors in the war. A dog, the average dog at least, is a no-account thing anyway." Thus the man from Ohio.

He of the flannel shirt muttered something suspiciously like an oath, and his eyes shone with an aggressive light.

"There may be now and then a dog that would be better dead," he said. "The same thing's true of men. Listen, you gentlemen. If there's going to be much talk here about the dog-killing proposition I'll go out for a walk in the rain till you get through. Kill the dogs—humph!"

A man from Fort Worth winked covertly. He was a newspaper representative and he scented a story. Plainly the man of the flannel shirt had a reason. The reason might be interesting. Wherefore—

"You are in the dog business maybe?" he drawled.

"I am not. I'm in the ordinary everyday common justice business. I'm no dog crank. I want the dog to have a fair deal, that's all. I reckon the average dog will hold his own for services rendered with the average man. He's got his rights. Conserve his food if it is thought necessary, but kill him—why, it's diabolic to think of."

"Oh, I don't know," drawled the man from Fort Worth, provokingly.

"Well, I know. Listen, you gentlemen." The tall man loosened his shirt at the neck. "I live in Saskatchewan when I'm at home. Own four hundred acres, big barn, little house, two hundred head of stock, and one half-breed collie dog with fleas. I never cared much for dogs. This one followed me home from town one day about two years ago. I tried to drive him back, but he wouldn't drive. He knew my need of him, I reckon, better than I knew it myself. Once or twice I thought of killing him during the following year. He was a barker—and he brought dirt and fleas into the house, and was altogether a nuisance. He wouldn't have been, of course, if he'd been properly appreciated and trained, but he was only a dog and had to do the best he could. I don't believe he'd have lasted long on the place if it hadn't been for the baby. She was a year old, and from the first she loved that dog and the dog loved her. Seemed to understand each other. The youngster's sense of divine worth was keener than mine. Did it ever occur to you that so-called mature intelligence is somewhat of a joke? If it wasn't there wouldn't be so many folks down on dogs maybe. I got my jolt one morning last fall, and right away afterward I went to town and bought that dog the best collar I could find. I didn't call it a collar either—I called it a halo.

"I'll hurry over the story. It makes me sweat cold to think of it, and I know all right that one man's trouble stories are never interesting to other men. I'd gone to the barn to do the chores after building the kitchen fire. I heard a scream from the house. I hurried to the barn door just in time to see my wife run from the kitchen, her clothes blazing. The back end of the house was in flames.

"Yes, I reckon you've guessed it, gentlemen—my wife poured coal oil on the fire to hurry the breakfast. She should have known better, but that's neither here nor there. I grabbed a horse blanket and threw it about her and rolled her on the ground, and then I thought of the baby and started for the house. And at that instant the wind sent a great cloud of smoke toward me and everything was bitter dark.

"It seemed hours before the light came to my eyes again, and during that time I knew the agony of despair. And then, when all hope had died within me. I heard a bark. It wasn't a wail or a howl, but a note of cheer. I sensed that quality in it. In a vague way it comforted me, for it spoke at least of companionship in my sudden misery. I struggled forward, trying to rub sight into my stinging eyes.

"The wind whirled again, and I could see the house. I noted in that first blurred glance that it was doomed, with everything in it. But the baby—God be praised!—wasn't in the house. The baby, gentlemen, was sitting on the ground at a safe distance from the fire, and there was laughter on the blessed, tear-stained little face, and there was laughter, or something like it, on the face of the dog that stood beside the child. I could read the story in the tooth-torn clothing. The dog had dragged the little one to safety.

"Later, when my wife had begun to recover from her burns, I learned that she had left the youngster on the floor in the front room while she went to the kitchen and she had chased the dog out of doors before she did so. But when she told the story her bandaged arms were around his shaggy neck and her tears were dropping on his head."

The man was silent for a moment, his eyes closed. No one spoke. The man from Ohio rolled up his newspaper and tossed it under the stove.

"Tell me, gentlemen,"—the eyes of the man from Saskatchewan opened again—"who is to judge which dogs shall be killed. If anyone should wantonly kill my dog I'd call it murder. Who is to judge?"

No one replied. The man from Ohio stood up and walked to the window.

"It's raining harder than ever," he said noncommittally.—Our Dumb Animals.

OUR FIRST PERISCOPE.

It has been supposed that the periscope is a modern invention, but apparently this is not correct. It now appears that during the Civil War a periscope identical in principle with that of present-day submarines was used with excellent effect on the United States monitor, Osage. Its inventor, who served on this monitor, was Thomas H. Doughty, acting chief engineer, U. S. N.

It was a case of necessity's becoming the mother of invention. During the Red River Campaign, the Union gunboats were constantly harassed by Confederate cavalry which appeared unannounced along the river banks and offered sudden attacks. The monitors of those days had no observation points like those on modern ships, but were practically only steel boxes with slits in them for the guns. This led Engineer Doughty to seek some method of watching the country beyond the high river bank where the enemy lay. He solved the problem with a piece of ordinary lead pipe and a couple of mirrors.

Admiral Thomas O. Selfridge, U. S. N., retired, under whose command the periscope was first used, says of it: "This instrument was the first of its kind ever placed on a war vessel, and Mr. Doughty deserves every credit for the suggestion. It was made of a piece of three-inch steam pipe with holes cut at each end on opposite sides, pieces of looking-glass being inserted as reflectors. It was secured to the outside of the turrets opposite to the gun ports." A stationary sight was rigged below decks on a level with the eye of the observer.

The scheme proved so successful that after its installation the Osage was practically free from attacks.—Kings Treasuries.

Is it raining, little flower?
Be glad of rain.
Too much sun would wither thee,
'Twill shine again.
The sky is very black, 'tis true,
But behind it shines the blue.

Be glad of pain;
Art thou weary, tender heart?
In sorrow sweetest things will grow
As flowers in rain.
God watches, and thou wilt have sun
When clouds their perfect work have done.

Editorial

WE KNOW HOW IT IS OURSELVES.

Two weeks ago, in discussing the matter of securing renewals and new subscriptions to the Advocate, we ventured to make two definite suggestions that we believed would be helpful to those who were willing to co-operate with us in putting the paper on a safe basis. Those suggestions were, first, that our pastors endeavor to get every Church official to subscribe for his church organ, and, second, that they write to the Publisher for a list of subscribers on their charges, and, with that as a guide, try to secure renewals.

We hope every preacher in our patronizing territory read that article. We believe we know exactly how a good many of those who did read it felt at the moment. Their thought was something like this: "That is a good idea. It will not be very much trouble to act on those suggestions, and we will at least see what we can do. And we will do it right away."

But results have not indicated that very many of our brethren acted in accordance with their thought. We have had comparatvely few requests for lists of subscribers, and there has been no remarkable increase in the number of new subscriptions received. We are forced to the conclusion, either that no special efforts have been made to secure new subscriptions and renewals, or that those efforts have been singularly unavailing.

We incline to the first view, for we know how it is ourselves. It is so easy, after we have actually determined upon a course of action, for something to come up that causes us to forget our good resolutions, or at least to put off their execution to a more convenient season. And before we realize it, days and weeks have passed and we have done nothing. There is a deep personal note in this statement—we really do know how it is.

We cannot, therefore, find it in our hearts to indulge in harsh criticism; we want to say again, in all seriousness, that the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the official organ of three strong Conferences, is in need of a better support at the hands of its constituency. As is very well understood, it is very largely dependent upon the good offices of its friends, the preachers, for its success. If they can find the time to secure renewals and push its circulation, even for a few weeks, they can bring it safely through most trying times.

We know how much our preachers have to do, and how busy they are, and we do not like to ask them to do that which will require something of their time and energy; we would not do it if we did not believe with all our heart that the circulation of the Church paper among their people will help them greatly in all their other work. But we are so largely dependent upon them that we venture again to call their attention to something they, perhaps, intended to do but have overlooked thus far. Brethren, please secure as many renewals and new subscriptions as you possibly can. The Advocate needs them more than you realize.

PREACHERS AND DEBT.

The constantly increasing cost of living is laying a heavy burden upon a great many people. Homes that before the war were able to provide fairly comfortably for every-day necessities find themselves hard put to it now to make ends meet. Epecially is this the case where the bread-winner of the family is working for a salary. In some instances, it is true, salaries have been raised to meet the increased need, but, as a rule, the disproportion is still very great.

Our parsonage homes especially have felt the pinch of the new scale of prices. Preachers' salaries, never excessive, are more than ever inadequate to the needs that do not grow less. But we are in the midst of the Conference year, and it is not likely that any increase will be provided before the first quarterly meeting of next year. The situation is a difficult one, but it must be faced and dealt with in a business-like way.

One thing that we should all do, is to make up our minds to live within our incomes. To do that, is going to entail some real hardships. Most of us, perhaps, feel that we have already economized to the last degree. But when we realize what a terrible handicap debt is, and how hard it is to escape from it, we shall be wise if we go over the situation again, carefully and prayerfully, and determine that at the end of the year we shall owe no man anything except to love him. A cabinet member took occasion to remark recently in an address, that patched trousers and half-soled shoes are becoming fashionable, even in high official circles. As Dr. T. B. Holloman, of Vicksburg, suggested in a letter to one of his town papers not long ago, our high officials seem to be a little slow in adopting prevailing styles; but the point is, the most rigid economy is perfectly in keeping with the rigorous times in which we live.

Debt has seriously injured many a preacher's usefulness, and in many cases it has absolutely destroyed it. We do not mean to suggest that any of our preachers deliberately make a debt without expecting to pay it; but some of them probably fail to weigh carefully the difficulties that will arise, and before they realize it they are heavily embarrassed and handicapped. They are constantly thinking about their obligations and worrying over them, with the result that their efficiency is impaired. And at the same time, their creditors in the community are beginning to wonder, perhaps, when they will pay, and their attitude, though unexpressed in words, reacts unfavorably on the preacher's peace of mind. "Are you in debt so as to embarrass you?" is asked us at the beginning of our ministry, and we have to answer in the negative. Nothing less than the direst necessity should ever be allowed to make us change that answer.

Just at this point, we want to urge all our people, especially our stewards, to see to it that our preachers' salaries are paid promptly and in full. No church official has any right to complain that his pastor does not pay his debts until he and his colleagues have used their utmost endeavors in a business-like way to collect in full the amount that has been promised to him as a salary. And no member of the Church has any right to complain unless his own obligations have been fully met. When the preacher knows how much he is going to receive, and knows that he is going to receive that amount in full and on time, then he is responsible before God and man for the proper use of his resources; but when he does not know what to expect, and finally has to accept less than he was promised, then the people are largely responsible.

People, pay your preachers promptly all you have promised them; preachers, keep out of debt.

LOCAL CHURCH ORGANIZATION FOR WAR WORK.

The Macon Beacon, of July 19, gives an account of the organization of the Methodist Church of that cultured little city for definite work in connection with the needs arising from the war. We venture to call attention to it for the benefit of other congregations.

Under the leadership of Rev. E. Nash Broyles, the efficient pastor, a general War Time Committee has been appointed, consisting of eight members. The duty of this committee is to carry out all war activities within the congregation. There are sub-committees on Finance, Service Flag, Correspondence, and Program. The names of the committees suggest their duties, except perhaps, in the case of one—Correspondence. The duty of that committee will be to keep on file the names and addresses of all who have gone to the army from the congregation, and to keep the church in touch with them in camp and at the front.

Doubtless, other congregations are doing all that is necessary to enable them to discharge their obligations in connection with war work, but we commend this plan of the Macon Methodists as enlisting the interest and activity of a large number of people, and making provision for practically all the needs that may arise.

In the same connection, we take the following from the Beacon: "Each evening, except Saturday, at 8:30 o'clock, the city lights will be turned out for half a minute. At the end of a five-minute period they will be turned out for another half minute. This marks the beginning and the end of a five-minute period of prayer, which will be observed by the praying people of Macon and vicinity each evening except Saturday, for the duration of the war."

NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT.

In our last week's issue, we published an appeal by Rev. A. W. Turner, State Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, to the friends of prohibition in Louisiana to pass resolutions and mail copies of them to Governor Pleasant, Lieutenant Governor Mouton, and Speaker Bouanchaud, urging the adoption of the national prohibition amendment by the special session of the Legislature, which is to convene on August 5.

Brother Turner has shown unmistakably that he is qualified for the work he is engaged in. He is thoroughly informed as to the general situation, and he is an indefatigable worker. He knows what ought to be done, and he knows what methods are most effective in getting favorable action by the Legislature. This call of his, therefore, should be heeded. All of us want to see the amendment passed, but there is danger of our failing to make our wishes known in a way that will produce results. Now is the time to act; let a flood of resolutions pour into the offices of the gentlemen named in Brother Turner's appeal. And let us do everything else that we can do to swing Louisiana into line with the other States that have already put themselves on the right side of this great movement. And as Brother Turner says, "Do it now."

NEW ORLEANS METHODISM AND DANCING.

We are publishing this week, in another column, the resolutions recently passed by the Methodist Preachers' Meeting of this city concerning dancing, especially as it is indulged in as a means of raising money for war relief work, and as a form of entertainment for our soldiers. The resolutions are unequivocal in their condemnation of this form of social diversion. We believe they represent the opinion not only of the Methodist preachers of New Orleans, but also of the great majority of our Methodist people. In a recent Sunday evening service at our First Church here, after a full discussion of the subject, the question was put to a vote, and the dance was overwhelmingly condemned. We believe the result would have been the same in every one of our congregations.

Without being fanatical on the subject, we believe the time has come for the influence of Methodist people to make itself felt in every community in our connection where it is needed against various harmful forms of social entertainment. Certainly we cannot afford to sit idly by and countenance by our silence things in the name of charity that the best moral thought of the age condemns unreservedly.

The Red Cross and dancing and gambling should be absolutely divorced.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Northfield Missionary Conference, which closed recently at East Northfield, Mass., had a registration of more than nine hundred.

Rev. J. T. Sawyer, D.D., preached at the morning hour last Sunday at Felicity Street Church, and Rev. J. H. Stafford, local preacher, occupied the pulpit at the evening service.

Rev. Robert Hollingsworth, of Millsaps College, has been appointed assistant pastor on the Vardaman Circuit during the protracted illness of the pastor, Rev. C. R. A. Brantley.

We desire to call special attention to the story on our Home Circle page last week. It was written by Mrs. R. M. Brown, wife of the pastor of our Felicity Church, New Orleans. Read it.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference, attended the educational conference at Lake Junaluska as the representative of his Conference.

Debts on our churches at Woodland and Van Vleet, North Mississippi Conference, have recently been paid, and the church at Van Vleet dedicated. Rev. O. P. Armour, the pastor, preached the dedicatory sermon.

Rev. W. E. Dickens, of Pachuta, Miss., writes that his work is moving along nicely. He encloses the renewal subscription of Mrs. G. A. Gordon, who has been taking the Advocate for fifty years. Blessings upon her!

Rev. W. E. Thomas, superintendent of St. Mark's and Mary Werlein Missions, underwent an operation for throat trouble at the Touro Infirmary last week. He stood the ordeal well, and is making rapid progress toward recovery.

We learn from the Lincoln County News that Dr. W. G. Henry, our scholarly pastor at Brookhaven, Miss., assisted in a protracted meeting at Monticello last week. We know there was some good preaching in that meeting.

Rev. H. W. Jamieson, Y. M. C. A. religious work director at Hut 69, Camp Beauregard, Alexandria, La., was a caller at the Advocate office on Thursday of last week. His report of the religious situation at Camp Beauregard was encouraging.

Rev. H. N. McKibben, in asking that his paper be changed from Webb, Miss., to Tutwiler, says that he is gratified with the outlook as he takes charge of the Tutwiler circuit. We pray that he may have a pleasant and prosperous pastorate.

Rev. John Wesley Jones, of the Houston Circuit, was married on June 28 to Mrs. McGhee, one of his parishioners. Rev. E. M. Shaw officiating. Brother Jones and his good wife are in high favor throughout the charge, and the best wishes of all attend them.

Rev. D. R. McDougal, of Calhoun City, Miss., reports that he has just closed a great meeting at Pleasant Hill, on his charge. There were twenty-six conversions, and the Church was spiritually uplifted. This is good news. Brother McDougal has our thanks for a new subscription.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, was called to Mississippi by telegram last Monday on account of the critical illness of his father. This is distressing news to the many friends of Brother Holmes, who will sympathize deeply with him in his sorrow.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions recently sent in: Rev. R. A. Tucker, Grenada, Miss., 3; Rev. E. Blizzard, Myrtle, Miss., 2; Rev. R. W. Evans, Carrollton, Miss., 2; Rev. J. W. Price, Perth, Miss., 2.

Rev. J. L. Cady, writing from Clinton, La., requests us to announce that the twenty-eighth session of the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting will open on the night of August 16. A small admission fee will be charged. The preachers of the Baton Rouge District are especially invited to attend.

Rev. R. H. Clegg, of Harperville, Miss., in remitting for three new subscriptions to the Advocate, for which he has our thanks, says that his work is encouraging. He has held two good meetings and is hoping for good results in others yet to be held. We trust his hopes will be realized.

We regret that an error appeared in the report of the Children's Day receipts for the Mississippi Conference as printed in last week's Advocate. In the Port Gibson District, Meadville was credited with $11, when it should have been Woodville. The mistake was ours and we beg pardon of all concerned.

The quarterly conference of McKendree Church, Nashville, Tenn., has unanimously asked for the return of its pastor, Dr. T. C. Ragsdale, according to the Midland Methodist. So far as we know, this is the first church that has taken advantage of our new law to ask for the return of its pastor for the fifth year.

Rev. Briscoe Carter, the energetic and irrepressible presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, called at the office while in the city one day last week. Those who have read only the official reports of the General Conference should consult Brother Carter for illuminating "side lights."

Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, our camp pastor at Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss., paid us a call while in the city on business one day last week. He was enthusiastic over his work and the opportunities it presents for doing good. He has moved his office from the Carter Building to the Army Y. M. C. A. Headquarters, at the Camp.

Secretary McAdo is protesting against the exchange of Liberty Loan Bonds for merchandise on the ground that it defeats the primary purpose of their sale by discouraging thrift and increasing expenditures. Government bonds should be held by their original purchasers, except when sale is required by real necessity or misfortune.

Rev. C. E. Downer, our pastor at Petal, Miss., has our thanks for two new subscriptions recently sent in. He has just closed a good meeting at McCallum, where he was assisted by Rev. J. L. Greenway, our pastor at Lucedale. He expected to begin a meeting last Sunday at Lux, where he was to be assisted by Rev. J. H. Jolly, of Seminary.

Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon has recently added another valuable collection of books to the library of Southern Methodist University. One among a number of rare books is a copy of the Hebrew Grammar used by Dr. Martin Ruter in 1835. These books will be added to the large and growing collection now in possession of the University. The collection includes, also, bound copies of the Christian Advocate.

The city of Bogalusa, La., as well as the Methodist Church of that place, has recently suffered a great loss in the death of Mrs. Sullivan, wife of the "father of Bogalusa." Rev. A. I. Townsley, her pastor, officiated at the funeral, which, according to newspaper reports, was attended by more than seven thousand people. Mrs. Sullivan herself was called "the mother of Bogalusa." Seldom does a private individual receive such a tribute of affection as was paid to her memory by people of all classes who knew and loved her.

Millsaps College will be thoroughly prepared to give military training next session. Professor G. L. Harrell, and five members of the student body, have gone to the reserve officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan, Ill., where they will receive instruction that will prepare them to assist the commandant in training the students. The commandant will be chosen by the Government, and Millsaps will be placed on the same footing as are other colleges of the country. All students eighteen years of age and over may be enlisted; those under eighteen may register and be trained in the same manner.

The Council of National Defense, and the U. S. War Department, Washington, are asking that every effort be made in the various States to secure war photographs, which will be used to complete the official files showing the part the States have taken in the great war that is now being waged. Persons having kodak or camera pictures showing the departure of troops, patriotic meetings, celebrations, or anything in connection with war work which would prove of interest in future years, are asked to send them immediately to their State Council of Defense. Doubtless, many of our readers have such photographs, and will be glad to comply with this request.

One of the standard objections to foreign missions is that it takes a large part of the money raised for administration expenses. The falsity of this charge has been demonstrated time and again, but it is still evidently in use. The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief answers it, in its particular case, by submitting the statement of a reputable firm of certified public accountants, that "your plan of crediting every dollar contributed for relief purposes has been followed. All administrative and office expenses have been met from funds provided privately." The total amount received by this Committee to June 1 was $10,464,337.48.

A note from Bishop John M. Moore, written in New York, stated that he would sail on July 16, on the steamer "Saga" for Rio de Janeiro. On account of the steamer's failing to leave on time, he had been compelled to postpone his first Conference, the Brazil, to August 15. He will hold the South Brazil Conference on September 5. He expects to remain on the field till January, when he will return to assist in the missionary Centenary campaign. Mrs. Moore will make her home in Nashville during his absence. The Bishop's address while in Brazil will be 47 Rua Quitanda, Rio de Janeiro; his American address will be 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

We acknowledge the receipt of three very interesting wall charts from the Board of Church Extension. In them the work of the Board since its organization is strikingly presented. In the Louisiana Conference, 197 churches and 80 parsonages have been aided; in the Mississippi Conference, 311 churches and 92 parsonages have received help; in the North Mississippi Conference, 370 churches and 81 parsonages have been helped. These charts are for free distribution and may be had upon request from the Board of Church Extension, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky. They will certainly be useful in developing interest in this great department of our work and we urge our pastors to send for them.

TOPISAW CAMP MEETING.

Dear Brother Carley: Please say to the public at large that our annual Camp Meeting at Topisaw will begin August 9. We feel we have been exceedingly fortunate in securing as our preaching help Rev. L. L. Roberts, of Hazlehurst, Miss., and Rev. L. L. Felder, of Bianket, Texas. As usual, all the preachers of the district are cordially invited to attend.

Signed by: R. Z. Felder, President of Association; J. H. Felder, C. C. McEwen, J. C. Ellis, P. C., Committee.

HIDDEN LOVE.

Are there not many intelligent Christian people who do very little visibly and expressly for Christ? Is there not a great deal of hidden, silent love in Christian hearts, burning like lamps in inner rooms and dark places, which, if brought out, would shed around some cherishing warmth, and some genial glow and brightness? We cannot hold life healthily thus.—Dr. Raleigh.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

Mrs. GEORGIA WYATT, who for many years had been a resident of this city, fell on sleep at the Community Hospital in Lexington, Miss., on June 19, 1918, after many months of invalidism and long, weary days of suffering. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South, having joined here by certificate under the pastorate of Dr. H. G. Henderson, on May 12, 1912.

The writer was often a visitor in this sickroom and always found a hearty welcome. She was very appreciative of religious conversation and liked to have that season of prayer whenever I came.

The last time I saw her, she was too sick to talk, but in her suffering pointed upward. I went away to hold a revival and when I came back she had gone on to her reward.

RENA JOE STEVENS was born on Sept. 1, 1874, and died on May 28, 1918. Eulogy cannot do justice to the lovely character of this Christian, whose whole life was spent in thoughtfulness for her family and friends. In a gentle and unobtrusive way she gathered into her life the true friendship of all those who were fortunate enough to know her intimately. Little children loved her, as only little ones can love when they instinctively know they have a staunch friend.

A most beautiful quality manifested itself in her love for flowers, birds and animals. They loved her generous hands, and kindly voice, and gentle steps.

A mother, father, two sisters, and a brother miss those gentle though busy steps each day. Her neighbors miss the click of the gate, as she came often with armfuls of flowers and fruit and things of her garden. The children miss her smile and little gifts. But the loss of her is most keenly felt by her father and mother, from whom she was rarely separated until her death. And she left her home so surrounded with her personality that time cannot obliterate it; time, with the mercy of God, can only temper the loss.

Mrs. MARIA R. PICKENS, daughter of Rev. James and Mrs. Louisa Walton, was born on Nov. 30, 1835, and died in Lexington, Miss., on July 12, 1918. After the burial service of her Church, conducted by Rev. Ben. P. Jaco, her pastor, at the home of her son, Mr. I. B. Pickens, the body was tenderly laid to rest in the Richland cemetery in the presence of many loving friends and her three sons and other relatives.

She was converted under her father's preaching and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Richland in May, 1849, thus lacking less than one year of giving the Church three score and ten years' service. She really served God and her generation in the practical walks and relations of life. Whether in the business, social, or religious world, she showed clear ideas, well defined purposes, and high moral and spiritual convictions. Her poise of mind and peace of soul were very remarkable. It was a pleasure to converse with her in her last days because she was cheerful and kept in touch with the work of her Church and the movements of the Kingdom of God. If she missed a copy of the Church paper she was disappointed. Only a few days before she left us I visited her as she sat under the shade trees with her Bible and other things to read around her. Here she read God's word and listened to God's voice in nature, while she contemplated her eternal home, to which she has gone. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

LEVIN LAKE, son of Richard Nason and Lida Owens, was born near Grenada, Miss., on Sept. 6, 1881, was baptized in infancy by Rev. E. B. Ramsey, and joined the M. E. Church, South, at an early age. He was for a number of years in the employment of Armour & Co., having entered their service in connection with his grandfather, Col. Levin Lake, who began business with the firm in the early thirties when it was Armour, Lake & Co., young Owens making the third generation in that business connection.

He was a young man of sterling honesty, quiet, modest, unassuming, devoted to his friends and relatives, especially to his widowed mother and his aged grandfather. Between him and the latter there was a mutual esteem and confidence that was very beautiful to behold. He was kind and sympathetic, ever ready to render a service of love and ministry to his fellow-men.

His appreciation of true friendship and fellowship was shown by his devotion to the Masonic fraternity, of which he became a member soon after reaching his majority and in which he steadily advanced through the various degrees till he became a Mystic Shriner.

After lingering for some weeks he died at the home of his mother in Grenada, Miss., on June 6, 1918, and was buried beside his father in Odd Fellows' Cemetery. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. R. Countiss, after which the Knights Templar and Blue Lodge Masons carried out their beautiful and impressive ritual for burials. Peace to his ashes and the comforts of the Heavenly Father to his mother, and brother, David W. Owens, of Jackson, Miss., and his sisters, Miss Lida Lake Owens, Mrs. Collins Jones, and Mrs. Harvey Harris. J. R. COUNTISS.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas God, in his infinite love and wisdom, has seen fit to call from an earthly to a heavenly home Mrs. J. W. Griffing, a faithful member of the Methodist Church and Sunday school, also of the Woman's Missionary Society; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of said church and Sunday school and Missionary Society bow in humble submission to His will and thank him for her pure, true life of Christian service.

2. That we cherish the memory of her sweet Christian spirit, her patient endurance and her cheerful submission throughout her long-continued illness.

3. That, while we sorely miss her bright smile and cheery presence, we will cherish the memory of her pure life and strive so to live that we shall meet her in our promised home eternal.

4. That we extend to her heart-broken husband, daughter, parents and other loved ones our heartfelt sympathy, thanking God for his precious promise to comfort and sustain them. May they realize that "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform" and ever look to him who alone can bring them peace and comfort in this their darkest hour.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be given to the bereaved family, to the Winnsboro Reporter, and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

AMENDMENT TO THE CHARTER OF STANDARD COMPANY, INC.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Louisiana,
Parish of Orleans.

BE IT KNOWN, that on this Twenty-fifth day of June in the year 1918, before me, J. KENTON BAILEY, a Notary Public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned,

PERSONALLY CAME AND APPEARED, William B. Reily, Jr., herein appearing in his capacity as President of the "Standard Company, Incorporated," and William B. Reily, herein appearing in his capacity as Secretary of said corporation, which said corporation was organized by an act before Wm. Andrew Collins, Notary Public, on February 23rd, 1918.

And said appearers declared that a special meeting of the stockholders of said corporation, at which all of the stockholders were present or represented by proxy, was held this day at the domicile of said corporation, by virtue of and pursuant to a unanimous waiver of notice, agreed to and signed by all of said stockholders in person or by proxy, and that at said special meeting of stockholders, by the unanimous vote of all of the stockholders of said corporation, all consenting and agreeing thereto, and by resolutions unanimously adopted, Article 1 and Article III of the charter of said corporation were altered, amended and changed so as to read as follows, to-wit:

ARTICLE 1.

"The name and title of this corporation shall be 'STANDARD TEA AND COFFEE COMPANY, INCORPORATED.' It shall have a period of duration of ninety-nine years, unless sooner dissolved. Its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, State of Louisiana. It shall have, possess and exercise all of the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by law upon corporations of this character. All citations and other legal process shall be served upon the President, or, in his absence, upon the Secretary."

ARTICLE III.

"The Capital Stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at the sum of FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS, divided into Five Thousand Shares of Ten Dollars each, which stock shall be paid for in cash before issued. Ten Thousand Dollars, represented by One Thousand Shares, shall be denominated 'COMMON STOCK,' and the balance of Forty Thousand Dollars, represented by Four Thousand Shares of said stock, shall be denominated 'PREFERRED STOCK.' Said Preferred Stock shall have a preference and priority over said Common Stock in the assets of this corporation and shall be entitled to a dividend of Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue upon the par value of the same. Said dividends shall be cumulative and shall be paid in preference to any dividend on the Common Stock. In the event of liquidation or disposition of the assets of this corporation, the holders of said Preferred Stock shall be paid the par value thereof, together with the dividends above provided, before any payment is made on the Common Stock.

The Common Stock shall own the remainder of the net earnings of this corporation after the payment of the dividends on the Preferred Stock as above provided, or as much thereof as may be distributed by the Board of Directors and not reserved for the surplus or undivided profits.

Each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote in all stockholders' meetings for each share of Common Stock standing on the books of this corporation in his name, to be cast in person or by proxy, and the majority of the votes cast shall control any election or issue in all stockholders' meetings, but no vote on any matter shall be allowed to any stockholder on account of any Preferred Stock standing in his name.

This corporation may begin business as soon as Five Thousand Dollars of its Capital Stock is subscribed and paid for in cash. The Capital Stock of this corporation may be increased to One Hundred Thousand Dollars in either Preferred Stock or Common Stock, or partly in both, as shall be deemed best at a stockholders' meeting. The One Thousand Shares of the Capital Stock at present outstanding shall be classed and denominated as "Common Stock" and shall be so marked upon the face of the certificates by the Secretary of this corporation upon presentation for that purpose by the several holders of said stock. The remaining Four Thousand Shares of Preferred Stock shall be sold and issued, from time to time, at not less than par and for cash, as the Board of Directors of this corporation may authorize and direct. And this corporation, through its Board of Directors, shall have the right to call in and cancel any outstanding shares of Preferred Stock, in blocks of One Thousand Dollars at a time, upon the payment of the par value thereof, provided dividend amounting to Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue to the date of cancellation is or has been also paid on said stock."

All as will appear from a certified copy of the resolutions of the meeting of said stockholders, hereto annexed and made a part of this act.

THUS DONE AND PASSED in my office in the City of New Orleans, State, of Louisiana, on the day, month and year hereinabove written, in the presence of William Andrew Collins and Daniel W. Mouney, competent witnesses, who have hereunto signed their names as such, with said appearers and me, Notary, after the due reading of the whole.

Ugh! Calomel Makes You Deathly Sick

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it doesn't straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.

THE EFFECT OF LOVE UPON WORK.

When we are filled with love it is easy to work for God; it is easy to reach the fallen and the lost, if we can only convince them that love is the motive power; it breaks down every barrier. What we need is to be baptized with the love of God. If we are filled with love, there is no danger of backbiting, or of one person starting a false report of another; if we can only be filled with the love of God, we are going to be a power all through life.—D. L. Moody.

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Twelve teachers of the Mt. Pleasant and Asbury Sunday schools ordered "Life in the Making." At Asbury, Brother Owen secured nine subscribers for the Home Department Quarterly and the promise of as many family altars. The Tremont school has a class taught by Mrs. W. D. Taylor that will study "Heroes of Faith in Japan" this quarter.

Mrs. Connie Leech, superintendent of the primary department, and Mrs. Ethleen Riggan, superintendent of the junior department of the Smithville school, ordered "Life in the Making." Two such teachers are a blessing to any community.

Brother Driskell, pastor of Greenwood Springs Circuit, helped me to secure five subscribers to the Home Department Quarterly; this means five families studying God's Word daily and five family altars to back him in the great work of giving a religious education. Two teachers ordered "Life in the Making."

At Friendship, Mrs. Owen's class promised to give the monthly missionary program, Miss Ruby Simmons promised to organize the cradle roll, three subscribed for the Home Department Quarterly and promised to erect family altars, and two teachers ordered "Life in the Making."

At New Hope, the Cradle Roll department was put into the hands of Miss Cherry Dalrymple, five families ordered the Home Department Quarterly, the monthly missionary program was put in, and two teachers ordered the teacher-training books.

Brother T. F. Durrett. superintendent of the school at Quincy, left his store Saturday morning and invited his customers present to go with him to the Sunday school institute to be held at his church a mile from the store; say what you will, such men are rare. Miss Maggie Lou Cockrum was put in charge of the cradle roll, five family altars were promised. Of course they ordered the Home Department Quarterly, and three teachers ordered "Life in the Making."

At Pleasant Grove, Greenwood Springs Circuit, Miss Lizzie West took charge of the cradle roll department, Mrs. Springfield ordered "Life in the Making." Mrs. Thornley is superintendent of this school and is trying hard to do something for the children of this community.

Brother Driskell has learned the difference between merely telling people to establish family altars and in giving them the material that will teach them how to do this most important part of our Sunday school work. Five men ordered the Home Department Quarterly and promised to erect altars to re-enforce the Soule's Chapel school. This was a good day's work.

The superintendent at Asbury ordered "The Superintendent and His Work," and so did Brother Lem Crenshaw, of Greenwood Springs, Brother J. C. Easter, of Friendship, Brother Hillingsworth, of New Hope, and Brother T. F. Durrett, of Quincy. During the ten days spent in the Tremont and Greenwood Springs Circuits I traveled sixty miles in a buggy and one hundred and fifteen in a car. Brother Owen and Driskell are doing a great work.

The Strong Withstand the Heat of Summer Better Than the Weak

Old people who are feeble and younger people who are weak, will be strengthened and enabled to go through the depressing heat of summer by taking GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC. It purifies and enriches the blood and builds up the whole system. You can soon feel its Strengthening, Invigorating Effect. 60c.

TO RESIST THE ATTACK

of the germs of many diseases such as Grip, Malaria means for all of us—fight or die. These germs are everywhere in the air we breathe. The odds are in favor of the germs, if the liver is inactive and the blood impure.

What is needed most is an increase in the germ-fighting strength. To do this successfully you need to put on healthy flesh, rouse the liver to vigorous action, so it will throw off these germs, and purify the blood so that there will be no "weak spots," or soil for germ-growth.

We claim for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery that it does all this in a way peculiar to itself.

It cures troubles caused by torpid liver or impure blood.

HAMPTON, GA.—"I have used Doctor Pierce's medicines in my home for over 40 years, and can say to those suffering with torpid liver, it will pay you to use Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. You will find it all he claims it to be."—THOMAS C. JONES.

WOODFORD, TENN.—"This is to certify that I have used Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for my two little boys. One had night sweats, poor appetite, sallow complexion, and had quit growing, but after giving him part of a bottle of the 'Discovery' he again started to grow. He doesn't have the night sweats and looks much better. My other little boy had scrofula and this medicine cured him after the doctor's medicine had failed. I do not hesitate to recommend the 'Discovery' at all times."—MRS. ROSA LEE HOGAN, Route 1.

RESOLUTIONS AGAINST DANCING.

The Methodist preachers of New Orleans passed the following resolutions at a meeting held in the dining room of the Monteleone Hotel on Monday, July 15:

Inasmuch as the congregation of the First Methodist Church of New Orleans did, on Sunday evening, July 5, by a rising vote, enter its opposition to the modern dance, holding that it is unwise to teach dancing in the public schools, to encourage dancing with soldiers and sailors, or to countenance dancing in any manner as a social custom among men and women, be it

Resolved, That the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting, assembled in the Monteleone Hotel on July 15, 1918, puts itself on record as heartily endorsing the stand taken by the First Methodist Church congregation, assuring it that its stand is in keeping with the sentiment of every Methodist congregation in New Orleans and throughout Christendom.

Resolved, further, That we feel that at this time, when our sons are facing the grim horrors of death on the battlefield, all classes, without regard to the right and wrong of the modern dance, should remember that we do err grievously when we make the needs of the soldier, or the Red Cross, or any other humanitarian claim the occasion of a frolic. We roundly condemn the giving of a dance at any time and more especially as a benefit for war activity; and we condemn the running of gambling devices or the conducting of any public affair that takes on the nature of a frolic in the name of war service while we are engaged in the serious life and death matters brought on because of the war. We indeed count it a profanation of the highest conception of patriotism to manifest our sympathies at this time by giving ourselves over to such diversions as are only calculated to serve us in the gratification of physical and mental demands for pleasure.

CENTENARY CONFERENCE IN ST. LOUIS.

Letters and telegrams received at the Central Office in Nashville, Tenn., indicate that the meeting of the presiding elders, ministers, lay and district lay leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to be held July 30-August 1, in Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, South, St. Louis, Mo., will be the largest conference of its kind ever held west of the Mississippi River. Every session will be in the interest of the Centenary of Missions Movement.

Plans are now being fomulated to bring fifty of the leading laymen of each Methodist church in St. Louis to the night sessions to take part in the inspirational program which will be of the highest order. Each pastor will be furnished with cards of admission for his laymen ten days before the conference begins.

Bishop W. B. Murrah, of Tennessee, who has charge of the three Missouri Conferences and the Denver Conference, has issued a call to every presiding elder in his area to be present. The Bishop has been assigned an important place on the program. The presiding elders and lay leaders of the Kentucky and Louisville Conferences have also been invited to be present.

On Sunday, July 28, at the 11 o'clock service, every pastor of Southern Methodist churches in St. Louis will present the prayer and intercession program and an effort will be made to enroll every member in the fellowship of intercessory prayer.

A prominent district lay leader has telegraphed that he will bring every pastor in his district to the St. Louis meeting.

At the opening session Tuesday night, July 30, an address on "The Centenary, a Providential Movement" will be delivered and an illustrated stereopticon lecture will be given by either Rev. S. Earl Taylor, or Rev. R. A. Ward, both of St. Louis.

Headquarters will be established in the Warrick Hotel, St. Louis.

REPORT FROM PONTOTOC CHARGE.

Dear Mr. Editor: Pontotoc Station last fall bought a splendid property for parsonage, one block south of the church on Main Street. During the winter we put improvements on the house by double flooring both the upper and lower stories, and repapering and revarnishing. We then put in new mantels and repainted without, including metal roofing. We spent about $900 in improvements on the building. We moved in the first of March, and now occupy one of the best, if not the best, and most comfortable parsonages in the district.

Our meeting is to begin here the fourth Sunday in this month, with Rev. A. C. Holder, of Shreveport, La., to do the preaching, and Rev. J. A. Duke, of Jackson, Miss., to conduct the singing. We hope for a good meeting, but we have lost so heavily this year by removals, and the going of the boys to war and others hunting high priced jobs, that it is serious.

W. M. YOUNG, P. C.

TESTIMONIAL PRESENTED TO CHAPLAIN VAUGHAN.

Rev. A. Floyd Vaughan.

Greetings: In following the winding stream of life, many a spring and rivulet adds to the rushing current of human experience. The Methodist preachers of New Orleans are cognizant to a man of the fact that into each heart of us there has come the fine fraternity and fellowship of a man whom we delight to call a friend and brother. You are that man. We speak not of fraternal ties such as are knotted before the altar of a chartered lodge; not of a fraternity that springs from a common birth-state; not even of a fraternity that comes from kindred blood and a common parentage; but we speak of the highest, holiest and happiest fraternity on earth—the brotherhood of Methodist preachers. You are our fellow-laborer in Christ and in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

You are going away to serve our nation in the common cause of human liberty. You have laid your life upon our nation's altar for the love of God, of your country and your fellow-men. We love you for the sacrifice you have made; language fails us as we endeavor to offer you a parting word of comfort, love and cheer. We hold you in the sacred inclosure of our hearts. Our every hour of meditation we will share with you for the blessings of Almighty God upon you and your family.

We commend you to that body of soldiers over which you are given spiritual oversight, to your fellow-man in whatever walk of life you may meet him, and to the God of all consolation, even our Heavenly Father, by whose Son, Jesus Christ, we have a hope of salvation from our sins and a hope of the resurrection of the body after death, and to the Holy Ghost our Comforter. "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you."

Signed by all the pastors of the M. E. Church, South, in New Orleans.

ABE'S LITTLE SISTER IS LOYAL.

Bishop Walter R. Lambuth, chairman of the War Work Committee of our Church, reports the following episode having taken place on a train speeding southward from New York.

"A young Russian Jew, not long in this country, having volunteered for service with our army, had been ordered to report at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.," said the Bishop. "He left behind a sister, whose 12-year-old daughter works in a department store, assisting in the support of her mother. Upon the uncle's departure, the niece gave him the following letter:

"Dear Uncle Abe: As sure as there is a God in heaven, mother and I will be praying for you. So be brave, hold up your head, and fight for victory and for your adopted country.

"FRIEDA."

"This serves as an example of the spirit of those Russian refugees who have adopted the United States as their land."

"GIVE AN ACCOUNT OF THY STEWARDSHIP."

The second item in the plans of the Centenary Commission is a campaign in behalf of stewardship. It is most fitting that we stop now and balance our books to see where we stand in our accounts with God. We are very apt in these times of patriotic response to forget that we must "render unto God the things that are God's," lest we prove unworthy of the trust he has placed in us.

The Christian people of America are holding the wealth upon which God is depending to finance his business. Southern Methodists share alike with other denominations the responsibility of owning and directing this wealth, for God has smiled upon us of the South and the debit side of our ledger is full to overflowing. As faithful stewards, we will see that our credit page shows a like number of entries and that our books will strike a balance.

It has not been left to our discretion to name the amount of our indebtedness to God. The standard has not been lowered since he said to Israel, "The tenth shall be holy unto the Lord," and if we fail to measure up to this obligation we, no less than Israel, are robbing our Master. A tenth of our income, time and talent is the very least that God demands of us, and not until we have paid this debt in full are we in a position to make a free-will offering in expression of our love and gratitude.

Bishop Atkins says: "The greatest need of the hour is a money conscience. Many seem to have lost the sense of their relation to God in the making and using of money. Jesus taught with the utmost emphasis that we hold our gifts and possessions, even life itself, as mere stewards of his; and yet in all the wide fields of demand we are not approximating even the Jewish law of the tithe."

If we, 2,200,000 Southern Methodists, would be fair and square in our accounts with God, we could, in one year, more than fulfil our Centenary program, and then in just indignation we could elect us a new Committee of One Hundred, which would have the courage to ask of us something really big.

MARGARET LEACH.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK IN THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Mrs. Harrell: The young people's work goes steadily forward. So many are doing splendid war work, but are not forgetting the wondrous work assigned them by the Prince of Peace.

The new Y. P. M. S. reporting this quarter for the first time are Brookhaven (First Church), Broad Street (Hattiesburg), Flora, Magee, and Bay Springs. Miss Fannie Butterfield, the splendid young president of the Brookhaven auxiliary, has resigned to go as a Red Cross nurse. This auxiliary is satisfied with nothing but the best, so all their departments are doing efficient work. They are specially fortunate in having Mrs. Henry as leader in the study circle.

Miss Georgia Jordan writes from Broad Street that Mrs. Gillman is a splendid "Big Sister" and all the girls are delighted with their work. Their budget is to be $100 this year. Most of the members are working girls. They realize that to hold their jobs they cannot be slothful, and so apply the same zeal to their Lord's work.

Flora, under the guidance of Mrs. Bradley, will be a banner society some day. They are new but "coming." Magee Y. P. M. S. is also very new, but judging from the way they do other things we can and will expect great things of them. They have a young man as president and each member wears a Y. P. pin. We notice many of the auxiliaries are getting these lovely pins and are glad, for this "secret fraternity" pin of theirs has a very binding and sacred meaning to them.

Bay Springs is our newest. Miss Lois Hunt organized this auxiliary last week and writes that the young people are greatly interested, and that there is splendid material for a banner society there. Miss Lois Hunt, Montrose, Miss., has consented to go to any church in the district to organize the young people. Of course, the church needing her will gladly pay her expenses. We wish we could get such a consecrated, influential woman in each district to help us, the young people, the Church and the Master.

We notice the young people of the Newton District are awaking to their opportunities—"the great church of to-morrow is the one that trains the young people of to-day."

Forest and Waynesboro, the banner of Y. P. M. S. of 1917, are still gaining greater strength, deepening and broadening their work. Petal, our "Beacon Lights," will shine brighter now, for our student volunteer, Miss Hearst, is at home from school and is always shining for Him.

Capitol Street auxiliary (Jackson) lost one of its most faithful officers when Miss Holliday became Mrs. Owens. They will miss her, but we are sure camp life will be much brighter for her presence. Miss Porter writes that Port Gibson District is taking on more life in the young people's department. When we meet in historic Natchez next year for Conference our young people's district hostesses will be numerous and enthusiastic.

Canton's auxiliary is so faithful. Mrs. Harvey writes that the girls are busy and happy in their work. They are in line for special distinction this year. Mrs. Miner, as counselor for the Lumberton auxiliary, is one of the most faithful workers we have known. Her young people will rise up and call her blessed some day.

The Epworth League Conference lately convened in Wiggins, so 'tis no wonder that Wiggins' Y. P. M. S. was greatly refreshed and has taken on renewed vigor. No auxiliary did better work than did this little band of workers in 1917. From their last letter we judge they will do still better this year.

Mrs. Kennedy writes encouragingly of the splendid work accomplished by the East End (Meridian) young people. The Newton auxiliary is wide awake and is looking for a crowd of delegates to be with them soon in a meeting.

The young people of Galloway Memorial (Jackson), although untiring in their Red Cross work, have not retrenched in their Church work. Mrs. Heald and Miss Elise Moore write such encouraging letters.

Our local auxiliary has been enjoying vesper hours. As the girls have watched the stars and talked of the orbits arranged by the Creator they seemed greatly impressed with the fact that it is when we strive to make our own orbit and refuse the one our Creator made for us that friction and unhappiness come.

Mrs. Harrell, President Wilson's peace message was flashed to the ends of the earth in less than three hours, we were told. Our Prince of Peace grieves over the delay of his message. May we each one have him say when we stand face to face, "You did what you could to transmit my message to those who knew it not."

Yours in His service for victory,
Mrs. H. O. MIDDLETON.

Tired Nervous Mothers

Buffalo, N. Y.—"I am the mother of four children, and for nearly three years I suffered from a female trouble with pains in my back and side, and a general weakness. I had professional attendance most of that time but did not seem to get well. As a last resort I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which I had seen advertised in the newspapers, and in two weeks noticed a marked improvement. I continued its use and am now free from pain and able to do all my housework."—Mrs. B. B. Zielinska, 202 Weiss Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Portland, Ind.—"I had a displacement and suffered so badly from it at times I could not be on my feet at all. I was all run down and so weak I could not do my housework, was nervous and could not lie down at night. I took treatments from a physician but they did not help me. My Aunt recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I tried it and now I am strong and well again and do my own work and I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound the credit."—Mrs. Josephine Kimble, 935 West Race Street, Portland, Ind.

PREACHING THE LAYMEN.

I was assisting Rev. W. E. Akin in a special meeting at Kentwood, and we had a feature in that meeting that is worth while. On Saturday morning it occurred to me that it would be good for the meeting to have a few of my laymen from Amite come to Kentwood for the Sunday night meeting. I wrote four letters to different men and asked one to take the matter up with the rest and let me know. In the next mail the answer came, "We are coming." And they came; and two of them gave splendid talks on "Why men should look after the work of the Church." The emphasis was great and the effect most helpful. The men sang some beautiful male quartets, and in all it was a fine service. Most of our churches have such talent; may God lead us out into this necessary field of lay preaching. ALONZO EARLY.

TRY THIS FOR YOUR HEALTH.

For diseases which do not readily yield to drug treatment, such as chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism uric acid poisoning, and diseases of the kidneys, bladder, and liver, the best physicians send their wealthy patients to the famous mineral springs. Some even spent months at the Spas of Europe and were almost invariably benefited, or permanently relieved.

I believe that the Shivar Spring is the greatest mineral spring ever discovered, and I believe it so firmly that I offer to send you enough water for a three weeks' treatment (two five-gallon demijohns) on my guarantee that if it fails to benefit your case I will refund the price. You would hardly believe me if I told you that only about two out of a hundred, on the average, say that they have received no benefit. The water is restoring thousands. It restored my health when my friends and physicians thought my case was incurabe, and I am willing and anxious for you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If I win, you become a life-friend of the Spring. If I lose, I will be sorry for you, but I will appreciate your courtesy in giving the water a trial and will gladly refund your money on request. Sign the following letter:

NOTE.—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as an honorable business man and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman.

Catarrh is a Real Enemy and Requires Vigorous Treatment

Do Not Neglect It.

When you use medicated sprays, atomizers and douches for your Catarrh, you may succeed in unstopping the choked-up air passages for the time being, but this annoying condition returns, and you have to do the same thing over and over again.

Catarrh has never yet been cured by these local applications. Have you ever experienced any real benefit from such treatment?

Throw these makeshift remedies to the winds, and get on the right treatment. Go to your drug store to-day, get a bottle of S. S. S., and commence a treatment that has been praised by sufferers for nearly half a century.

S. S. S. gets right at the source of Catarrh, and forces from the blood the germs which cause the disease. You can obtain special medical advice regarding your own case without charge by writing to Medical Director, 22 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga.

Nuxated Iron To Help Make Healthier Women and Stronger Sturdier Men

Say These City Physicians—By Enriching the Blood and Creating Thousands of New Red Blood Cells It Increases the Strength and Endurance of Delicate, Nervous, Run-Down Folks in Two Weeks' Time in Many Instances.

SINCE the discovery of organic iron, Nuxated Iron or "Fer Nuxate," as the French call it, has taken the country by storm, it is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually are taking it in this country alone. Most astonishing results are reported from its use by both physicians and laymen.

Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York Physician and Medical Author, when interviewed on this subject, said: "There can be no sturdy iron men without iron. Pallor means anaemia. Anaemia means iron deficiency. The skin of anaemic men and women is pale; the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone; the brain fags and the memory fails and often they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. When the iron goes from the blood of women, the roses go from their cheeks.

"Therefore you should supply the iron deficiency in your food by using some form of organic iron, just as you would use salt when your food has not enough salt."

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly Physician of Bellevue Hospital (Out-Door-Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital says: "In my talks to physicians I have strongly emphasized the great necessity of their making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on suffering year after year, doctoring themselves for all kinds of ills, when the real and true cause underlying their condition is simply a lack of sufficient iron in the red blood corpuscles to enable nature to transform the food they eat into brawn, muscle tissue and brain. But beware of the old forms of metallic iron which frequently do more harm than good.

"Notwithstanding all that has been said and written on this subject by physicians formerly connected with well known hospitals thousands of people still insist in dosing themselves with metallic iron simply, I suppose, because it costs a few cents less. I strongly advise readers in all cases, to get a physician's prescription for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—or if you don't want to go to this trouble then purchase only Nuxated Iron in its original packages and see that this particular name (Nuxated Iron) appears on the package."

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the while have most astonishingly increased their strength and endurance simply by taking iron in the proper form.

Manufacturer's Note: Nuxated Iron, which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians, is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists and general stores.

GREENWOOD (LA.) CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: On July 14 we closed our revival services at Greenwood. Brother R. A. Bozeman did the greater part of the preaching, and Brother E. B. Moli did some preaching, led the singing and conducted the children's services. The preaching was well done. Among the various sins and blatant evils rebuked, Brother Bozeman performed an "operation" on that "error" of the cult kingdom, Eddyism, even reading a few words of Mrs. Eddy's. He gave a warning, which was timely and properly received by about 95 per cent of the people. Mrs. Eddy's "error of the carnal mind" has crept in and destroyed the faith of a few people here.

Well, the revival continued and the recording angel alone may be adequate to the task of telling the good accomplished. The Holy Ghost descended in power. The spiritual life of the greater part of the Church was deepened, thirty or more said they were either converted or reclaimed, fifteen members were received on profession of faith, three by letter, with five others to come in, and one excellent young woman fully settled the matter and dedicated her life to Jesus for public Christian service. She is planning to enter Scarritt Bible and Training School. She is a Normal graduate. For these blessings we praise the Lord. This is the first revival held in the new brick church.

Twenty-four members have been added to the Church in Greenwood this year and three in Keatchie. We opened our church in Greenwood on Mother's Day, the Sunday school rendering a brief program; the pastor preached a sermon in keeping with the day, baptized a baby, received four members; a service flag with eleven stars was presented by Mrs. Lipscomb in behalf of the Woman's Missionary Society, the pastor received it, Miss Elizabeth Taylor sang an appropriate solo, the pastor took what was pronounced to be a good collection, and all adjourned to the basement and ate dinner, which was of an extra quality. Early after dinner the congregation reassembled in the auditorium, and, as the corner-stone had never been laid, the pastor delivered an address—paying a special tribute to Brother J. C. Rousseaux, who labored so faithfully here—and placed the corner-stone, putting behind it the Holy Bible, a Discipline, copies of the New Orleans and Nashville Christian Advocates, a copy of the Shreveport District Outlook, and a list of former and present members. Then the pastor went out and preached to the prisoners and returned and preached in Greenwood at night.

Our revival begins at Summer Grove on July 21, and we hope to hold revivals at Keatchie and Flournoy this summer.

During the year twenty-three prisoners have professed conversion.

We hope to close out a successful year along all lines. I crave an interest in the prayers of those who read this article. Yours fraternally,

T. D. LIPSCOMB.

A NOTE FROM REV. R. T. NOLEN.

Dear Brother Carley: I wish to say that I am going back to Mississippi. I am sorry that I ever left. I have often wished that I was back in the pastorate. I will leave Indianapolis, Ind., the first day of August for Carriere, Miss., where we will make our home until December 4.

If there is any pastor in the Mississippi Conference or Louisiana Conference east of the Mississippi River that could use me in assisting in revival meetings, I would be glad to serve them, beginning the second Sunday in August.

I would also say, if there should be any vacancy where the presiding elder could use me, I am ready to go and serve until Dec. 4, 1918. I can give good reference.

A GREAT UNION REVIVAL AT VAIDEN, MISS.

All the churches of the town were interested and took part in the meeting. The meeting began June 30, and closed July 14. We held our revival in the public school building, with a seating capacity of 600, and then we were crowded. The results of the meeting were very gratifying, indeed. The people of the town claim this to be the greatest meeting held in Vaiden for many years.

Rev. C. F. Wimberly, D.D., evangelist of Louisville, Ky., did the preaching; he is a great preacher. The singer, Rev. S. H. Preathey, of Henderson, Ky., led the singing for the choir of about 80 voices, and the singing was simply fine. The Lord was with us in great power, and sinners were converted at an altar of prayer.

Plenty of people believe in a "common salvation," meaning thereby a vague, indiscriminate gift that is flung broadcast over the mass. Plenty of people believe in a "common faith." We hear, for instance, of a "national Christianity," and a "national recognition of religion," and "Christian nations," and the like. There are no Christian nations except nations of which the individuals are Christians, and there is no "common faith" except the faith exercised in common by all the units that make up a community.—A. Maclaren.

Editorial

"Yet I have learned in every perilous place
That somewhere still, unseen, His watchers wait;
That each dark path leads to the Father's face,
The smile of welcome and the open gate."

A world fit to live in is conditioned upon a life fit to be lived in the world.

In every great life, there is one master-passion; Christ is the master-passion of the Christian.

Difficulties are nothing more than challenges to our faith and energy; to falter in the face of them, is to acknowledge oneself lacking in both.

We sometimes complain that everything is dark and gloomy around us—the prospect altogether drear. We can always see God if we look up; the upward look is fair, no matter what the outward may be.

* * *

The fact of a great building implies an adequate foundation beneath it, though the foundation is out of sight. It is not otherwise with a great life—it rests upon the fundamental principles of righteousness.

Business men invest their time and money with the expectation of a definite return. Business principles hold in the kingdom of God and every investment there will pay dividends sooner or later. Let us not become weary in well-doing.

Common sense and hard work will overcome practically every difficulty that confronts us. Hard work alone will accomplish wonders. Indolence and impractical thinking are responsible for a great many of the evils that are in the world.

Many a man who apparently is not given to serious thinking is in reality deeply concerned about the great issues of life. He is really better than he seems. The discerning minister will find many opportunities to help and be helped in such cases.

* * *

A great problem is to discover one's place in life; this problem can never be solved until one has discovered himself and God. Too many of us leave out of account God's plan for our lives, and doing so, we miss our place.

IT HAS STOOD THE TEST.

In view of the conditions brought about by the world war this question has been going the rounds: "Is Christianity adequate to the needs of the world?" In some quarters, the question has been asked in all sincerity; in others, it has been asked merely to furnish a starting point for a criticism of the whole system of Christian philosophy. We do not object to the question. It is perfectly legitimate always to put to the test the truth of any statement or the claims of any institution. That which is true never suffers under the most rigid scrutiny.

We venture to affirm with the utmost confidence that Christianity, in the most trying hour the nations have ever been called upon to pass through, has triumphantly stood every test to which it has been subjected, and that it remains to-day the one source to which men may confidently turn for comfort and peace and strength and hope and joy in the midst of a war-torn and sin-oppressed world.

Christianity has stood the test of an intellectual unrest that has been going on since the war began, an unrest that has shown itself in a questioning and criticism of every principle of action that men have been called upon to follow. Philosophers and statesmen and warriors, as well as the rank and file of humanity, have examined anew the motives that lie back of human action and the aspirations that lead men to noble endeavor. Things new and old have had to submit to the most searching and thorough inquiry in this tragic period that has tried men's souls. And that which could not stand the crucible test of the yearning soul has been cast aside. But Christianity has not been cast aside. The great leaders of men in thought and in action have found it satisfying in their own conceptions of life, and have united in commending it to their fellow-men as adequate to their needs. President Wilson, who has aptly been called "the prime minister of the world," has emphasized again and again the value of the Christian motive in times like these; Premier Lloyd-George and Ex-Premier Asquith took the lead in having the English House of Commons designate August 4 as a day for assembling in Westminster in a Christian service. These men have not found Christianity lacking.

Christianity has stood the test of the demands that have been made upon it in its institutional forms for service in this time of need. If it had stood idly by as the world cried out in its need, or if it had lacked the vitality to respond to those cries as they came to it, justly men might have turned away from it in disappointment. But, "the world's need is the Church's opportunity," and the Church is showing unmistakably its willingness and its ability to meet the tremendous demands that are being made upon it. It has been quick to formulate efficient plans for war work; thousands of its ministers and laymen have volunteered for service and millions of dollars directly and indirectly have been given ungrudgingly in response to its call. One of the brightest chapters in the history of Christianity will record its magnificent response to the call made upon it in the great world war.

But supremely has Christianity stood the test in the way it has met the need of individuals as they have faced death and have suffered it in camp and on the battlefield. In the hour of death men are not comforted by a sham and they do not put their trust in unrealities. The testimony that has come from the blood-baptized fields of Europe settles forever any doubt there might have been as to the adequacy of the Christian religion to meet the needs of men who are being ushered into eternity. It is more than a figment of the imagination that a white-robed One has stood by the side of the dying soldier and breathed peace into his soul even in the agony of the mutilated body; it is the vivid expression of the validity of the statement, "Lo, I am with you alway." The Divine Presence has been spiritually discerned by those who could have no motive in testifying to a falsehood. The travail of their soul has been satisfied, and joyfully they have acclaimed a present Christ.

The one great thing this war has done for the world, no matter what else it may accomplish, is to establish forever that fact that Christianity is adequate to all the needs of all men for all time. It has stood the test.

THE WAR WORK EMERGENCY FUND.

Our War Work Commission, under the leadership of Bishop Lambuth, is calling for a voluntary offering from the Church amounting to at least $300,000, for the immediate and urgent needs of its work. The call has been sent to every congregation, and already responses are being made. We earnestly hope that every pastor in our territory will give his people at once an opportunity to contribute to this great cause. We believe the opportunity is all that is needed—our people will gladly supply the necessary funds.

We cannot overestimate the value of the chaplain in creating and maintaining the morale among our soldiers that will enable them to fight victoriously, and their usefulness in promoting and conserving religious influences in the army is beyond all computing. Our Church is furnishing its quota of chaplains and it is our duty to see that they are provided with everything that is necessary to make their ministry most effective. The War Work Commission does not propose to give our chaplains their personal equipment, though we believe they would make no mistake in doing so, but they do intend that they shall have everything they need and can use for their work. A portable typewriter, a portable communion set, song books, Bibles and Testaments, stationery, and a supply of good literature are indispensable. We must see to it that our chaplains are fully equipped.

Another important activity that our War Commission is interested in, is that of the camp pastor. in some respects this is more important than anything else that is being done for the soldier in the camps. Thousands of boys have gone from Methodist homes and religious influences into these camps, where they need the oversight and encouragement of preachers of their own Church. We have done a good deal in this direction, but not nearly enough. We need to make it possible for the field to be effectively covered in the camps, and we can do this only by furnishing the money to support men and provide the proper equipment for their work. The mothers of these boys are deeply concerned for their religious welfare. Our great Church must not disappoint them by failing to meet this call. Send an offering for this cause as soon as possible.

LET ME WALK WITH THE MEN IN THE ROAD.

'Tis only a half truth the poet has sung
Of the "house by the side of the way;"
Our Master had neither a house nor a home,
But he walked with the crowd day by day.
And I think, when I read of the poet's desire,
That a house by the road would be good;
But service is found in its tenderest form
When we walk with the crowd in the road.

So I say, let me walk with the men in the road,
Let me seek out the burdens that crush,
Let me speak a kind word of good cheer to the weak
Who are falling behind in the rush.
There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks we must mend,
There's a cup of cold water to give;
And the man in the road by the side of his friend
Is the man who has learned to live.

Then tell me no more of the house by the road;
There is only one place I can live.
It's there with the men who are tolling along,
Who are needing the cheer I can give.
It is pleasant to live in the house by the way
And be a friend, as the poet has said:
But the Master is bidding us, "Bear ye their load,
For your rest waiteth yonder ahead."

I could not remain in the house by the road
And watch as the toilers go on,
Their faces beclouded with pain and with sin,
So burdened, their strength nearly gone.
I'll go to their side, I'll speak in good cheer,
I'll help them to carry their load;
And I'll smile at the man in the house by the way,
As I walk with the crowd in the road.

Out there in the road that goes by the house,
Where the poet is singing his song,
I'll walk and I'll work midst the heat of the day,
And I'll help falling brothers along—
Too busy to live in the house by the way,
Too happy for such an abode.
And my heart sings its praise to the Master of all,
Who is helping me serve in the road.

—Walter J. Gresham, in Western Christian Advocate.

THE ONLY SOURCE OF COMFORT.

These bright June days bring thoughts not always cheerful or hopeful. We read the daily papers, and begin to see now and then names we know. Seven thousand soldiers have "gone west;" not to speak of the wounded and prisoners. A keen pain comes as we fear not to scan the lists. Day by day the time draws near when we know we shall see in the casualties names of our own flesh and blood—next year or the year after. We cannot all escape this anguish. The thing is, how shall we bear it? How shall we stand the wearing expectation, which is so heavy a drain on our nerves? And how, in the end, shall we hear the brief statement from the War Department, that sounds so cold, yet is not heartless? There are in our own Conference at least a hundred mothers who look toward such a happening; young wives who feel it would be easier to bear if their lives had been made one; and perhaps some who have less claim than wives or mothers suffer no less keenly the dread of the blow. It is folly to say we must not anticipate it. We have given our sons; we know they are necessary to victory, and we value our Government and stand by it, the women, as loyally as the men who go, and the fathers who also feel the loss.

But mere patriotism, a very high sentiment and quality, does not suffice some of us. We nced something more than a wish to keep a good government, and a belief that ours is the best possible one. We want, if we must lose them, and if we must suffer from conditions of the time, a personal support and help, such as no patriotism can give except to those who feel that sentiment deeply.

For one thing, patriotism is a very high and holy principle. Nearly twenty-five centuries ago a band of exiles sat down by a river in a far country and wept at the mere mention of their home city! And when their conquerors, knowing that some of them were good musicians, ordered them to sing, they refused, at all hazards, to profane sacred memories by singing their home songs in an alien country. And strange indeed is it to read in the Bible the fierce invective against an enemy whose cruelty sounds so modern—"Happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us—happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones!" Zion was no special city until it was allotted to the Jews and made the place of the Temple. But an intense love for it and the hills around made the Jews and Israelites patriots of the noblest type. Their example, as well as their failure and punisment, are set before us to study; and by their errors our countrymen may profit, too.

Still there is more we crave as comfort and help. It is real sorrow, meant to be sorrow, and with these "casualties" heaping up, no relief comes from friendly sympathy—all the nation is in the same tense state of mind.

How wonderful it is that there is One who holds help, comfort, relief for every heart! Not just my sorrow is He able to heal, but that of all the world, millions of hearts just as heavy-laden as mine! It does not seem possible; but He is an omnipotent God! Not one but millions are in His hand; but there is no confusion, He knows each, and provides for each, not merely food, clothing, a dwelling place, but balm for pain and grief! He hears all the different sorts of cries that go to Him; and not one is unanswered, unheeded. It seems so dreadful to have all these lads, in their earliest manhood, cut off before they actually know what life is! "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever." Isn't that more than the seventy years could mean? No more thought of the young life cut off, but a sure promise that it shall go on, fuller and fuller, with no termination. One doesn't dwell too much on their courage and bravery, nor on their share in the victory which we confidently expect. That is the earthly side, and we being yet of the earth take pleasure in their proving themselves men. But it still does not satisfy; nothing here does, beside, we never expected our boy to do aught else.

But how will it do for the mother or the wife to lift her thoughts beyond her fear, and say to herself: "It may be, but while this is my side, his part will then be far above! He will be forever out of the sight of sin. He will be with God. I mean to make that my thought." She will bear the blow when, or if, it comes; but she can look beyond all it means. Her earthly eyes may not see into those heavenly courts; but as she tries to find out what the Book says of them, so as to know what his eternal life is, it will be no blank horror, but a very real joy that comes with each hint of the place where her beloved soldier is. His life shall go on and on; it will not end with the bullet or gas. And not few are the words of Scripture that give a clue, as to what he shall be doing through the years that lapse till we meet him again. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life."—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

THE MINISTRY TO-DAY.

By Rev. Hoyt M. Dobbs, D.D.

At the recent session of the General Conference, in an address which profoundly impressed all, Major Gordon stated that, after two years of service on the western front, in his judgment one of the most important agencies in winning the war, and in the work of rebuilding the world, is and will be the Christian ministry. He gave as his reason the fact that "the Christian ministry holds the heart of the nation in its hands." Religion is emerging as one of the central realities of life. War conditions are proving favorable to the preaching of the Gospel. Ours is no longer an age of doubt, if it ever was. The world has entered upon a new era in its history and everywhere men seem agreed that Christianity is to have a larger application to the whole life of the world than it has had heretofore.

In view of the changed world-conditions in both thought and life, what shall be said regarding the Christian ministry and its part in rebuilding the world to-morrow? In what spirit and by what method will the Church do its largest work? These questions are uppermost in the minds of thoughtful men to-day, and upon our answer to them will depend, in large measure, the success of the vital interests committed to our care. No discerning man underestimates the significance of these days in the world's history.

The Church, naturally, has felt the stress of the time as has every other institution, educational, social, and economic. This was to be expected. It is in keeping with the history of apostolic Christianity and its purposes from the beginning. It is now generally admitted that the forces of human progress include both spiritual and material factors. There came at first the great temptation to yield to doubt and despair. Old and established methods and customs disappeared. The suggestion was made by hostile forces that Christianity itself had failed. But even this was but for a brief period. We had made conquest of our own faith and religion, as every age must do, and the expression of this experience is beginning to be seen in the form and in the content of that which men live by to-day. This is, therefore, the hour of a great opportunity for the Church and for all its institutional activities, and fortunately this fact is recognized.

A careful study of the forces which brought about the world war reveals the fact that it has all come out of conflicting views about life and the world. Heretofore we have heard it said by some that the principles of Christianity were impracticable if not chimerical, and that, however successful the application of these principles to the life of the individuals might be, they were not and could not be expected to be applicable in the realm of international relationships. But the correct interpretation of history shows clearly the existence of a moral order, and that history is ethical and spiritual in its movement and in its significance. It has taken the nations of the earth a long time to come to that point of view, but an enlightened public opinion among the civilized peoples of the world seems now focalized upon the opinion so admirably stated recently by President Woodrow Wilson, that it is a perilous thing to determine the policy of a nation in the terms of material interest. Nationality is a sacred thing because it is the instrument of labor for the good and progress of all mankind. The non-Christian view of life and of the world which must be held responsible for the world-tragedy emphasizes the fact that it furnishes no sort of foundation for international relationships, present or future.

The proportions of the present struggle make it necessary for us to form a true estimate of the task before the Churches of Christ. The cost of all the wars of the past 125 years is estimated at twenty-two billion dollars. The cost of the present war to June 1, is estimated to be one hundred and fifty-five billion dollars, and England alone has spent one-half of her national wealth. But during the past year the United States has authorized the expenditure of twenty-one billion dollars in the cause of human freedom. Twenty-four countries are involved, and four-fifths of the world's total population are directly related to the struggle. The present population of the world aggregates one billion, six hundred and ninety-one million. Of this number, one billion, three hundred and eighty-eight million are at war. Eight million, three hundred thousand have been slain. Seven million have been taken prisoners. More than three million are in the hospitals. Two million and five hundred thousand are disabied for life. To replace in weaith alone all that has been destroyed would require a tax of five hundred million dollars a year upon the population of the whole world for one hundred years.

The significance of these figures indicates that, upon a merely quantitative estimate, the non-Christian view of the worid is inadequate to meet the needs of mankind, either individually or coiiectively. No more will it be said that it matters not what a man believes. What a man beiieves ultimately issues in thought and conduct, and makes ali the difference in the world.

The "super-man" of Nietzsche has hereafter no claim upon any man. "Enlightened self-interest" as a practicable basis for international life is no longer seriously considered hy the representative peopies of the earth. On the other hand, the principies of Christianity have heen found adequate to the needs of every zone of humanity. An abuse once removed never reappears in history and there is not a wrong iifting its head anywhere in the world to-day against which there is not some man or group of men protesting. We fight on the way up and not down. The true insight of genius is to be abie to discern the movements of divine government in the world. That declaration of principies which will stand the ultimate test is the one which stands closest to the future. Thus far in our history, Christian principles have heen always closest to the only possible future of mankind. The representatives of these principles have made practicai the ideals of the age. They have moralized methods, and emphasized spiritual values. For the first time this is now being done in full view of the whole world, with the conviction that the world itself is the subject of redemption. For Christianity and the Churches this constitutes an unprecedented opportunity.

In the other ages the golden rule was preached to individuals and the principles of Machiavelli to nations. But we have at last reached the stage in the development of the race when national morality must conform to the same standards which have been set for the moral and religious life of the individual. The nation which wishes to be broadly influential will be very slow to insult any nation or group of nations. The internationai mind must have a religious education.

The motive necessary to the accomplishment of such a task is the Christian motive. Jesus Christ is the upbuilding, regenerating, vitalizing dynamic of human society, and He functions through His followers. The struggle now is to know what world-view is to have supremacy. The various substitutes for Christianity are now appraised at their proper value. Spiritual values must have a larger place and influence than they have ever had before, and the structural life of the world must be so rebuilt as to house these spiritual values. Every religious organization and institution will be expected to answer the question—what kind of men does it produce? The Christian character is human nature organized around the central figure of Jesus Christ, and in the union of vital piety and sound learning wiii be found men who can be trusted to their own hurt, and upon such men great enterprises can be safely built. Education is at its best oniy when it is directed toward the creation of character. The standards of scholarship must not and will not be lowered in a clearer understanding of the moral ends of education.

Knowledge is not virtue. "Knowledge will not keep people from sin," said a prominent physician the other day as he observed a number of spectators around the operating table. It is safe to say that two-thirds of the bulk and body of the world's knowledge has been acquired during the past century, and yet during this enlightened period the greatest and most cruel war of all history has been evolved. Culture, with all of its many refining influences, is at the present time quite universally acknowledged to be inadequate and is largely held to be in disrepute.

The "economic man" of whom we once heard so much has almost disappeared even from the more recent treatises on political science, and the nation among the nations which had put into effect the iargest number of "reform measures" has been unahle to escape the scourge of war.

An open mind and a devout spirit compei us today to look more carefully for the springs of action in mankind. Denunciation, ridicule, sarcasm, buffoonery—none of these will suffice. The heart of the world is heavy, and many of our thoughts lie too deep for tears, and we refuse to yield to pessimism and despair. For such a time as this the Christian ministry is commissioned to deliver its great message to humanity. The methods by which Christianity will continue to impress itself upon the people will be in keeping with the social conscience. Before the sociai order can he Christianized two things must be done—(1) the units composing the social order must he Christianized, and (2) there must be a larger application of Christian principies to every department of life. The combined enginery of both Church and State will he necessary to create outward conditions in which spiritual values may have some chance for survival. We shall have the courage to comhine the mystic's hunger for God and the moralist's passion for men and interpret redemption in both individual and social terms. Men must he saved—men must be saved to serve.

The control of public opinion is going to be a new and mighty agency. Conquest by force has seldom if ever been either permanent or satisfactory. The very soul of all true democracy is the spirit of Christ. The only force equai to the task of holding men's passions in leash is a deeper and more powerful one than can be imposed upon them from without. The judgment values of Christianity enable us to place a new estimate upon the souis of men. The attitude of the Master to the so-called "threatening classes" was not one of distrust and aloofness. He taught that it is the duty of society to strive to do something for those submerged areas of humanity rather than to segregate them and exploit them. The response with which His teachings have been met suggests that in the intricate and compiex reiationships of world-life to-morrow, His attitude must more and more become our own. The solidarity of the race is rapidiy coming to be so complete that it may have the power to wreck the world if it is not governed by the principies of the morai order. Other men have labored and we have entered into their labors. The world can not be saved half-rotten and half-sound. We are hound up together for weai or for woe, and will rise or fall together.

Our age has a passion for reaiity. A young officer said to me the other day, "My experience in the trenches has taught me that religion is reality."

This is not the first generation whose faith has been tried as by fire. War, in its attack on faith, has thus far been rather the usuai order than the exceptional one. The longest period of peace of which the worid has any record is ahout three years. Other good men and true have met these issues squareiy as we must meet them to-day.

Our attitude toward the past should be one of respect and gratitude rather than one of arrogance and detachment. "They without us can not be more perfect"—and we without them couid not have come to this great hour. The largest opportunity, possihiy, which thus far has heen presented to the Church, is now before it. It is cause for gratification that there are so many indications of willingness and power. A gentleman who writes his cheque in seven figures said the other day that it would cost him more than half of all he had, but calmly added that it was gladly given. Religion is being reduced to its lowest and simplest terms and its simplicity corresponds to its power. The demands of the race upon the Gospei wiii he met, and met by men of apostolic character, trained minds, and forward-iooking vision. The days ahead of us will continue to be weighted with large tasks. "The curfew is going to ring later in these coming nights and the days of ieisure will be few." Through the Gethsemane of renunciation men come to self-realization, which is always for service.

The ministry now has perhaps its largest task since the days of the Apostolic age. To such a task, under present world-conditions, with a Gospel which is adequate, and to humanity hungry for God, we are called to-day. An exhortation to preparation is unnecessary. These facts make their own appeal. Christianity's history is the basis for our belief that its future has boundless possihilities.

Dallas, Texas.

"NOT ONE OF US WILL HESITATE."

By Bishop Walter R. Lambuth.

The war is on. We must win or face disaster. The morale of our boys in this struggle means everything. General Persning has said it in no uncertain terms. That morale depends in large measure upon the ministry of the chaplains overseas and the camp pastor at home. We need $300,000 to meet the expense of our war activities. A large part of that amount is for the equipment of chaplains and other workers. The Commission has asked this of the Church as a War Emergency Fund.

Will the Church respond? Give our people a trial and see the result. I have received many letters, and feel profoundly thankful for the spirit of our preachers. We will, without doubt, get the men for the chaplaincy and the money from the Church, for their equipment. Our Methodist parsonages foster the spirit of patriotism. Hundreds of our boys have gone out from them. Now our preachers are ready to give themselves. A leading pastor on the Pacific Coast writes:

"I surely cannot believe you will deny me the priviiege of service. * * * As you well know I have never heen choice in my piace of work. Now, I have no son to represent me at the front. My family is grown, and I am not needed in the home land. Let others take my place who cannot undergo the hardships of my contemplated work."

Thank God, the spirit of heroism in Methodism is not dead. It hurns like a fire in the bones. It is fed upon the conviction that this is a righteous war. It is one which exalts principle, empnasizes clean, strong living, ennohies womanhood and compels us to take sides, for every great issue is at last a moral issue. Concerning our place in this conflict there can he no question.

Another brother writing from Texas says:

"The matter of the cali for chaplains has been discussed with a number of the eligible men in this Conference. Ail agree that they prefer that the Church will signify her wishes. We are all anxious to take our appointments from the Church." Here is loyalty to the Church as well as devotion to one's country. They go hand in hand. How can we have a great Church without a great constitutional government back of it? And how can there be a great country without a Church with sacrificiai altars that worship God in spirit and in truth? Our brother concludes his letter in these words: "Not one of us, I assure you, wiii hesitate when called on for this service by our Church."

A Clarion Call.

The men are offering. What about the money? The responses are coming in. An alert and active presiding elder in Kentucky sends a letter to his preachers. He reminds them of the religious weilheing of our soldier boys and says:

"I do not feel that any more worthy or worthwhile call has heen made upon us than this, or one that wiii meet with a more ready response. I, also, feei that the amount that is asked of our district is most reasonabie. I am certain that you and your people will accept your apportionment gladiy. Let us show our readiness to assist in this worthy work by a prompt and generous response. Yours, for the saivation and spiritual weifare of our soldier boys."

The Check To-Morrow.

The cause will not wait. The war is on. Our hoys are at the front. Our chapiains are going overseas rapidly. They need equipment. Here is the sort of reponse from Newton, N. C., if we wouid win out, and we are going to win.

"My dear Bishop: I received your letter Saturday afternoon. I was giad to hear from you. I read your letter to my congregation yesterday morning. We secured the amount you suggested, $60, and wiii send the check to-morrow."

EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE AT LAKE JUNALUSKA.

By Rev. R. H. Harper.

Lookout Mountain, the French Broad River and Asheville had partly prepared one from the lowlands to appreciate the beauty which is Junaluska. There an immense dam was built to halt the swift waters of a mountain stream long enough to form a large and beautiful lake ere they were allowed to plunge and sparkle over the spillway and resume the rocky bed below. Thus, only a few years since, the strong old mountains round about looked down into the deep waters of a lake and saw themselves for the first time—saw the beauty which is luring our people more and more to that place of rest and recreation, of balmy days and cool nights, of magnificent scenery and profitable meetings of interest to the whole Church.

The lake is now encircled by fine walks and driveways and numerous cottages as well as lodges and inns, where entertainment may be had at reasonable rates. Modern convenience is there combined with the charm of rural life and the finest scenery of the Blue Ridge. Go to Lake Junaluska, if you can.

Of all the buildings encircling the lake, the finest was the Junaluska Inn, which crowned a hill perhaps seventy-five or an hundred feet above the water. Statements varied as to its value; the minimum was that it cost, with its furnishings, $120,000. Like Mount Zion, it was beautiful for situation, and within, elegance and taste were combined to make Junaluska Inn a very attractive place. How sad that such costly fuel should have fed the lurid flame! Most of those who attended the Conference arrived Tuesday afternoon, and nearly all of them went to the Inn. At two o'clock the next morning the writer was sleeping a dreamless sleep in a delightful room overlooking the lake when the wild cry of "Fire! Fire! Fire!" was heard in the corridor. It was said that the fire started from the boiler room near the kitchen. Unfortunately, the fire protection proved inadequate, and although there was no breeze, and the flames proceeded slowly, they completed their ruinous task too well. During the greater part of two hours, the whole lake, with the buildings surrounding it, was brilliantly illuminated, making a tragically beautiful scene. As the papers have reported, no one was injured, and there was no loss of life. Most of the guests—about fifty in number—saved their belongings, and much of the furniture in the lobby and sun parlor was saved. The guests were remarkably calm, and no wild excitement prevailed.

The building was insured for $60,000, not enough to cover half the value. Those interested in Junaluska will be glad to know that the beautiful hostelry will be replaced by a fireproof building, and those who plan a visit to Junaluska will be assured to know that there are now a number of other places where entertainment may be had.

There were twenty-one college presidents and members of faculties who were present at the conference, eighteen or more secretaries and representatives of conference boards, Dr. Stonewall Anderson and Assistant Secretary Hogan, also Dr. R. H. Bennett, Rev. J. W. Shackford, and others.

With only a few exceptions, the program, as published in advance, was closely followed throughout. The general topics of discussion were: "The World War and Christian Institutions of Learning," "Religious Education in Our Church Schools," "Recommendations to the Commission on Education," "Religious Education at State Institutions," and "The Educational Forward Movement."

Dr. W. P. Few, President of Trinity College, led the discussion of the sub-topic, "What Changes in Curriculum are Made Necessary by the War?" He maintained that no radical changes are necessary, but that special emphasis should be placed upon certain subjects. Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College, led the discussion of "The War and College Attendance." It was found that the war has greatly reduced college attendance. The necessity for larger efforts to bring our youth into our institutions was clearly shown, but it was claimed by several, and their opinion is worth consideration, that canvassing for students, sometimes to the point of unfair competition with others, can only be a temporary expedient, which can never build up our schools as they should be built up, and that we need instead a church-wide effort, systematically conducted, to awaken among our people a larger interest in education. It seemed to be the opinion of all the school men present that care should be exercised to avoid trespassing upon the territory of other of our schools in canvassing for students.

The Junior College quite innocently caused a lengthy and animated discussion. Some maintained that the Junior College is really a menace to the four-year college, while the defenders of the Junior College were equally stout in contending that the Junior College has a useful place in our educational field, and that it provides an opportunity of training to many who would never go to the larger colleges.

Rev. George S. Wyatt, of the Northwest Texas Conference, advanced an interesting idea when he claimed that the conference secretary of education can never do the full work that he should do until he is given a salary, and directed to devote his whole time to the work.

The findings of the Conference were largely embodied in the resolutions, which were read by the chairman of the committee on same, Dr. Watkins, and adopted by the Conference. They are as follows:

"Military Instruction.

"Your Committee is of the opinion that all colleges for men should heartily co-operate with the United States Government in its plans for providing for military instruction in our institutions of learning of college grade.

"Religious Instruction.

"We contemplate with much cordial sympathy the advocacy of an adequate course of religious education in our institutions, believing that such a course is needed in consideration of the threefold advantage of a knowledge of the history of the Hebrew people and the fundamental principles of our holy faith; the moulding of the religious life of the students, and the preparation of the students in the various forms of Christian service.

"Relation of Junior and "A" Grade Colleges.

"Upon the delicate question of the relation of the Junior College to the standard "A" Grade College, it is the sense of your Committee that such requirements as to the equipment of the institutions, and of instruction, should be imposed upon the Junior Colleges, as will render the work done by these institutions approved by the higher institutions, and that unless that is shown by some method of official inspection to have been accomplished, the duty and the right of the higher institutions to insist upon entrance examinations should not be questioned.

"Religious Instruction in Public Schools.

"Your Committee is very much impressed with the possibilities for good contained in the plans for the co-operation of pastors and college men with the public school authorities for the religious instruction of the pupils of these schools, and we recommend to our pastors and school men that the fullest advantage be taken of the opportunities given for entering into this important field of usefulness.

"Pastoral Co-operation in Behalf of Colleges.

"In view of the conditions which call for unusual efforts upon the part of our institutions of learning to meet the demand for trained leadership, we most earnestly appeal to our preachers and people to co-operate in the fullest degree with our school men in their efforts to fill our institutions with pupils, to secure the needed equipment of the institutions, and to secure in full the Annual Conference assessments for Education.

"Three-Year College Course.

"Your Committee would also call your attention to the question of shortening the college course to three years, a change that might be accomplished by the lengthening of the annual session, or by the adoption of a session of four quarters, including the so-called summer school.

"Educational Centenary Movement.

"We earnestly recommend that this Conference, through our connectional department of Education, sound out our heartiest endorsement of the action of our recent General Conference in emphasizing the necessity for a forward movement in education, and especially the Centenary Campaign, for the strengthening of our Church educational institutions; and we desire to pledge to our educational leaders our most enthusiastic co-operation in this great campaign."

On the last day of the Conference the Educational Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was organized with the following officers: C. M. Bishop, President; H. N. Snyder, First Vice-President; W. T. Wynn, Second Vice-President; W. E. Hogan, Secretary and Treasurer. The Committee which had been previously appointed read a tentative draft of a constitution which, after one change, was adopted. It makes the provision for membership sufficiently broad to include all representatives who have a vital interest in the educational affairs of our Church. General meetings of the Association will be held every two years, and will take the place of such a Conference as this one recently held.

The addresses at the night meetings were delivered by Dr. W. Asbury Christian, President of Blackstone College; Professor Plato Durham, of Emory University, and Dr. Robert L. Kelly, Executive Secretary of the Council of Church Boards of Education. Dr. Christian and Prof. Durham were called upon to speak in the absence of Bishops Cannon and Candler, and their addresses were of a high order. Dr. Kelly's name appeared on the program, and he delivered a very fine address on "The War and the Christian College."

IN FAVOR OF THE CHANGE.

By Rev. Jas. V. Bennett.

"Some Doings of the General Conference," by Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, was read and appreciated by the masses of our people. His statements with reference to the Apostles' Creed were timely, when thought of in connection with present conditions and needs in the rural church. So far as the pastor and church in the city are concerned, the question is seldom being raised whether the Creed reads, "Holy Catholic Church," or "Christ's Holy Church." But this is not true with the rural church and pastor. In the city and large town only occasionally members from other denominations worship with our congregations; all go to their own church. And when they visit our church those questions are not raised; if they are, the people are, as a rule, a reading people and understand the meaning of words, phrases, etc. In the country church it is quite different; the pastor preaches to members of other denominations at every service. The large majority of the people are not a reading people, and they do not know. Ninety per cent of these are what they are because their parents were; their interpretation of Scripture, doctrine, etc., is in the light of what they are taught from the pulpit, and I know some preachers in Mississippi that take a delight in prejudicing the minds of their members against the Methodist Church with this very thing. (Most of them don't know any better.) As a result, there is continued criticism, gossip and confusion. Our people report to the preachers and then he has to explain that what is meant by the phrase, "Holy Catholic Church," is, "Universal," "Church of God," "pertaining to all Christians," etc. If you say, "Christ's Holy Church," they perhaps could not tell you what is meant by the phrase, but they are satisfied. But, if you say, "Holy Catholic Church," they immediately connect the term with the papal see at Rome. That same person could not tell you one thing in the world about the doctrines, polity, practices, history, etc., of the Church of Rome; all they know is what "some one" said, and that "some one" heard another "some one" say what the author of "Thirty Years In Hell," or the editor of The Menace, said.

Says one: "Explain it to them." I answer: No man in the world can explain to them, so that the question will not again be asked. You say it is because the people are prejudiced? That may be true, but it doesn't yet rid the pastor of the problem, or the faithful church attendant of the embarrassment. I was reared a Roman Catholic—an altar-boy—and I unhesitatingly say that my intimate association with the priests, and knowledge of the motives of the leaders in the Church, etc., prejudice me against the word.

When a pastor, I was called time and again to get some one out of the brush on that "Holy Catholic Church" phrase. Four different times I was called to visit persons, one time a family of five, who would not unite with our Church on account of the phrase, "Holy Catholic Church." This very thing is a thorn in the flesh of the majority of the circuit preachers. If it is left to the circuit riders and the membership of our Church, the Creed will be changed. Instead of "Holy Catholic Church," it will be "Christ's Holy Church." Why not? We say that is the meaning of the phrase, "Holy Catholic Church." All right, then; let's have the meat and not the bone—bones are all right to gnaw but not to eat. "Christ's Holy Church" will not have to be explained. "Holy Catholic Church" has to be explained every time you use it, in the majority of our congregations. Let's get rid of it. Why put a hardship on any pastor?

Brookhaven, Miss.

AN APPEAL TO THE PASTORS OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

There is a movement on foot, encouraged by the National Government, to plant a large acreage in wheat this fall, so as to supply our home demands with flour and release wheat produced elsewhere to feed our Allies and our troops in the field. In addition to this being a wise economic question, it would be a practical contribution toward winning the war.

The only serious problem in the way of the plan is to get the farmers and land-owners throughout the State to co-operate and agree to plant a certain per cent of their cultivable lands in wheat. If this can be secured, assurance has been given of sufficient available capital to build flour mills at central points so as to take care of the raw material and convert it into a high grade of flour.

Wheat growing in the State has long since passed the experimental stage. It can be grown in excellent quality and in paying quantities, averaging from twenty to thirty bushels an acre. As is the case with other crops, early preparation of the soil is necessary that the best results may be secured. It will soon be time for fall planting—during September—and plans should be worked out at once for a large crop next spring.

Every planter, with comparatively little trouble and extra labor necessary to harvest the present crop, can raise enough wheat for family use and have a surplus at two dollars and fifteen cents a bushel to put on the market to help supply his neighbors. Wheat is the one food product needed to-day. Will not Mississippi farmers convert some of their cotton land immediately into wheat fields, thereby decreasing the demand for labor in next year's crop?

The pastors and church leaders can do much toward encouraging and stimulating action in this matter of fall wheat planting. Our armies must be fed and our people will have to have bread or suffer, and the problem of getting it is going to grow increasingly more difficult as the war goes on. As one with you, contributing in every way possible to winning this war with the minimum of suffering to our people, let me urge upon you to get busy and help to insure a bumper wheat crop this fall and next spring.

This is certainly a moral and religious question, since it is the paramount need of the hour. We need not go hungry during the period of this war unless we fail here. When we pray, "Give us this day our daily bread," we pray that we may help others to theirs who will have to go hungry unless we do our best to feed them. Why should we not preach this practical gospel of common sense to meet human need from our pulpits? Surely we are not indifferent to the bodies of men because we are so interested in saving their souls. Will you not co-operate in urging upon every farmer the supreme necessity of planting a large acreage in wheat this fall? Yours for humanity,

CHARLES W. CRISLER.

IN MEMORY OF MY MOTHER.

At the Methodist parsonage, Foxworth, Miss., on March 26, 1918, the spirit of our dear mother, Mrs. E. A. Barr, wife of Rev. R. H. Barr, was tenderly borne by the angels to her home eternal. Four children had come to bless this home, two of whom were waiting at the Beautiful Gate to welcome mother.

Since early childhood I remember my mother as one of the most unselfish, patient, and deeply pious persons I have ever known. She walked daily with God. One of my earliest impressions is that of my mother in secret prayer, with her arms about her four small children, asking divine aid to enable her to train them aright. Her trust in God was wonderful, and her love for His Word was beautiful indeed.

Some weeks before the end came, realizing her condition, she talked almost constantly of the Home she was soon to inherit, and many were the times we heard her pray to God with the most childlike trust, as if she were face to face with her Maker. Oh, how the influence and memory of those beautiful prayers linger with us!

Often as she quoted passages of Scripture, and spoke of her heavenly vision, we felt that we could get a glimpse of Heaven from the beautiful expression on her dear face.

Just a few days before she left us, she made this remark: "I shall soon pass into Eternity, and I want to say that all I have suffered, endured and sacrificed for His sake, is as nothing when compared with the blessed assurance of His presence and comfort in this hour of death."

For more than twenty years she had gone hand in hand with her husband in the work of the ministry, never too weary to meet the duties and share the burdens that so peculiarly fill the life of a minister. While we leaned close to the dear face to catch the last words we heard this blessed message, "I'm so near Heaven I feel the presence of the angels. I'm so happy! So happy!"

Everything was done for her comfort by kind physicians, friends, and relatives, but her work was finished. God was calling.

Two sisters, one brother, two daughters, and her husband are left. We shall miss the dear face, and especially the earnest prayers in our behalf, but Heaven seems nearer, and we shall meet her again. There is a fresh-laid sod in a quiet spot in one of the gardens of the dead. "Finished," and "Just begun," is her life.

The sun was sinking behind the western hills when we laid her to rest in Foxworth cemetery, with Brother W. M. Sullivan officiating, but to her, in her heavenly home, the day was just breaking in all its glorious splendor.

If every person who has been helped by this Christian woman could place a rose on her grave, the little mound would become more like a mountain.

Farewell, dear mother; may God help us to carry on the good work which you have laid down, and at last meet you at the throne of God.

HER DAUGHTER.

LET THEM GO TO WORK.

Dear Brother Carley: I was born in a Methodist home. All the influence thrown around me while growing up into manhood was Methodist influence. I have now been a Methodist preacher for twenty-nine years. I fully believe that 95 per cent or more of all the Methodist preachers I have ever known were high-toned Christian gentlemen.

There seems to be some unrest among some of our preachers, who seem never to be satisfied. They criticise the Bishops and presiding elders. I have noticed it all comes from a class of men who want their way about all things—men who have enjoyed the best the Church has for them.

I have been in the pastorate twenty-four years. I have never heard a country pastor criticise a Bishop. I heard one preacher, after having filled many of the best stations in my Conference, say the Bishop was a fool because h did not appoint him to a place he wanted. Another preacher, after having served as a presiding elder for no less than a dozen years, said the Bishop who took him out had no religion. Another preacher who had served the best appointments of his Conference for years told me he did not believe in the presiding eldership—if he had his way about it, he would do away with it entirely. But when he got to be a presiding elder, he said the Church could not get along without it. It never did look right to me for a preacher to condemn the presiding elder, and at the same time try his best to be one. I have heard a few preachers say some very hard things about Bishops, and at the same time they would have given anything they had to be a Bishop.

If those men who are never satisfied with the Bishop and the presiding elder will quit and join some Church where they will not be afflicted with them, I am sure the rest of us who try our level best to be loyal and support the institutions of our Church will have peace. A busy preacher has but little time to raise a racket; the greatest fuss comes from those who have nothing to do but run about over the country hunting up fine watering places.

I know preachers who have been in the pastorate for fifty years, during which time they have never taken one day's vacation. I have never heard one word of complaint from them—they seemed perfectly happy in their work. If I were a physician and could have the privilege of prescribing for those restless fellows, it would be work in unbroken doses. If the first round did not cure, I would double the dose.

One of the worst troubles with the Methodist Church is that it has too many people doing nothing else but making fuss.

The devil does not always go about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. When any given form of sin becomes stale or loses its erstwhile attractiveness, the inventive ingenuity usually fashions other forms of allurement well calculated to captivate the unwary. To wear the garb of saintliness and borrow the phraseology of the meek and lowly while the heart is steeped in sin is quite common. Religious impostors, with rare exceptions, have ever worn sheep's clothing. By their fruits shall ye know them.—Western Christian Advocate.

WAR CONDITIONS
— REFLECTED IN —
TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

Notes and Comment

"We Had To, Therefore We Did."

The announcement has just been made that a world's record has been established at the Mare Island (Cal.) navy yard in the commissioning of the Ward, a destroyer, 71 days after her keel was laid. Formerly it required 24 months to construct a destroyer in this country. There has been a great deal of talk about efficiency—here is a demonstration of it. Doubtiess a good deal of "red tape" has been destroyed in the process and a good many pottering officlals have been shocked because things were not done "in the good old way." But "red tape" and "the good old way" have no place when the world is calling for action. We are going to learn after awhlle that the best way to do a thing, is to do it.

A Business Proposition.

The Natlonal Coal Association, an organizatlon of coal-operators, has recently issued a statement in which these words occur: "The drlnking evil has become so rampant in the mining communities that its complete elimination is fundamentally necessary in the effort to speed up the mines sufficiently to get the 100,000,000 additional tons of coal this country wiii require this year." The economic argument in favor of war-time prohibition is unanswerabie. So is the moral argument, but some who wiii not iisten to the one, wiii listen to the other. Both together ought to give us not only war-time prohibition, but ali-time prohibition.

The War Situation.

Every day the news from the great battle being waged in Europe is encouraging. Steadily the Allies have forced back the troops of the enemy. Many briiliant and heroic deeds have been reported. The courage and intrepidity of the American soidiers have won the admiration of the world. Not a flaw has been detected in the strategy of General Foch. Coolly he has watched the struggle and seized every opportunity as it presented itself to strike the enemy. The German commanders have thrown reserve forces into the fight, but they have not been able to stop the progress of the Allies. The German retreat has not been a rout, but thousands of prisoners and much military equipment have been taken. This battle may be the turning-point of the war. A new chapter is being written in the history of the world.

It is Costing Something.

A recent detailed analysis of government receipts and expenditures since the United States entered the war shows a financial budget unsurpassed in the history of the world. If the Government expends by June 30, 1919, all the money Congress has voted up to date, the war will have cost the United States $35,000,000,000, including loans of $10,000,000,000 to our allies. It is estimated that four years of war have cost Great Britain up to date, $34,000,000,000, France $24,000,000,000, and Germany $30,000,000,000. War is an expensive piece of business. All our resources are pledged to the winning of this great struggle and we are not going to begrudge a penny of the cost. But we are going to have to be willing to make sacrifices and endure hardness before the end comes. The Ways and Means Committee have estimated that it will be necessary to raise $8,000,000,000 by taxation, and they are experiencing the utmost difficulty in devising a schedule which will provide the required amount without jeopardizing the nation's business. It is thought that from five to six billions can be raised by a taxation of incomes and profits. The most likely means of securing the balance is a tax on luxuries. The money will be raised somehow. In the meantime, we hope the Government will find some effective way of dealing with the conscienceless profiteers who are preying upon private individuals and the Government alike.

The Sugar Situation Is Serious.

The Food Administration has announced that it will be necessary for the American people to observe even more stringent regulations in the use of sugar than have heretofore been imposed if we are to maintain the supply necessary for our Allies and the welfare of our military forces in Europe. The following explanation of the new requirements is given: "The sugar supplies throughout the country, in homes, stores, factories and bakeries are at a low ebb; the production from the American beet and Louisiana cane crops has been disappointing; the yield in Porto Rico has likewise been smaller than anticipated; and the inability of the United States and the Allies to secure sugar from Java and other distant sources on account of the imperative call for ships for the movement of troops and their supplies has reduced materially the supply from such quarters. Added to this already difficult situation, the quantity needed for the army and navy greatly exceeds earlier estimates, and we must send a large amount to France and Italy to take the place of the great volume lost through the German and Austrian invasions, during which much beet land was overrun and many factories destroyed; we have to supply certain quantities to neutral nations under agreements; and finally, fifty million pounds were lost recently through submarine sinkings off our Atlantic coast." The request now is, that we go on a sugar ration of two pounds per capita monthly, beginning August 1. Household rationing will be voluntary at present, but public eating houses will be required to limit their use to two pounds for every ninety meals served, instead of three pounds under existing regulations. Nobody but a slacker will try to evade these requests of the Food Administration.

They Believe in Prayer.

The following resolution, moved by Premier Lloyd-George and seconded by Ex-Premier Asquith, was uanimously passed by the House of Commons on July 17: "That this House attend St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Sunday, the fourth of August, it being the fourh anniversary of the declaration of war, to invoke the Divine blessing on our just cause." This action is not surprising to those who know the essentially religious nature of the English people, but it is a heartening official recognition of one of the greatest forces in the universe for establishing righteousness. "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the name of the Lord our God." We certainly are not to underestimate the necessity of complete preparation in all the material equipment for war, but we must never forget the prevalling power of prayer. Scores of communities throughout the United States are setting apart a definite time each day during which the people are urged to turn to God in prayer; by day and by night, thousands of men and women are pouring out their hearts in intercession for the Divine blessing upon our just cause. When the record of the war is made up, and the forces that enabled us to win the victory are tabulated, the fervent prayers of the righteous must be given first place.

Mob Spirit Must Be Checked.

The frequent outbreaks of the mob spirit throughout the country have brought the blush of shame to the cheeks of every right-thinking American citizen. Pulpit and press generally have united in denunciation of the exhibition of lawlessness that has brought reproach to so many communities, but lawless men are not to be restrained by advice and warning injunctions. Their passions and prejudices are their masters, and the welfare of the community at large is a very small influence in controlling their actions. The situation has become so serious that President Wilson has felt himself forced to express in most emphatic terms his indignation. In the opinion of the President, the prevalence of the mob spirit not only threatens to destroy democracy at home, but is also a serious menace to the usefulness of the United States in its fight for democracy abroad. We commend unreservedly the stand our great President has taken. The time has come for us to do something more than talk and pass resolutions; public sentiment must be so aroused that those who engage in mob lawlessness will be made to feel the weight of the law which they hold in contempt. Read these ringing words of the President:

"We proudly claim to be the champions of democracy. If we really are, in deed and in truth, let us see to it that we do not discredit our own. I say plainly that every American who takes part in the action of a mob or gives it any sort of countenance is no true son of this great democracy, but its betrayer, and does more to discredit her by that single disloyalty to her standards of law and of right than the words of her statesmen or the sacrifices of her heroic boys in the trenches can do to make suffering peoples believe her to be their savior. How shall we commend democracy to the acceptance of other peoples, if we disgrace our own by proving that it is, after all, no protection to the weak? Every mob contributes to German lies about the United States what her most gifted liars cannot improve upon by the way of calumny. They can at least say that such things cannot happen in Germany except in times of revolution, when law is swept away. I therefore very earnestly and solemnly beg that the governors of all the States, the law officers of every community, and, above all, the men and women of every community in the United States, all who revere America and wish to keep her name without stain and reproach, will co-operate, not passively merely, but actively and watchfully, to make an end of this disgraceful evil. It cannot live where the community does not countenance it.

"I have called upon the nation to put its great energy into this war and it has responded—responded with a spirit and a genius for action that has thrilled the world. I now call upon it, upon its men and women everywhere, to see to it that its laws or kept inviolate, its fame untarnished. Let us show our utter contempt for the things that have made this war hideous among the wars of history by showing how those who love liberty and right and justice and are willing to lay down their lives for them upon foreign fields stand ready also to illustrate to all mankind their loyalty to the things at home which they wish to see established everywhere as a blessing and protection to the peoples who have never known the privileges of liberty and self-government.

"I can never accept any man as the champion of liberty either for ourselves or for the world who does not reverence and obey the laws of our own beloved land, whose laws we ourselvs have made. He has adopted the standards of the enemies of his country, whom he affects to despise."

A HOUSE IS BUILDING.

And if, the time ye toiled and sorrowed most,
The voice of your lamenting seemed all lost,
And from that land no answer came again,
It was because of that your grief and pain
A house was buildinng, and your bitter sighs
Came thither as toil-helping melodies,
And in the mortar of the gem-built wall
Your tears were mingled, to the rise and fall
Of golden trowels, tinkling in the hands
Of builders gathered wide from all the lands.
O brothers, come, help, build!

MR. AND MRS. BULLFROG.

By H. T. C.

Once upon a time, old Mr. and Mrs. Bullfrog and their three children, Greenback and Brownback and Beauty, lived in a hole by the side of a lake. Out in front of the hole in the edge of the lake was a big log, and every evening Mr. and Mrs. Bullfrog and their three children would get on the log and sing. Old Mr. Bullfrog would sing, "Bully-deep, bully-deep, bully-deep." And Mrs. Bullfrog would sing, "Billy-deep, billy-deep, billy-deep." And the children would sing, "Knee-deep, knee-deep, knee-deep."

One evening when they were all on the log Greenback and Brownback got to tussling, and Greenback fell in and got wet. He crawled out and they got to tussling again, and Brownback fell in and got wet. He crawled out and then Beauty ran up and got to tussling with them, and he fell in and got wet. Then old Mr. Bullfrog said, "Well, you're all wet—I'll tell you what let's do: let's stand here in a row, and when I count three everybody dive in and take a swim."

And then he counted, "One—two—three"—kerchug! they all dived in except Mr. Bullfrog—he stayed on the log. And when they came up he said, "I fooled you that time—I didn't go in. I fooled you that time!" And old Mrs. Bullfrog said, "Yes, and just wait till I get out and you'll be sorry you fooled us."

That scared old Mr. Bullfrog, and he hid behind a knot on the log.

When Mrs. Bullfrog and the children got tired of swimming they started out. But when they got to the log, Mrs. Bullfrog, instead of crawling out on the front side, dived under and came up on the back.

Then old Mr. Bullfrog stuck his head out from behind the knot and said, "Children, where's your mother?" They said, "We don't know, sir; she was here a little while ago."

Then Mr. Bullfrog stepped out from behind the knot to see if he could find her. And just then she slipped up on the log behind him and gave him a shove, and into the water he went—kerchug! He came up, puffing and blowing, "Blub—blub—blub!" so angry he didn't know what to do. And Mrs. Bullfrog said, "Oh, yes, I fooled you that time! How do you like it?"

Mr. Bullfrog was so angry he wouldn't say a word, but climbed out on the log and went straight into his hole!

Then Mrs. Bullfrog said, "Very well, if you are going to act that way, I'll just see that you stay in there awhile." So she got a block of wood and put it over the hole.

After awhile Mr. Bullfrog decided he wanted to come out, but when he got to the mouth of the hole he found it stopped up. Then he called Mrs. Bullfrog.

"What do you want?" she asked.

"I want to get out of here," he said.

"Are you sorry you fooled me?" she asked.

"No, I'm not," he said.

"Very well, then," she said, "you may stay there awhile longer."

After awhile he called her again.

"What do you want now?" she asked.

"I want to get out of here," he said.

"Are you sorry you fooled me?" she asked.

"I don't know—I'll think about it," he said.

"Very well," she said, "think about it."

After awhile he called her again.

"What do you want?" she asked.

"I want to get out of here," he said.

"Are you sorry you fooled me?" she asked.

"Yes, indeed," he said.

"Are you ever going to try to fool me again?"

"No, indeed."

"Are you going to do everything I want you to do?"

"Yes, indeed."

"Very well, then," she said, and she let Mr. Bullfrog out. And you'd better believe he never did try to fool her any more.

THE BAD BASKET.

Little Ruth and Merriam were visiting at grandma's a few weeks ago and were having the loveliest kind of a time. One morning, however, they had a quarrel over nothing at all really, but it was three long hours before the quarrel was patched up. In the meantime both little girls had cried, and both of them had been very miserable. And although both of her little visitors had been rather naughty, grandma did not scold at all. When sunshine appeared again in the house and the tears were wiped away and they had kissed one another and decided to "forget all about it," Ruth said: "I guess you think we've behaved dreadfully this morning, grandma. Mother would think so if she were here."

But grandma only laughed. "I wasn't thinking that at all," she said. "I was remembering the quarrels my little sister and I used to have when we were about as old as you and Merriam, and what my mother used to do."

"Did you used to quarrel, too?" asked Merriam in surprise.

"Not very often, but as often as you and Ruth do and in very much the same way," smilingly said grandma.

"Well, what did your mother do?" questioned Ruth.

"As soon as we quarreled," answered grandma, "we had to go into the 'bad basket' and stay there till we made up."

"The bad basket?" exclaimed both little girls. "What was that?"

"The bad basket was an old clothes basket," said grandma, laughing. "At one end was a broomstick, and fastened on the broom was an old apron for a sail; and into that basket we had to stay till our 'boat' reached the 'Land of Good Little Children.' Then we would come back again. We couldn't take any toys with us. All our toys must stay outside the basket." Grandma smiled into the two pairs of dancing eyes fixed on hers. "And, of course, very soon we began to laugh. There we were, facing each other, with nothing to play with, trying to keep on being cross; but we could not. One or the other would soon laugh; and when you laugh, away goes the quarrel. Then out we would tumble and run to mother and say, 'Here we are back again;' and mother would pretend to be very much surprised, and she would say, 'So soon?' and then we'd all laugh and forget there ever had been any quarrel."

"That was lots of fun," said Ruth, while Merriam leaned against grandma lovingly.

"Say, grandma," urged Merriam, "you write to mother and ask her to have a 'bad basket' for us when we go home."

"Have one here," said grandma. "I can find an old basket and an old apron and a broom, I'm sure." The children were delighted. The basket was rigged up; but, do you know, grandma never sent them there during the whole visit, though they played in it time after time of their own accord.

When they started to quarrel, the very thought of the "bad basket" made them laugh; and they couldn't be bad long enough to be put into the basket.—Christian Observer.

WHEN TO CRY.

There are millions of little boys and girls in the world who want to do just the right thing and the very best thing. But they do not always know what just the right thing is, and sometimes they cannot tell the very best thing from the very worst thing.

Now, I have often thought that there are little boys and girls who cry, now and then, at the wrong time; and I have asked many of the older people, but none of them could tell me the best time to cry.

But the other day I met a man older and wiser than any of the rest. He was very old and very wise, and he told me:

"It is bad luck to cry on Monday.

"To cry on Tuesday makes red eyes.

"Crying on Wednesday is bad for children's heads and for the heads of older people.

"It is said that if a child begins to cry on Thursday, he will find it hard to stop.

"It is not best for children to cry on Friday. It makes them unhappy.

"Never cry on Saturday. It is too busy a day.

"Tears shed on Sunday are salt and bitter.

"Children should on no account cry at night. The nights are for sleep.

"They may cry whenever else they please, but not at any of these times, unless it is for something serious."

I wrote down the rules just as the old man gave them to me. Of course, they will be of no use to boys and girls who are past six, for those children do not cry. The wise old man meant them for the little ones—the millions of little boys and girls who want to do the right thing and the very best thing.—Mary Elizabeth Stone, in St. Nicholas.

THE TEACHER-TRAINING DRIVE.

The Teacher-training Committee of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations in the United States and Canada—the name is long enough—is planning to carry out a simultaneous drive over the whole continent during the months of September and October in the interest of teacher-training. According to the announcement of the Committee, the following are the objectives in the drive:

1. At least one teacher-training class in every Sunday school in North America, meeting at the Sunday school hour.

2. A monthly workers' conference in every Sunday school, meeting at least ten months out of every year.

3. A mid-week training class for present Sunday school teachers in every Sunday school where such a class is needed.

4. A co-operative community training school of religious education for every community where desired and practicable. This school shall have three functions: to do graduate and specialization work; to train leaders for classes in local churches; to provide central training class facilities for those churches unable to maintain their own classes.

5. A definite effort to be made toward helping every Sunday school of North America to a right selection and use of current literature and books on religious psychology, pedagogy, Sunday school organization and management.

We have thus fully outlined the plan of the Committee because of the importance of the work, and because our own Church is a member of the Council and is vitally interested in the success of the undertaking. Dr. John W. Shackford is chairman of the educational and extension section of the Council, and Dr. A. J. Lamar is chairman of the publication section.

No subject is of more importance to-day in the work of the Church than that of religious education. We are coming to realize that practically all of the problems of church organization and activity can be solved if we can provide a genuinely religious education for all our people. Our colleges and universities are beginning to make provision for courses that will meet the need so far as their own students are concerned. Religious leaders everywhere are laying emphasis upon this great work.

But a pitifully small number of our young people ever attend college or university. Most of them do not get any further than the grammar grades of the public schools, and religious instruction is certainly not stressed there. We are, therefore, thrown back on the Sunday school as the one institution to which we may look for anything like an adequate training for our children and young people in the most important of all the subjects they are called upon to study. We have emphasized the importance of the Sunday school in the past; to-day it is the most efficient agency the Church has for propagating, maintaining and extending the kingdom of God on earth.

It is as plain as anything can be that the efficiency of the Sunday school is in direct proportion to the efficiency of the teachers who carry on its work. The results that have already been accomplished by our Sunday schools are marvelous when we consider the limitations under which they have had to labor. The teachers, for the most part, have been faithful and earnest. But there has been lacking a trained efficiency in imparting religious instruction, and the teachers themselves are the readiest to admit it, which has prevented the greatest usefulness of this department of service.

Now we are to undertake to remedy this defect of poorly-trained teachers. Our Church has already made gratifying progress in bringing about a better state of affairs through our Teacher-Training Department, but much remains yet to be done. Our pastors and Sunday school superintendents and teachers and parents need to face the situation, as we believe they are doing, and unite in a constructive forward movement that will make our Sunday schools thoroughly competent to do the work which is more and more falling upon them. Let our Church be in the van in this teacher-training drive.

THE METHODIST REVIEW FOR JULY.

From cover to cover the July number of the Methodist Review is worth while. The frontispiece is a likeness of the new Editor, Rev. Frank M. Thomas, D.D., who, however, had not entered upon the discharge of his duties when this issue went to press. The table of contents is alluring in the variety and suggestiveness of its titles. We promise ourselves much pleasure and profit in reading the various articles. The retiring Editor, Dr. Du Bose, now Bishop Du Bose, speaks a feeling farewell to his readers, who have never been disappointed in his management of the Review, and who have wondered at the range and strength of his own contributions. Their interest and prayers will follow him in his new field of labor. His introduction of the new Editor leads us to expect great things of him, an expectation which his own previous achievements justify.

The usual number of book reviews concludes the number. We commend the Review to all our people.

SEND THE BOYS AND GIRLS TO COLLEGE.

Some parents do not seem to care what becomes of their children. They make little provision for them while they are small, and lay no definite plans for their future. They allow them merely to grow up, with the idea, apparently, that by some peculiar operation of the law of gravity they will fall into their places in life without any special effort or forethought.

But good parents are always thinking about the welfare of their children, and are constantly planning for their future. The compulsion of a yearning love is ever present in their hearts, and their responsibility in the sight of God is never lost sight of. There is a joy in the obligation they feel to do the best they can to make their children useful and happy in the world.

As good parents feel thus, they realize that one of the best things they can do for their boys and girls is to give them the opportunities and advantages of a good education. They do not set too much store by the mere acquisition of knowledge and the mental discipline of routine school attendance, though these are important, but they covet for them the widening vision and the uplift of soul and the enthronement of ideals and the mastery of spirit that come from contact with great-hearted men and women who are thinking great thoughts and making great lives as they deal with the forces that make for the progress of the world. They want to see their children lifted out of provincialism and set in the wide fields of knowledge and power.

We thank God for these good parents who love their sons and daughters with a love that never grows weary, and who realize their obligation to equip them properly for the battle of life. The hope of the race is largely in them. Tender are the tributes good men and women of all ages have paid their fathers and mothers who inspired them and helped them to the attainment of things worth while.

The Christian college is to-day the best means that has been devised for giving our young men and young women that larger preparation and equipment that are necessary to enable them to put the most into life and to get the most out of life. It has some defects, we are willing to admit, but after all has been said in criticism that can be said, it still stands out pre-eminently as the one institution best fitted to take the raw material of the young life and transform it into the finished product of a Christian civilization. It is manned by teachers who have added to the vitalizing power of a personal religious experience the steadying power of wide scholarship, and to both the inspiring power of a great ideal; it is dominated by a definite and expressed recognition of spiritual values; and it is operated under the direction of the Church of God, the institution that has stood through the centuries, and will continue to stand, for the salvation of all men. It is to the Christian college we must send our sons and daughters if we would give them all that love demands and all that love covets.

We urge all good parents to begin to plan now to send their boys and girls who are prepared for it to college next fall. We know full well the financial difficulties that stand in the way of some. But we know, also, that there is much truth in the adage, "Where there is a will, there is a way," and we know that love will find that way. Our plea is not that our colleges may be able to boast of their large attendance, though we rejoice when we see their halls filled with eager students; but it is that our young men and young women may be given the advantages and opportunities of a Christian education, which they themselves so much need, and which the world so much needs they should have. All over our land are young people who have within themselves almost limitless possibilities for good, who are failing of their mission in life because they have not been led to see the value of an adequate preparation for life. They are merely getting a living out of the world when they ought to be making the world richer and better for their having lived in it. The day of preparation for some may have passed; but there are thousands of others who, just on the threshold of life, are looking longingly, wistfully, toward the future. They will be something worth while and do something worthy to be praised, if they are given a chance.

Send the boys and girls to college.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. R. T. Nolen requests us to state that his address is now Carriere, Miss., instead of Indianapolis, Ind., as formerly.

A service flag was dedicated at Rayville, La., on Sunday, July 21, where Rev. I. T. Reames is pastor. Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of Bogalusa, La., delivered the address.

We had the pleasure of meeting Rev. H. N. Harrison of Franklin, La., in the city one day last week. He was in a cheerful humor, and reported his work to be in good shape.

Rev. "Billy" Sunday recently underwent a serious operation at Rochester, Minn. He is reported to be convalescent, but has given up his proposed mid-summer visit to France.

Rev. W. E. Akin, of the Kentwood charge, Louisiana Conference, held a revival meeting at Mt.

Hermon last week in which he was assisted by Rev. A. I. Townsley. We hope to hear good reports of the meeting.

A personal note from Dr. Theodore Copeland, of Pine Bluff, Ark., informed us that he was in the midst of a great union revival at Rison, Ark. Large congregations were in attendance and there were conversions at every service.

Dr. C. P. Atkinson, of Alabama, whom many of our preachers have met at the Seashore Divinity School, has been appointed to the pastorate at Thomasville in place of the former pastor who has been commissioned as a chaplain.

The First Church of Bogalusa, La., is holding its Sunday night services during the summer in the open air. Many who do not attend church regularly are being reached and new members are being received at nearly every service.

Bishop W. R. Lambuth in a personal note received last week stated that he expected to sail for France in a few days, in company with Dr. C. C. Selecman and Rev. G. C. Emmons. They were delayed some days on account of passports.

We learn from the Yazoo Sentinel that Rev. W. H. Huntley, the cultured pastor of our church in Yazoo City, assisted the pastor of Fletcher's Chapel in a meeting last week. The report was that the meeting was accomplishing much good.

Rev. Paul H. Grice, pastor of the North Gulfport and Mississippi City charge sends us two renewal subscriptions, for which we thank him. He says that everything is in good shape on his work and the prospect is for full reports at the end of the year.

Miss Pauline Randle, a daughter of Rev. Robt. Randle, of the Louisiana Conference, honored the Advocate office with a call on Friday of last week. Miss Randle has been accepted for missionary work in Korea, and expects to leave for her field of labor early in August.

A brother whom we love very much recently cheered our hearts by sending us two new subscriptions. He added to his note, as a kind of postscript, these touching words: "Weather hot, congregations small, pickings slim." He has our sympathy—we know how it is.

We acknowledge the pleasure of a call from Rev. G. S. Harmon, our energetic and aggressive pastor at Poplarville, Miss. Brother Harmon, it will be remembered, will be one of the preachers at the Seashore Camp Meeting this year. We thank him for giving us two subscriptions.

Pontotoc Station, North Mississippi Conference, of which Rev. W. M. Young is pastor, reports its war work assessment of $75 raised in full and the amount forwarded to the treasurer a few days after notification. Good! Let all our pastors give like prompt attention to this important matter.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions recently sent in: Rev. E. Blizzard, Myrtle, Miss., 3; Rev. T. J. Hopper, Abbeville, Miss., 2; Rev. R. T. Pickett, Collins, Miss., 4; Rev. W. M. Sullivan, Columbia, Miss., 2.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, of Franklinton, La., writes us that he has just closed a good meeting at Fisher Church on his charge, in which he was assisted by Rev. L. F. Alford, of Enterprise, Miss. His letter contained five names for our subscription files. We thank him for his interest in the Advocate.

Hereafter a double triangle will be placed above the grave of Jewish soldiers who fall in France, instead of the cross. This decision was reached as the result of conferences between the chairman of the Jewish Welfare Board and the War Department. The other allied nations have already been using the double triangle.

In sending us a new name for our subscription files, Rev. W. S. Shipman, of Ruleville, Miss., stated that he expected to begin a revival meeting at that place on July 28, assisted by Rev. J. W. Robertson. He requested prayers for the success of the meeting, and also for his sons who are in France. Many, we are sure, will heed this request.

Bishop Mouzon, according to an exchange, has announced that at the coming Conferences he will inquire of each preacher if his official members take the Church paper, and that he will consider no charge up to the standard of duty that cannot answer this question in the affirmative. We wonder how many of our charges are up to the standard.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, of St. Mark's and Mary Werlein Missions, who was reported last week as recovering from an operation on his throat at Touro Infirmary, unfortunately suffered a relapse and for several days was in a serious condition. We are glad to be able to say that his condition is now much improved and unless further complications arise, he will soon be able to resume his work.

Last week we stated that Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, had been called to Mississippi by the serious illness of his father. A telegram received last Saturday morning brought the sad news that his father had passed away. Brother Holmes' multitude of friends will sympathize deeply with him in this great sorrow, and remember him in their prayers.

Dr. H. G. Davis, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, but now stationed at Quincy, Fla., accompanied by his wife, spent a few days in New Orleans last week, visiting relatives. He expected to go from here for a visit to his old home in Alabama. He reported the recent completion of a $40,000 house of worship, with a seating capacity of 1500, at Quincy. The building is to be dedicated soon.

Rev. E. C. Driskell, pastor of the Greenwood Springs charge, North Mississippi Conference, under date of July 27, reported that he was in the midst of a great revival at Friendship Church on his charge. There had been six accessions to the Church the night before, and he was hoping for many others. We trust his hopes were realized. He gave us two subscriptions, for which we thank him.

Rev. John W. Ramsey, of New Augusta, Miss., writes that they have just closed a successful union revival meeting at that place, in which the preaching was done by Rev. J. D. Flemming, a Presbyterian evangelist of Memphis, Tenn. The community was graciously blessed, and there were twenty-three members added to the various churches, the Methodist Church receiving its proportionate share.

Rev. Dr. Ed. F. Cook, former Foreign Missionary Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been elected President of the Scarritt Bible and Training School on a re-organized and enlarged basis. He has accepted and will enter on his new field on August 10, by which time full announcement will be made of other additions to the staff of teachers. Miss M. L. Gibson, Principal, will continue her relations to the School as for the past twenty-six years.

Rev. T. J. O'Neil, President of Port Gibson Female College, informs us that the outlook for the approaching session is very encouraging. The indications are that every room will be occupied. Port Gibson now meets the latest requirements of the Educational Commission for schools of its class. Its graduates receive teachers' license without examination. A four years' course is given in Bible study, and a medal is given for the one making the best grade in each of the four classes.

Rev. L. E. Crooks, of Greensburg, La., reports that the recent central revival meeting for his charge, held at Oakland Tabernacle, in which he was assisted by Rev. H. T. Young, Conference evangelist, resulted in a large number of conversions, with fourteen additions to the Methodist Church. He promised a fuller report of the meeting later. He enclosed six new subscriptions for our files, for which he has our thanks. Brother Young never forgets the Advocate in his meetings, a fact that we appreciate most heartily.

We take the following from a recent number of the Pacific Methodist: "Dr. Fitzgerald Sale Parker, General Secretary of the Epworth League of our Church, spent the past week delivering lectures at the Asilomar encampment; this week he goes to Huntington Beach as a special lecturer. Reports from the Asilomar meeting indicate that Dr. Parker made a fine impression on that body. We never expected anything else, as the Parker brothers, Dr. Fitzgerald and Dr. Frank (who declined to be made a Bishop at Atlanta) rank as two of the brightest men in our Church. Worthy sons are they of that great and good Bishop who blessed our Church years ago, Bishop Linus Parker." With all this we heartily agree.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

Mrs. W. H. McKENZIE, daughter of Samuel and Mary Weems, of Scott County, Miss., was born on December 26, 1853, and died on February 7, 1918. She was of a splendid family, highly esteemed over all the county. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in childhood. On October 15, 1874, she married W. H. McKenzie. They were industrious and were very successful financially. She was the mother of seven children, six of whom are now living: Mrs. E. F. Lane, Lorena, Miss.; Mrs. John Wicker, Forest, Miss.; Mr. W. E. McKenzie, Zula, Miss.; Mrs. Mabel Hopper, Scooba, Miss.; Mrs. Clara Mangum, Forest, Miss.; and Mrs. Zula King, Hickory, Miss. No truer woman to her Church and pastor could be found. She was a very resolute woman, helpful to her neighbors, thoughtful about the poor, untiring in her devotion to her family. Her daughters are all splendid workers in the Church; her only son is one of the best members on Homewood Circuit—steward and recording steward for years. Sister McKenzie died in the Lord and her works do follow her. Her children rise up and call her blessed. We shall see her again.

M. L. WHITE.

Mrs. ISABELLA GILMORE (nee Beard), the subject of this sketch, was born at Paulding, Miss., on July 29, 1850. She moved with her family to Hickory, Miss., at an early age and resided there until death, which sad event occurred on April 16, 1918. Mrs. Gilmore came of an intellectual, cultured and Christian family of the old school, of which fact she was justly proud. She married Dr. G. W. Gilmore at the age of seventen years, who preceded her in death twenty-seven years. Two sons and two daughters blessed this union, who have grown to be useful citizens, and they, together with her sainted mother of ninety-four years of age, and three sisters and one brother still survive to mourn their loss.

Mrs. Gilmore loved her Church, Sunday school, neighbors and home. She joined the M. E. Church, South, when quite young, and was a loyal and true member and lived up to all its obligations, and rounded out a beautiful Christian life. When the end came, she was willing to go. As a neighbor and friend of forty-two years' acquaintance, I trust and believe she will live forever beyond the skies in a perfect day.

J. H. TODD.

Hickory, Miss., July 18.

Mrs. ELIZA A. BARR, wife of Rev. R. H. Barr, was born in Clark County, Ala. She died at Foxworth, Miss., at the age of seventy-eight years and three months. At the age of twelve years she was happily converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She remained a faithful member until she joined the Church Triumphant, March 27, 1918.

For nearly thirty years Sister Barr gave her life devotedly to the cause of Christ, going with her husband into some of the hardest fields of our Conference. Yet no one ever heard her complain at her lot in life. She was truly a self-sacrificing, thoroughly consecrated Christian. As an evidence of this fact, her Bible was her companion. She read from it daily, was guided by its teachings and comforted by the precious promises. During her last illness, while in the sanitarium at Columbia, Miss., she asked the writer for a Book, that she might continue to read, although in a very weakened condition. As a wife, she was kind and helpful. Brother Barr said that whatever success he achieved in the ministry was due in a large measure to her. As a mother, she was devoted, indulgent, yet firm. Two splendid daughters live to bear testimony to her life as such. Her husband is lonely. The writer never talked to one more deeply grieved, and yet the Gospel with which he has comforted others has been his strength.

While Sister Barr had been in Foxworth only three months, yet the people had learned to love her, and did all they could to help her and the family.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer at the Methodist Church in Foxworth on March 28, 1918. Her husband and two daughters—Mrs. Elder of Moss Point, and Miss Barr of Foxworth—and a host of friends still live to mourn their loss. God bless the sorrowing loved ones!

W. M. SULLIVAN.

WALNUT GROVE CHARGE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed a good meeting at Scotland Chapel, where Brother Isaac L. Peebles, of Meridian, did the preaching. Scotland Chapel is Brother Peebles' old home church, where he was converted many years ago. When one can go back to his old home and his preaching is enjoyed and appreciated as Brother Peebles' was at Scotland Chapel, it shows the marks of "true blue," and of God's approval on that one. I never listened to better preaching than that which Brother Peebles did during this meeting. The presence and assistance in the meeting of Brother Peebles' wife and daughter helped more than can be expressed.

We had five accessions to the Methodist Church and two to the Presbyterian. The mid-week prayer meeting was revived and the general state of the church was made much better, and I feel sure that much and lasting good was accomplished which only eternity will reveal.

Brother Peebles is a good and forceful preacher, filled with the Holy Spirit, and with the knowledge of God and his Holy Word. He is in good health and has a lot of time which he would be more than willing to give in helping the brethren in meetings. Brethren, if you have not secured your help for all your meetings, write him. I feel sure you would make no mistake in securing his aid.

W. N. WARE, P. C.

BAY SPRINGS CHARGE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brother Carley: We are making progress on the Bay Springs charge. Have just closed a few days' meeting at Stringer, where the membership is small and where we have no church building. There were six accessions and other good done. Three new subscribers to the Advocate were secured and there will be another to follow. We have some good people in that little band and hope to report further progress at that point before long.

The next meeting on the charge will be held at Holder's church. At that point I found no heater or musical instrument in the church; but they have now an organ and I am sure the heater will be in place before the next winter season. They have also reorganized their Sunday school, which had been dead for two years or more.

We have a neat church building at Louin, which we will have dedicated before long.

The strongest point on the charge is Bay Springs, where the Newton District Conference was recently held. New seats have been placed in the church there and a new carpet has been laid.

A loan has been carried on the Bay Springs parsonage for several years, the original loan being three hundred dollars. Some interest had also accrued; but all that is now paid. Hope to report further progress all round within the next few weeks.

AMENDMENT TO THE CHARTER OF STANDARD COMPANY, INC.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Louisiana,
Parish of Orleans.

BE IT KNOWN, that on this Twenty-fifth day of June in the year 1918, before me, J. KENTON BAILEY, a Notary Public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned,

PERSONALLY CAME AND APPEARED, William B. Reily, Jr., herein appearing in his capacity as President of the "Standard Company, Incorporated," and William B. Reily, herein appearing in his capacity as Secretary of said corporation, which said corporation was organized by an act before Wm. Andrew Collins, Notary Public, on February 23rd, 1916.

And said appearers declared that a special meeting of the stockholders of said corporation, at which all of the stockholders were present or represented by proxy, was held this day at the domicile of said corporation, by virtue of and pursuant to a unanimous waiver of notice, agreed to and signed by all of said stockholders in person or by proxy, and that at said special meeting of stockholders, by the unanimous vote of all of the stockholders of said corporation, all consenting and agreeing thereto, and by resolutions unanimously adopted, Article I and Article III of the charter of said corporation were altered, amended and changed so as to read as follows, to-wit:

ARTICLE I.

"The name and title of this corporation shall be 'STANDARD TEA AND COFFEE COMPANY, INCORPORATED.' It shall have a period of duration of ninety-nine years, unless sooner dissolved. Its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, State of Louisiana. It shall have, possess and exercise all of the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by law upon corporations of this character. All citations and other legal process shall be served upon the President, or, in his absence, upon the Secretary."

ARTICLE III.

"The Capital Stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at the sum of FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS, divided into Five Thousand Shares of Ten Dollars each, which stock shall be paid for in cash before issued. Ten Thousand Dollars, represented by One Thousand Shares, shall be denominated 'COMMON STOCK,' and the balance of Forty Thousand Dollars, represented by Four Thousand Shares of said stock, shall be denominated 'PREFERRED STOCK.' Said Preferred Stock shall have a preference and priority over said Common Stock in the assets of this corporation and shall be entitled to a dividend of Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue upon the par value of the same. Said dividends shall be cummiative and shall be paid in preference to any dividend on the Common Stock. In the event of liquidation or disposition of the assets of this corporation, the holders of said Preferred Stock shall be paid the par value thereof, together with the dividends above provided, before any payment is made on the Common Stock.

The Common Stock shall own the remainder of the net earnings of this corporation after the payment of the dividends on the Preferred Stock as above provided, or as much thereof as may be distributed by the Board of Directors and not reserved for the surplus or undivided profits.

Each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote in all stockholders' meetings for each share of Common Stock standing on the books of this corporation in his name, to be cast in person or by proxy, and the majority of the votes cast shall control any election or issue in all stockholders' meetings, but no vote on any matter shall be allowed to any stockholder on account of any Preferred Stock standing in his name.

This corporation may begin business as soon as Five Thousand Dollars of its Capital Stock is subscribed and paid for in cash. The Capital Stock of this corporation may be increased to One Hundred Thousand Dollars in either Preferred Stock or Common Stock, or partly in both, as shall be deemed best at a stockholders' meeting. The One Thousand Shares of the Capital Stock at present outstanding shall be classed and denominated as "Common Stock" and shall be so marked upon the face of the certificates by the Secretary of this corporation upon presentation for that purpose by the several holders of said stock. The remaining Four Thousand Shares of Preferred Stock shall be sold and issued, from time to time, at not less than par and for cash, as the Board of Directors of this corporation may authorize and direct. And this corporation, through its Board of Directors, shall have the right to call in and cancel any outstanding shares of Preferred Stock, in blocks of One Thousand Dollars at a time, upon the payment of the par value thereof, provided dividend amounting to Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue to the date of cancellation is or has been also paid on said stock."

All as will appear from a certified copy of the resolutions of the meeting of said stockholders, hereto annexed and made a part of this act.

THUS DONE AND PASSED in my office in the City of New Orleans, State, of Louisiana, on the day, month and year hereinabove written, in the presence of William Andrew Collins and Daniel W. Mouney, competent witnesses, who have hereunto signed their names as such, with said appearers and me, Notary, after the due reading of the whole.

SELF DEFENSE

DEFEAT BACKACHE AND KIDNEY TROUBLE WITH ANURIC.

Many people in this section, as elsewhere, have suffered from rheumatism and kidney trouble and have found Anuric to be the most successful remedy to overcome these painful and dangerous ailments.

The lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded Nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's called "Anuric." You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as Bright's disease, diabetes or stone in the bladder.

To overcome these distressing conditions you should take plenty of exercise in the open air, avoid a heavy meat diet, drink freely of water and at each meal take Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets (double strength). You will, in a short time, find that you are one of the firm indorsers of An-u-ric, as are many of your neighbors.

Send Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10 cents for trial package.

SYLACAUGA, ALA.—"I have used the Anuric Tablets for the kidneys and they surely did give good results. I have also used the 'Pleasant Pellets' for the liver and they have done me a great deal of good. I can recommend Doctor Pierce's medicine as mighty fine."—G. A. RAGSDALE.

ATHENS, GA.—"I had been complaining with my back for 10 years and had tried a great many remedies. Of course, I was not completely down but it was very painful through my spine. I tried Anuric and found complete relief. Now I can lift 100 lbs. and over, where before I could scarcely get up when I stooped to tie my shoe."—J. W. ANDERSON, 347 Augusta Ave.

BIBLE WORKERS' CONFERENCE, LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C.

Our magnificent Junaluska Inn burned. We had $75,000 worth of insurance. The splendid foundation, the unexcelled site, the beautiful lake, the sublime mountain scenery, the delightful climate, the faith and pluck of the stockholders, all remain intact. We have five other hotels, space in cottages, and will be prepared to take care of all conferences.

We have engaged the strongest list of talent ever used in any former conference at the Lake, and perhaps unequaled by any religious conference held in this country.

The Bible and Workers' Conference will follow the Sunday School Conference and synchronize with it Sunday, August 4. The following week will occur the full program of this conference.

Bishop Horace M. Du Bose is President of the conference, and will preside at all the sessions and direct the program.

Monday, August 5, subject of the day: "Sunday Schools: How to Build, Maintain and Evangelize the Sunday School."

Tuesday, August 6, "The Preacher and His Work: How to Get an Audience, Deliver the Message, Reach the Masses, Secure the Chief Ends of the Gospel."

Wednesday, August 7, "Evangelism: How to Prepare for, Conduct and Follow up a Revival."

Thursday, August 8, "The Laity: How to Enlist, Develop and Utilize the Laity of the Church."

Friday, August 9, "The Social Responsibility of the Church: How to Interest, Train and Utilize the Church in Social Service."

Saturday, August 10, "The Routine Work of the Church: How to Organize. Develop and Make Efficient all the Departments of Church Work, Including Music, Prayer, Social Hours, Young People's Meetings and Deaconess Work, etc."

Sunday, August 11, "Chapman and Haywood County Day." All hours occupied with preaching.

The leader of the Monday meeting will be John R. Pepper of Memphis, accompanied by W. H. Stockham of Birmingham, Fred Carter of Atlanta, and other men who have built great Sunday schools and Wesley classes and have had large experience in organization and departmental work in Sunday schools.

Tuesday will be in charge of Dr. George R. Stuart, accompanied by Bishop William Frazler McDowell of the Methodist Episcopal Church, two or three Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, and six or eight pastors of the largest congregations in Southern Methodism, including Drs. Rice, Knickerbocker, Todd and others.

Wednesday will be led by Dr. H. C. Morrison, accompanied by Price, Jones, Culpepper and other prominent evangelists.

Thursday will be led by William Jennings Bryan, accompanied by six or eight of the most prominent laymen in Southern Methodism. We expect this Laymen's Day to be one of the greatest days and an eye-opener on laity work in the Church.

Friday will be led by Bishop James Cannon, accompanied by Anna Gordon, Wayne Wheeler, Dr. Worth M. Tippy, Secretary of the Federal Council of Social Service; Dr. William E. Todd of Chicago University, on "Moral and Social Conditions After the War," and other great national leaders. This will be a wonderful day of great instruction and inspiration.

Saturday. This will be an open day for discussion, round table talks and experiences, led by Dr. George R. Stuart, utilizing the talent on the ground.

Sunday will be led by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, assisted by George R. Stuart, Bob Jones and others.

The eleven o'clock hour each day and the evening hours will be devoted to sermons and lectures by Bishop Horace M. Du Bose, Bishop William F. McDowell, Bishop James Cannon, Wm. Jennings Bryan, Dr. Worth M. Tippy, of New York, and others.

All of the above named speakers, including many others who will be on the ground from all over the Church, have promised to take part in this great week's work. It will be worth the time of any preacher or layman, who desires to accomplish anything in the Church of God.

If you expect to attend this Conference, write to J. B. Stentz, Lake Junaluska, and make reservations at hotels.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

TIME OUT.

He Knew His Lesson.

A professor of history met one of his class who had returned from fighting on the Western front, and asked him if he had learned any particular lesson from the war.

"I have discovered," replied the young man, "that it is a great deal easier studying history than it is making it."—Exchange.

Couldn't Overcome It.

Two small boys who had grown weary of their game, were arguing rather heatedly regarding a new form of amusement. At last one of them was struck with a sudden inspiration, and said to the other:

"I know! Let's see who can make the ugliest face."

"Gowan!" replied his chum. "What d' yuh mean by it? Look what a start you've got!"—Exchange.

Didn't Know History.

An American who recently visited London was sight-seeing on one occasion when a guide took him aboard the old battleship Victory, which was Nelson's flagship in several of his naval triumphs. The British sailor who was escorting the American over the vessel came to a raised brass tablet over the deck. As he did so he reverently raised his cap and announced:

"'Ere, sir, is the spot where Lord Nelson fell."

"Is it?" asked the American, blankly. "Well, I am not surprised. I nearly tripped over the thing myself."—Christian Guardian.

Rather Small.

An applicant for exemption who maintained that his eyesight was defective was told by the army doctor to read the card for the eyesight test, but he protested that he could not see the top letter, which happened to be about three inches deep.

The doctor accordingly sent an orderly to the mess for a dinner plate, which was brought and placed on the floor.

"Now," said the doctor, "can you see that?"

The man bent down. "Yes," he replied.

"Well, what is it," asked the doctor.

The applicant for exemption stooped to within three feet of the floor, and then, looking up with a perfectly innocent air, said, "It looks like a five-cent piece, sir!"—Exchange.

If there be no fruit, then is everything a failure. The garden itself is a garden for this. For this it was bought and walled about; for this it is dug and dressed. The gardener works and watches for this. For this the seed was sown, the tree was planted; for this, weeding and pruning and everything else has been done. For this the rains have fallen, and for this the sun has shone. The seasons have succeeded each other for this. For this, all the life of the tree has been at work; roots have grasped the earth; leaves have drunk the dew; the sap has crept up, and blossom and bud have all been for fruit. If there be no fruit, then everything is a failure—everything.—W. G. Pearse.

Conditions that are both scrofulous and anemic are very common. Many persons whose faces are "broken out," checks are pale, and nerves are weak, suffer from them.

ELMORE (LA.) CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Our first revival service began at Vienna on July 18, and closed on July 25. Rev. E. B. Moll did the preaching and did it well. Brother Moll is good help in a meeting.

The spiritual life of the Church was considerably deepened and a number of people claimed to have been blessed during the meeting. Nine new members were added to the Church. I witnessed a thing the last night of the meeting which was very impressive: a mother and her three daughters, all of whom were almost grown and who had never belonged to any church, came up and joined the Church and were all baptized together.

Yours fraternally,
H. J. BOLTZ, P. C.

CALL TO THE SARDIS DISTRICT.

Revivals.

The world is all astir. The very foundations of former life are being put to the test. One institution alone has stood the test under the most severe trials—the evangelistic, missionary Church. Just now, as your District Leader, I ask that we make the evangelistic campaign all-absorbing. Nothing now is of such importance as calling our Church to prayer, and calling sinners to Christ. Brethren, in the name of our God and humanity throw yourselves into this battle with an abandon that to the world may seem reckless. Some of us may fall in the fight, but what of that? Many of our choicest are falling in France. This one thing we do.

Finance.

The year is drawing rapidly to a close. Special conditions necessitate our pressing our finances earlier than usual. The fourth Liberty Loan, the Y. M. C. A. drive for a hundred million dollars, will come in October and November, followed quickly by another Red Cross drive. All of these are of supreme importance. None, however, is of greater importance than the support of the Church. It is well known to all of us that each of these campaigns will be all-absorbing. The religious thing and the patriotic thing is for the Church to do her campaigning early and get out of the way. To this end we have decided on the time from the tenth of September to the tenth of October as the time to close up our Church finances. This is the plan:

Preparation, first ten days of September.

Campaigning to raise by subscription and cash, from tenth to thirtieth.

Collections, from October first to tenth.

Conclusion.

What will we do about it? These are unusual times calling for unusual effort and sacrifice. Will we be too faint-hearted and cowardly to meet the call or will we rise up like men to meet these calls in the time of the nation's, and of the world's peril? Brethren, we believe in you and we are counting on you.

Sincerely,
J. H. HOLDER,
Presiding Elder, Sardis Dist.

GOVERNMENT WISHES MINISTERS AS FOUR-MINUTE MEN.

The Committee on Public Information is making a strong drive to enlist in the ranks of the Four-Minute Men the ministers of the country. Over forty million communicants are to be reached from the pulpits of America, many of whom never attend the purely secular gatherings at which lay Four-Minute Men appear. These millions may be reached most effectively by their own pastors, and so the Government is now conducting a concerted effort to enroll the pastors as Four-Minute Men, pledged to devote four minutes at every available opportunity to the Government's message to their congregations.

President Wilson's personal message to the Four-Minute Men indicates the significance of their opportunity: "Men and nations are at their worst or at their best in any great struggle. The spoken word may light the fires of passion and unreason or it may inspire to highest action and noblest sacrifice a nation of free men. Upon you Four-Minute Men, who are charged with a special duty and enjoy a special privilege in the command of your audiences, will rest in a considerable degree the task of arousing and informing the great body of our people so that when the record of these days is complete we shall read, page for page with the deeds of army and navy, the story of the unity, the spirit of sacrifice, the unceasing labors, the high courage of the men and women at home who held unbroken the inner lines. My best wishes and continuing interest are with you in your work as part of the reserve officers' corps in a nation thrice armed because through your efforts it knows better the justice of its cause and the value of what it defends."

The ministers are responding with practical unanimity and with real pleasure in the service. To inspire to highest action and noblest sacrifice is their life-work; to advance the cause of universal brotherhood, under the fatherhood of God, is their constant task. The cause of world democracy is their own cause, and they have not been backward about espousing it. In New York City the work of the Church Section of Four-Minute Men has received the enthusiastic endorsement of Cardinal Farley, of Bishop Greer, and other prominent ministers, and of the leading Rabbis of the city.

All who desire further information upon the matter are invited to address the Four-Minute Men of the Committee on Public Information at 10 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C., whence they will be put in direct touch with the work.

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary meeting of the Hattiesburg District was held in Mt. Olive, July 10-11. The unstinted hospitality of the people made our stay indeed very pleasant. It seemed that the gates of the little city had been torn from their hinges and were not replaced until the guests had departed. The least that can be said concerning our entertainment, is that nothing was left undone for the pleasure of the visitors.

The efficient district secretary, Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, presided over the sessions of the meeting with dignity and ease. There was a good attendance of Mt. Olive people at every session, and the representatives from the adult, young people and junior societies of the district numbered seventeen. Two conference officers, Mrs. H. O. Middleton, first vice president, and Mrs. G. H. Thompson, superintendent of Study and Publicity, were present throughout the meeting. Two visiting pastors, Rev. W. M. Williams, of Collins, and Rev. H. E. Carter, of Magee, together with the presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Jones, and Rev. T. B. Cottrell, host of the conference, gave helpful talks and suggestions.

The reports of the auxiliaries showed that splendid work has been done over the district. Though the progress that might have been expected was not made during the year, there has been an increase in some lines. A young people's missionary society was organied at Broad Street, Hattiesburg, during the year. The Mt. Olive adult and Petal Y. P. M. S. are on the roll of honor; all the members of one society are consistent tithers and another society composed of two members, paid $25 pledge last year. As a whole, the reports were optimistic. In the message of the district secretary, Mrs. Cottrell spoke of the wonderful opportunity for missionary work in the district and appealed for more consecration to the Master's work at this critical time and for more earnest prayers for our boys in service.

The program was interesting and helpful from beginning to end. The discussions, talks and papers by the delegates were peculiarly beneficial and appropriate at this time when there are so many demoralizing forces in our midst. On Thursday morning, Mrs. Thompson, representing the department of mission study, emphasized the value of a systematic study of missions and of God's Word as an aid to realizing the goal of a ten per cent increase this year. She also spoke of the danger to the missionary societies of letting Red Cross and other war work consume the time that should be devoted to mission study classes. In the afternoon, Mrs. Thompson told in a delightful way of her trip to Lake Junaluska and spoke briefly of the Junaluska Conference.

One of the most attractive features of the entire meeting was the Young People's program Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Middleton's original production, "The King's Garden," in the form of a play, was an inspiration to all. After this splendid program each one realied more than ever before that the young people of the Mississippi Conference are very fortunate in having a leader of such wonderful originality and attractive personality as Mrs. Middleton.

A pleasant coincidence of the meeting was that a revival conducted by the evangelist, Rev. Mr. Miller, of Nashville, Tenn., was in progress at the same time. Mr. Miller's messages at the morning and evening hours were soul-stirring and were conducive to greater missionary zeal.

As the last session of the meeting came to a close, every one felt that it was good to have been there. Without a doubt the delegates went back to their respective societies with a newer, truer vision of what the Master would have them do to advance the missionary work in their hands.

WILLIE D. HEARST.

INDIA AS INTERPRETER OF CHRIST.

"When India becomes Christian, she will interpret Christ better than He has ever been interpreted before," was the recent statement of Bishop Warne in commenting upon the peculiar type of intellect possessed by the Indian people. With their idealism, with their national predisposition towards philosophic speculation, and with their Oriental characteristics and insight into things of the Spirit, the Bishop believes that they will ultimately be able to show us the Christ in aspects hitherto sealed to the Occidental mind.

The spiritual is more real to the Indian than the material, as it was to Christ, and when India learns to make the distinction between religion and spirituality (for, to quote the Bishop again, "there is more religion in India than in any other country in the world"), the way will have been paved for the unlocking of her peculiar resources in this realm, for the good of humanity.—The Centenary Bulletin.

WHO IS TO MAKE OVER TURKEY?

Unprejudiced observers like our own American ambassadors have spoken in the highest terms of the service rendered by the missionaries in Turkey. A further endorsement of them is found in an article by Sir William Ramsay, an eminent student of Asia Minor and of modern Turkey, which appeared in the Quarterly Review. He says:

"My conclusion is that Turkey must be taken in tutelage by the Western Powers, and that everything will depend upon the personal character and the knowledge of the men into whose hands the task of regenerating Turkey will be put. Foremost among those who are fit to be instructed with this duty are certain American missionaries in the country—not, by any means, all of them, for I have known one who said to me with fervor that he had never been inside a Turkish mosque. Such as he may be eliminated at once, but many missionaries whom I have known are well fitted to be guides; as in their life they are examples of economic management and moral vigor, and of living on a high standard."—The Missionary Herald.

A FEW VISITS WITH AN EVANGELISTIC MISSIONARY IN JAPAN.

To-day I called on the wife of a lawyer, who has been in bed two months now. Before marriage she was in a Canadian Methodist school. When I called, she showed me her Bible and said, "I asked my husband to get it out, and I have been reading." The husband has times also when he gets out the good Book and reads for himself.

The next place I went to was an official's home. The wife told me some time ago that she heard about Christianity from Mrs. Callahan years ago in Nakalsie. This is a rather difficult place; but the child is the net, so we call and have found the "something-in-common" place.

The next home was one from which four children have been sent to us. The husband is one-of the head men connected with the railroad here. I had a very helpful talk with this educated lady and found that I got nearer to her this afternoon than I have during all the other years I have known her. She is very earnest about her children's education; and when I asked her help on some things connected with the kindergarten, she responded kindly and frankly. When I got back, I went over to the kindergarten and found one of our lovely women there talking to the teachers. She is studying the Bible, and we hope soon to see her become a Christian. Her husband is a government official.—Miss Ida M. Worth.

MYRTLE CHARGE, NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Brother Carley: Enclosed find list of two subscribers, also check to cover same.

We think our work is in good shape and the outlook for the year is very promising. We are serving a loyal people, people who believe in progress. At the second quarterly conference the stewards voluntarily raised the assessment on the preacher's salary 15 per cent.

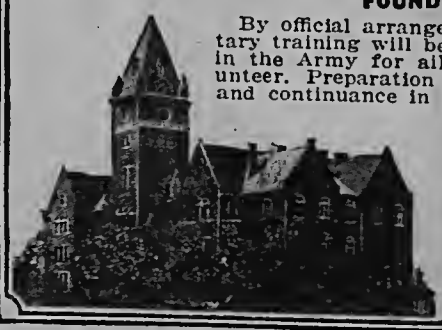
We had Brother Gladney with us the fourth Sunday in June, also the following Monday and Tuesday. We visited every church and schoolhouse where we have a Sunday school on the charge. Our coming had been well announced at every place except one, where the superintendent thought it impossible to get a crowd together on Monday morning, but at this same place we met one teacher and through her have been able to reach the Sunday school. At the other places we were met with good congregations that showed real interest in the work and seemed to want to know how to teach. We feel that Brother Gladney has been a blessing to the charge, and we see great improvement in the Sunday schools.

We have all our plans made for our revivals and are expecting great things. J. G. JOHNSON, P. C.

HUSBAND SAVES WIFE

From Suffering by Getting Her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"For many months I was not able to do my work owing to a weakness which caused backache and headaches. A friend called my attention to one of your newspaper advertisements and immediately my husband bought three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me. After taking two bottles I felt fine and my troubles caused by that weakness are a thing of the past. All women who suffer as I did should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JAS. ROHRBERG, 620 Knapp St., N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.



Women who suffer from any form of weakness, as indicated by displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, backache, headaches, nervousness or "the blues," should accept Mrs. Rohrberg's suggestion and give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a thorough trial.

For over forty years it has been correcting such ailments. If you have mysterious complications write for advice to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

WHO CAN BEAT DODDSVILLE?

Doddsville is a small village on the Y. D. R. R., between Yazoo City and Ruleville, Miss. Our church has a membership of twenty-four, but the Sunday school attendance averages about ninety. Last Sunday, July 21, that Sunday school agreed to support twelve French orphans. The Adult Bible Class, taught by that most remarkable woman, Mrs. J. E. Coleman, for the last three Sundays, I think, ran in attendance. 40, 35, 38. The attendance at prayer meeting runs up to 50.

Calomel Salivates and Makes You Sick

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated tomorrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

What Nuxated Iron is Made From

Sworn Statement of Composition of its Formula

It increases the strength and endurance of delicate, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time in many instances.

The Board of Directors have authorized the broadest publication of the sworn statement of the coposition of Nuxated Iron, one of the most widely used tonic, strength and blood builders in the world, so that the public may examine it for themselves and judge as to its merits.

It is conservatively estimated that this remarkable formula is now being used by over 3,000,000 people annually in America alone. Among those who have used and strongly endorse it are many physicians formerly connected with well-known hospitals, former United States Senators, Vice-Presidential Nominee Charles A. Towne, former members of Congress; distinguished U. S. Army Generals (Retired), Judge Atkinson of the United States Court of Claims at Washington and Former Health Commissioner Kerr of Chicago.

Newspapers everywhere are invited to copy this statement for the benefit of their readers. It is suggested that physicians make a record of it and keep it in their offices so that they may intelligently answer questions of patients concerning it. Everybody is advised to cut it out and keep it. A copy of the actual sworn statement will be sent to any one who desires such. It is as follows: Iron Peptonate (Special specific Standard) Quantity given below. Sodium Glycerophosphates U. S. P. (Monsanto.) Calcium Glycerophosphates U. S. P. (Monsanto.) F. E. Nux Vomica U. S. P. Cascarin Bitter. Magnesium Carbonate. Po. Ginger U. S. P. Oil Cassia Cinnamon U. S. P. Calcium Carbonate Precip. U. S. P. Each dose of two tablets of Nuxated Iron contains one and one-half grains of organic iron in the form of iron peptonate of a special specific standard which in our opinion possesses superior qualities to any other known form of Iron. By using other makes of Iron Peptonate we could have put the same quantity of actual iron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost to us, and by using metallic iron we could have accomplished the same thing at less than one-twelfth the cost; but by so doing we must have most certainly impaired their therapeutic efficacy. Glycerophosphates used in Nuxated Iron is one of the most expensive tonic ingredients known. It is especially recommended to build up the nerve force and thereby increase brain power, as glycerophosphates are said to contain phosphorus in a state very similar to that in which it is found in the nerve and brain cells of man.

As will be seen from the above, two important ingredients of Nuxated Iron (Iron Peptonate and Glycerophosphates) are very expensive products as compared with most other tonics.

Under such circumstances the temptation to adulteration and substitution by unscrupulous persons, is very great and the public is hereby warned to be careful and see every bottle is plainly labeled "Nuxated Iron" by the Due Health Laboratories, Paris, London and Detroit, U. S. A., as this is the only genuine article. If you have taken other forms of iron without success, this does not prove Nuxated Iron will not help you. We guarantee satisfaction to every purchaser or your money will be refunded.

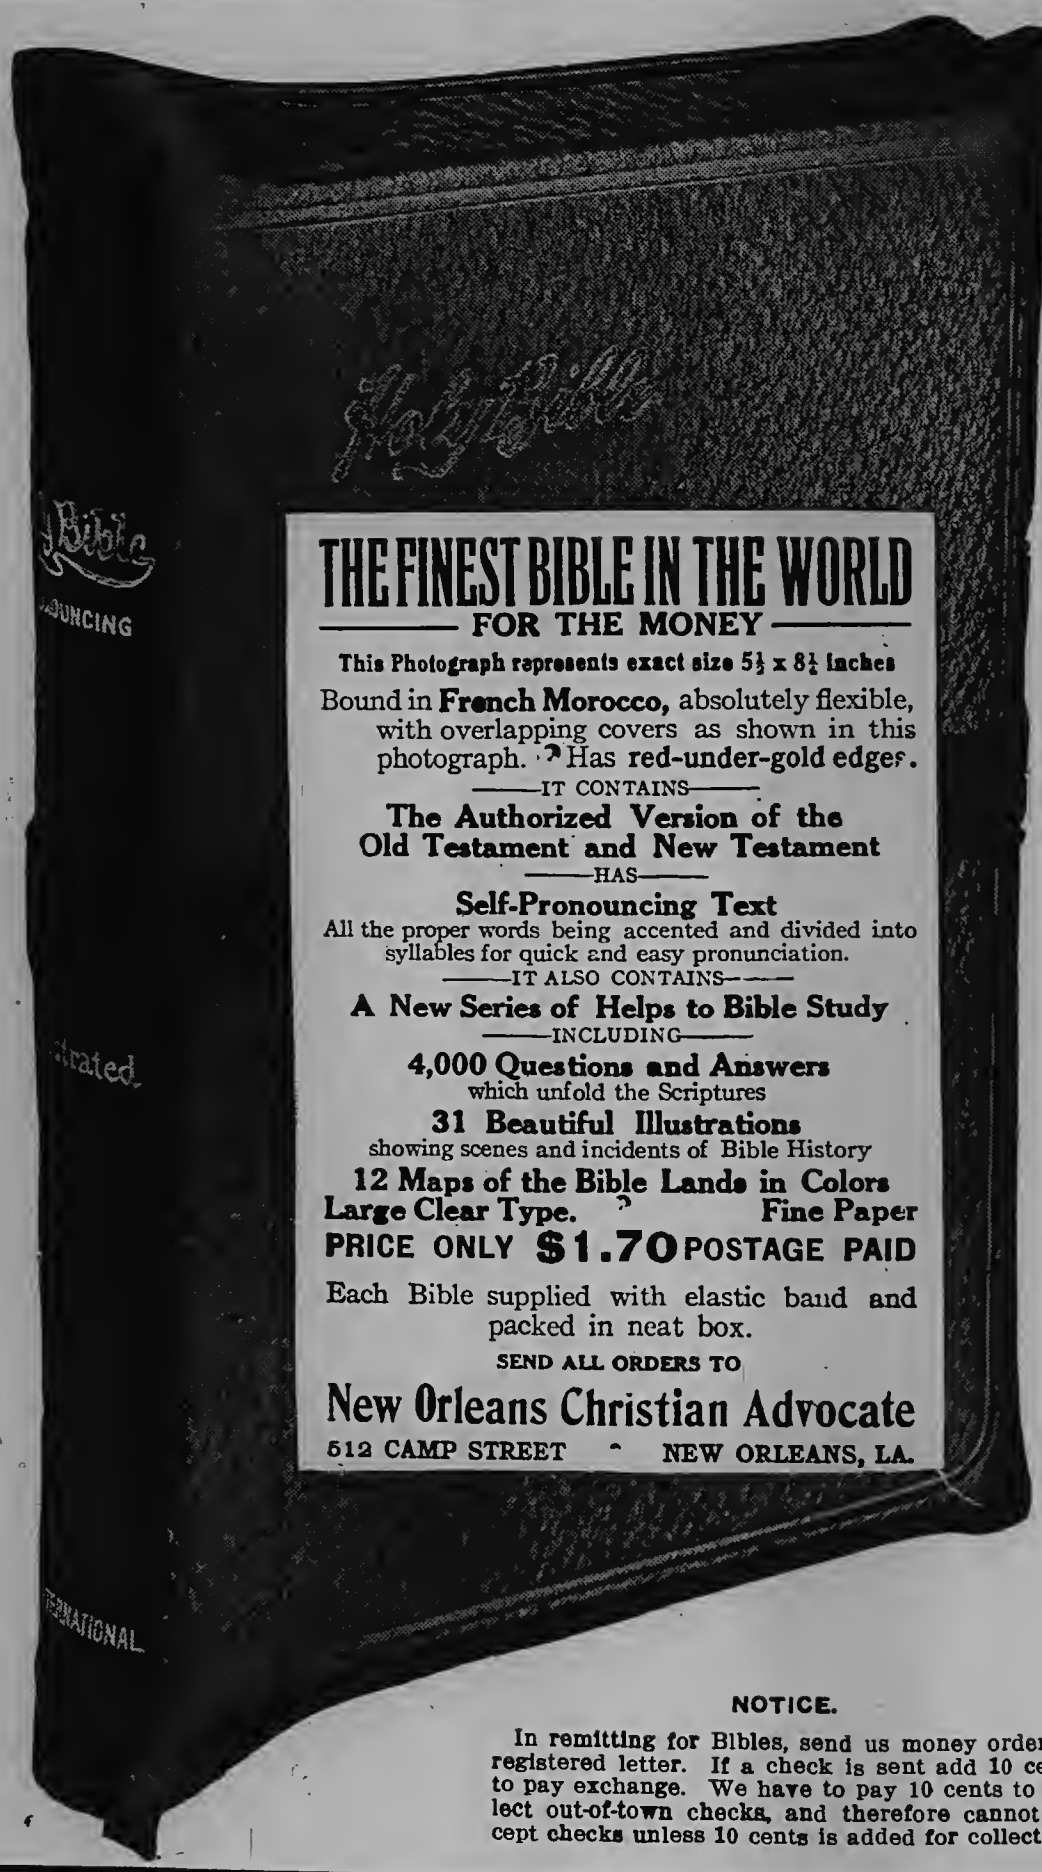
In regard to the value of Nuxated Iron, Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago, and former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, says it has proven through his own tests of it to excel any preparation he has ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves and strengthening the muscles. Dr. J. W. Armistead, Grove Hill, Ala., graduate of the University of Alabama School of Medicine, Mobile, 1883, says: "In the cases I used Nuxated Iron I have found more beneficial results than from any preparation I have ever used in 34 years' practice." Dr. R. H. Baugh, Polkville, Miss., graduate of the Memphis Hospital College, Memphis, 1898, says: "I always prescribe Nuxated Iron where a reconstructive tonic is indicated." Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of delicate, nervous, rundown folks in two weeks' time.

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. Nuxated Iron is not recommended for use in cases of acute illness, but only as a tonic strength and blood builder. (In case of acute illness always consult your family physician and be guided by his advice.) If in doubt as to whether or not you need a tonic, ask your doctor as we do not wish to sell you Nuxated Iron if you do not require it. If you should use it and it does not help you, notify us and we will return your money. It is sold by all druggists. Due Health Laboratories, Detroit, Mich.

KEEPING BABY FIT IN SUMMER.

By Mrs. Max West.

Through the long hot summer days it is a great task to keep children happy, well and out of mischief, especially when the mother already has her hands more than full with the work of her house.



In the first place, children must be kept as cool as possible. In hot weather this is not an easy task, hut it may be accomplished in some measure by clothing them suitably. Babies need only the diaper and one other garment, band or slip. Older children need only enough to cover their bodies. As far as possible, children should sleep out of doors at night, if screened porches are available, or, if not, with all the windows and doors wide open. A full tub bath in cool or tepid water will do much to make sleep comfortable, and a little plain talcum powder will help to allay the irritation of prickly heat.

Children must be provided, too, with occupations suited to their age. A play pen on a cool porch, or even under the trees in the yard where the mother can watch the baby, will give much pleasure. Sand piles, swings, and many other simple pieces of play apparatus, which are easily made at home without any great expense, will keep older children happy and out of mischief. Rainy days may be spent on the porch. Hints for mothers as to the selection of play and occupation for young children will shortly be published by the Children's Bureau. Very much of the annoyance of mothers and the fussiness of children would be done away with if the little hands and minds had plenty of occupation. Many a cross child is cross because he has nothing to do which interests him, and many a piece of mischief is only the result of the child's trying to find something with which to busy himself.

Children's food must he chosen with special care in summer to suit the ages, and proper food habits should be established. The nursing baby will cause the least anxiety. If a baby is nursed at regular times, preferably three or four hours apart, and is clean and as cool as possible, he will not usually suffer harm even in very hot weather.

Babies newly weaned from the breast and up to the end of the second year will need special care. Properly modified cows' milk will form the principal part of the diet of all such children, and must be as clean and as fresh as possible. Detailed directions for the feeding of children will be sent free from the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor to all who care to send for the bulletins on the care of children.

Older children should be taught to observe regular habits, also, and mothers must guard against the dangers of over or underfeeding, and especially against poor food materials, such as overripe fruit. Young children need to be taught to chew their food thoroughly and to eat slowly. Cleanliness of the body is necessary for health and comfort at all times, but is demanded in the summer time. These fundamental rules for health should be in effect in every family, and where carried out faithfully sickness should be largely done away with.—Government Bulletin.

On the rough path of homely duty they once more encountered their lost Master. He is never far distant from the plowman on the field, from the fisherman on the sea, from the merchant in his office, from the artisan at the bench; and blessed are they who realize his sympathetic presence. He comforts the worker in his weariness, encourages him in his disappointments, and by his blessing often turns failure into fortune. Happy are they who carry their spiritual perceptions into business life and secular scenes, and who, to their great joy, are able to exclaim, "The Lord is in this place, and I know it."—W. L. Watkinson.

The enjoyment of noble architecture and music is not worship, and may be mistaken for it. The hush that falls on us, walking the aisles of a church of eight hundred years; the thrill of nerves and heart as the glorious praise begins, whose echoes fall amid fretted vaults and clustered shafts; all that feeling, solemn as it is, has no necessary connection with worshiping God in spirit and in truth. And we may delude ourselves with the belief that we are offering spiritual worship, when it is all a mere matter of natural emotion, which the most godless man could share.—A. K. H. Boyd.

THE NEW SYSTEM OF CHURCH FINANCES.

The law passed by the recent General Conference relative to levying, collecting and distributing assessments has much to commend it.

In the first place, it is about as simple a plan as can be devised. There are only two assessments —one for the Connectional interests and one for the Conference interests. There is one Conference Treasurer, to whom all money collected by the preacher for both Connectional and Conference interests is to be sent. The Conference Treasurer will distribute monthly to the treasurers of the various Connectional and Conference boards the amounts due them according to the percentages fixed by the general Commission on Finance, and the Conference Commission on Finance. There ought to be absolutely no confusion in distributing funds under this simple arrangement.

In the second place, the plan is perfectly fair to all the interests involved. The general Commission on Finance is composed of the General Secretary of each of the boards having charge of the interests for which assessments are made, one Publishing Agent, six ministers and six laymen, none of whom shall be a member of any connectional board. This Commission is elected by the General Conference upon nomination of the Committee on Finance.

This Commission is required to make diligent effort to secure full information regarding all the interests of the Church, that none may be neglected or jeopardized, and on the basis of this information, recommend to the General Conference for its action and determination the total amount to be assessed for all these interests. The Commission on Finance determines also, under the control of the General Conference, the part of the total amount that is to be apportioned to each Annual Conference, and what percentage of the sum assessed and collected shall be allotted to each of the interests included in the assessment. The Conference Commission on Finance is composed in practically the same way, consisting of five ministers and five laymen, none of whom shall be members of the Conference boards, and the presidents of the Conference boards. The Conference Commission does its work just as the general Commission does, being subject in all its actions to the Annual Conference itself.

This plan provides for the equal representation of every interest of the Church in the Commission and at the same time insures a correlation of these interests through the deliberations and judgments of men not officially related to the interests themselves. There is every assurance that every claim will be fairly presented, fairly investigated, and fairly dealt with. As Bishop Moore says in his admirable discussion of the subject, "the boards may now become colleagues instead of competitors in their claims." This plan seems to us to be the essence of fairness.

The objection will be urged by some that this plan will cause certain interests of the Church to suffer without securing compensating advantages for others. For example, it is usually not difficult to secure the assessment in full for our superannuated preachers when that claim is presented on its merits, but, in some congregations at least, it is almost impossible to secure the full amount for foreign missions. There may be some difficulty, at first, on this point, but we believe it will soon disappear. We must remember that the amount apportioned to all the causes is on the basis of their minimum needs, and it is manifestly unfair to let one suffer for the sake of another. We should quickly imbue all our congregations with the connectional spirit, to the extent at least of causing them to realize their obligations to all the interests of the Church. As a matter of fact, this very objection may be the means of securing larger contributions than we otherwise could secure: after we have met the just claims of every interest, then we may do more for any cause that appeals especially to us.

We are firmly convinced that the plan is a good one; but let us remember that no plan will work itself. If it is to prove satisfactory, we must operate it whole-heartedly.

BISHOP KILGO ON DANCING.

I wish to express my appreciation of the position taken by our preachers in the city of New Orleans in their recently published resolutions announcing their opposition to dancing. It is especially gratifying that our First Church in New Orleans has frankly and without reserve declared her condemnation of this spiritually destructive practice.

Worldliness is an attitude of mind and spirit which manifests itself in manifold views and actions in every sphere of thought and activity. But within the realm of amusements there is no practice that is more utterly contrary to the spiritual intuitions, aspirations, health, and growth of the Christian than the dance. It is a gratification of the flesh which no truly Christian person will for a single moment approve but from which every impulse of the Christian heart moves him to flee, and it is a matter of common observation of all faithful pastors that those church members who patronize the dance show no genuine concern for their own spiritual growth and the salvation of the lost. They take up with all sorts of heresies, make no serious use of those means of grace ordained for their religious progress, display often-times impertinent distaste for the Church, and at times are positive hindrances to the work of the Church. In spite of the wide popularity into which the dance has come within recent years, no serious person can produce a single sound, moral or religious defense of it. It has its birth in those lusts of the flesh which every sense of chastity requires shall be utterly suppressed, and the unspeakable contacts of the dance can only arouse those feelings which foster in men, to say the least, temptations that often lead to the most fatal sins. It is shameful mockery to encourage a dance hall in one section of a city and cry out against a red light district in another part of the city. If school halls and club rooms and even sometimes church rooms are to become the scenes and advocates of the dance, then they surrender every just claim to the respect of honest men when they pretend to be shocked at the inevitable fruits of their sowings. If the most prominent social set is a patron of the dance, this by no means proves its innocency for there is something in the dance that gratifies the tastes and furnishes supreme amusement to the set at the other extreme of society, and the fact that the fallen patronize it, both for advertisement and amusement, should be enough to condemn it in the eyes of all moral people.

However, should our Church do no more to arrest this evil among our own people than to publish our views of its sinful nature? Shall we excuse ourselves from all responsibility in this matter and leave those of our young people who practice this sin by telling them what we think of it? We are their pastors, a term that carries with it the most solemn duty to God and to our people. We must discipline the erring and the fallen that we may save them; gently, if it will save; severely, if it is necessary. It is a hard task but we dare not evade it. First of all, allow no patron of the ball room a place in the choir, in the board of stewards, as Sunday school teacher, or in any other place of leadership. The Holy Spirit will abide in no congregation where a ball room artist is employed to lead the saints in the worship of song, uttering words in the name of sacred music which she does not believe and out of a soul that cares nothing for the Lord Jesus Christ. She may be the leading soprano of the city, but if she leads holy worship she should be the leading saint of the city, or at least a follower of Christ who hungers for sainthood. Stewards appoint committees on the supply of music, and what a shocking shame they sometimes assemble in the choir. In this matter official boards must no longer stand in the way of faithful pastors organizing their churches on the solitary basis of piety. I know that we have already been so lax in this matter that the correction of our evils will cause in some places no little stir, but we can not lose our souls and wreck our churches in order to escape trouble with the world. May I suggest that every pastor call together his official board and let them pray and talk over this matter? Mr. Wesley and Mr. Asbury both declared that Methodism would suffer religious decay when she ceased to be diligent in the matter of discipline. I trust we will never come to the point when we are so careless about the salvation and sainthood of our people that we will suffer no grief when they go astray. We have no commission to discipline our people for punitive purposes, but we are solemnly bound to discipline them faithfully for saving purposes.

I am firmly convinced, my brethren, that we can risk the success of our ministry and the life and growth of our Church upon the solitary foundation of undivided devotion and unyielding fidelity to our Lord Jesus Christ. Have we faith enough to risk it? May the Lord guide us in all the tragic tasks that come to us, giving us wisdom and courage and faith to administer rightly patience and fidelity into all of our duties that all our people may be saved.

THE OCEAN OF LOVE.

By Wm. C. Allen.

O thou vast Ocean! Ever sounding sea!
Thou symbol of a drear immensity!

—Barry Cornwall.

So seemed the ocean to the gentle English poet. But there is another ocean that has been on my mind of late. It is the immeasurable expanse of Divine Love.

We see the robin fluttering over her nest, the bear caressing her cubs, the mother nurturing her infant, the pure passion of the young Christian for the wife of his youth, the sweet content of the household that has long known Jesus, and in all these is love. But supreme, deeper than all, sweeter than all, more outreaching than all, is the fondness of God for His creation, is the immensity of His affection for the wonderful universe that extends beyond our grasp or sight.

The swell of the Pacific, the moan of the Atlantic, the ice-fringed Antarctic are, in some respects, the antitheses of the glorious ocean of which we speak. God's holy sea is everywhere warm with the breath of heaven. It sometimes seems restless, but that is because our own hearts are ill at ease. The confiding child of God ploughs the quiet waters of faith and exclaims:

"I steer my bark, and sail
On even keel with gentle gale."

If perchance a storm arises on this illimitable expanse, the Master is close to hand. He never ceases to walk upon its waves, and, when His people call, He replies, "Peace, be still." This is a genuine Christian experience. The angel of His presence is continually about us even when we know it not!

The billows of the sea typify His power. At times, they thunder an anthem that ministers to the needs of our passionate hearts. Then again they are still. They lap the golden sands with sweetest music and in soft symphony each ripple whispers the gentleness of God. Even so does this spiritual ocean of our Father speak to us according to our need in seasons of joy or tears. Shall we not listen, listen, listen to what it tells us?

A glimpse of the affection of Jehovah is always refreshing to our souls. The foggy things of materialism and sin hide it from our view. The agony of the world darkens our vision. I remember what George Fox saw in the midst of the bitterness of the political and religious turmoil of the seventeenth century. He wrote: "I saw that there was an ocean of darkness and death, but an infinite ocean of light and love which flowed over the ocean of darkness. And in that I saw the infinite love of God." Is this not true? When men have become drunk with sin and folly, does not God finally intervene? Does not His ocean of light ultimately overflow the sea of darkness? Is there not hope for the world in this?

There is no jetsam or flotsam on this ocean of God's love—its waters are pure and clean. No wreckage is there. The farther we venture out on it the greater we discover it to be. The deeper we go down into its depth the quieter it becomes. Shall we not test its broadness and stillness for ourselves? Shall we not sail far out on its loving bosom and be baptized in its cleansing waves?

There is nothing in the splendor of the universe comparable to God and His love—it is poured into our being. I ask my friends to accept the challenge of their faith that earthly trials produce and boldly launch their little barks onto these sunny waters of God. Trim your sails, catch every breeze from heaven, seize the tiller and steer for the beautiful strand. When the glorious port is reached there will be eternal joy.

THE CHURCH AND PATRIOTISM.

By Rev. C. C. Selecman, D.D.

Whether we are thinking of helping to maintain the morale of our army and supporting a gigantic war machine; or of safeguarding the morale of our soldier sons while in training at home or fighting at the front; or of community welfare when at the close of the war the men shall come thronging back to our cities, villages and rural sections to assume leading roles in civil life; we can see the necessity for the Church of Christ to accept its responsibility in this present crisis. Some denomination will have made a record when the war is over, a record of loyalty, efficiency, service and sacrifice. For such denomination there will be a generous and hospitable place in the confidence of the virile men of America. Will there be any place but a narrow, begrudged sectarian corner for that Church—if such there should be—which is too busy with formal matters and conventional programs to pause and get down in the dust and drudgery of the training camps, yes down in the mud and the blood, down in the stench and the gas of the trenches where men are facing hell and wading through barrage and barbed wire entanglements for the dear cause of human liberty?

Therefore, let pastors and churches now hear the call of our War Work Commission for an emergency fund of three hundred thousand dollars. This is a small sum when equally distributed to all pastoral charges, ranging from $10 up to $300 per charge on a basis of approximately five per cent of the pastor's salary. As Bishop McMurry said in Atlanta, "this money will come easier than any money we have to raise if only the people are given a fair chance." At Trinity Church, Los Angeles, I put an enthusiastic young steward who had done service in the Spanish-American War in charge of a patriotic program, and a sum of more than a thousand dollars was raised for the benefit of a local military contingent which lacked equipment. And when all the day's results were summed up it was found that local funds had actually been helped as a result of the program. In addition to all this, it placed the Church squarely before the community as an institution where patriotism is fostered and where there is a genuine practical interest in the welfare of the soldier. Do you not think such a Church commends itself to the confidence of public-spirited citizens and to the love of parents whose boys are in the service?

Every church, large or small, should have a patriotic program occasionally. For this program the pastor should feel justified in calling upon the most prominent men within reach, soldiers or civilians. In connection with such a service it would be a comparatively easy matter to raise the emergency fund for the War Commission without embarrassing any other financial interest of the Church. In many cases the amount asked will be exceeded. There are societies in many charges that would gladly raise this money. For example, the Sunday school that has a live patriotic superintendent and a service flag bearing a score or more of stars representing "our Sunday school boys," or the Epworth League, whose former president, or leader, is now in service, will gladly undertake it. In still others, the Brotherhood or the Wesley Bible Class or the Board of Stewards will assume leadership in such a commendable enterprise. I would even venture to assert that some member or brother-in-law or friend of every church would individuaully put this matter through if he were asked to do so. Remember this, that in every community there is a wonderful basis of appeal in the example of the boys whose names are on the honor roll of the local church.

One closing suggestion. This is an emergency fund. The emergency is real. The word is upon us now. The demands are many and they are pressing. They can not wait. Men are going over by the tens of thousands. They are going into battle. We must meet the emergency. To have failed to erect a War Work Commission at Atlanta would have been perilous. To fail now to support the Commission by raising this emergency fund would be to forsake our own sons in an hour of need and to mock our own undertakings by failure to complete what we have so well begun.

Bishop Lambuth is now in New York, soon to sail for England and France. While waiting here for passports which we expect any day, I have learned that the Protestant Episcopal Church has had two Bishops in France for months past. When one returned for a brief rest another was dispatched to take his place. The M. E. Church has two Bishops in France and one more will go shortly. I am happy to know that our own Church will be represented in the person of one of our general superintendents, and I rejoice in the privilege of my personal opportunity for service overseas.

Dr. E. O. Watson and others will keep the work going at home. All that now is lacking to enable Southern Methodism to fulfill a grand program of service is for churches to raise this emergency fund and forward it at once. Already many encouraging responses are pouring in. Almost every mail brings checks, drafts, or money orders. When it is all over, no pastor or charge will want to be numbered with those who failed their nation and their Church in an hour of peculiar peril and of abounding opportunity.

OUR BOYS AT THE FRONT.

The War Work Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Bishop W. R. Lambuth, President, has sent out a letter to all our pastors and presiding elders, asking for a special offering of $300,000 to be used by the Commission in the interest of our soldiers and sailors. This was done under the instruction of the Commission.

The request is modest. The need is urgent. The full amount asked should reach the Treasurer, Mr. John Victor, President of the Peoples' National Bank, Lynchburg, Va., at an early date—within 30 days.

There will be no trouble about it if every congregation is given an opportunity to make an offering. Our people are patriotic. There is scarcely a congregation in all our borders that has not been called on to give one or more of its young men. These congregations are following their boys with their prayers, and are ready to give of their substance to carry out the program adopted by the General Conference in their interest. The opportunity should not be denied them.

A failure to do our full duty as a Church in this time of our country's peril would mark us as unworthy the confidence and support of the people after the victory is won. Never in the history of the world has a Government turned to the Church of Jesus Christ as has our Government in this crisis. We must not fail. We will not fail. No congregation, large or small, should be denied the privilege of participating. Let the people have the facts, and an opportunity to contribute, and this small job will be behind us.

W. F. McMURRY.

"Whether or not the world would be vastly benefited by a total and final banishment from it of all intoxicating drinks seems to me now an open question. A GREAT MEETING AT EMORY UNIVERSITY.

A conference of Methodist laymen from the States east of the Mississippi River was held in the chapel of the School of Theology of Emory University, on July 24, to confer with the Commissioners who are conducting the campaign on behalf of the University, and with the Trustees of the institution, with reference to its present needs and future development.

The body was thoroughly representative, among those present being many of the ablest business men in these States.

Judge W. A. Covington, of Moultrice, Georgia, was elected President and Rev. C. C. Jarrell, D.D., Secretary, of the meeting.

The immediate needs of the University are additional buildings on the campus in the Druid Hill Park, Atlanta, Georgia, for the Collegiate Department of the institution, which will be removed from Oxford to Atlanta at the close of the school year 1918-19. It is estimated that these buildings will cost approximately $185,000, of which amount the sum of $35,000 is already in the treasury.

The Conference considered carefully all these needs, and while the meeting was not called for the purpose of making appeals for funds, but for seeking counsel of wise men, donations aggregating more than $30,000 were made during the session.

The Conference was asked to consider especially the action of the General Conference authorizing and directing a campaign to raise, during the next four years, $5,000,000 for the University and to advise concerning the best way for projecting and prosecuting this great movement.

In response to this request, a committee was appointed to consider the whole subject, and this committee presented an able report, which was adopted with enthusiasm.

The report as adopted said:

"It is of the very first importance that some definite and practicable plan be devised for the speedy accomplishment of this great end. We have the stimulus and the inspiration for this worthy task, in the urgent need of a real university of commanding influence in this section of our country.

"We have the resources in the present and ever-increasing wealth of our people, and we have the encouragement for earnest endeavor in the wonderful success already achieved through the generous gifts of a few noble and consecrated benefactors.

"The movement looking to the realization of this high purpose is timely. We are at the threshold of a new era. There is a sense in which it is proper to say that the world must be rebuilt.

"The world's confusion is indeed the Church's opportunity. The next decade will determine the character of our civilization for centuries.

"If we are to conserve and make enduring our Christian ideals, we must control and direct the mighty transforming forces which center in and emanate from our colleges and universities.

"The history and traditions of our beloved Church commit us irrevocably to the work before us, and we must not suffer the reproach of failing to meet adequately the demands of these momentous times.

"We recommend, therefore:

"1. That the policy of keeping before our people the claims and needs of the University by thoroughly competent and zealous commissioners be continued.

"2. That all our people heed this call as the call of God and the country; that every man give as he is able, and that those who are able to make large contributions remember that no university was ever built without large gifts from a comparatively small number of men.

"3. That the University in its organization, and plans and purposes, be so ordered that it will make a constant appeal to all noble and patriotic sentiments.

"4. That a campaign committee be constituted to arrange all details necessary for a thorough canvass of our territory without delay. That the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Emory University be this Committee together with such other men as they shall select to serve with them.

"5. That every pastor in our section of the Church be asked to present from his pulpit, in an informing and inspiring way, the scope and needs of this University."

With these conclusions of the Conference, the Trustees and Commissioners present were entirely agreed, and the Campaign Committee will be constituted at an early day.

This is the second Conference of the sort which has been held at the University, and both meetings have been most delightful and useful. When our able men see the broad foundations which have been laid and comprehend the scope proposed for the University, they are moved by what has been achieved already and by what is manifestly now within the reach of our Church. They perceive the greatness and importance of the enterprise, and are willing to put forth their efforts most zealously in its behalf. It appeals to them as an enterprise big enough to be worthy of their most generous support. They observe that the institution is one which will endure through all the years with ever-increasing influence throughout the South.

It was stated to the Conference that the assets of Emory University now amount to $3,500,000, and that it owes nothing more than the usual obligations for current expenses such as an enterprise of this kind always has and which may be discharged at any moment. This result, achieved in the short space of four years (the University was founded July 17, 1914) is very wonderful, indeed, and especially in view of the fact that the four years have been years of war and financial unrest and uncertainty.

The Conferences held during the years 1917 and 1918 have been so interesting and inspiring, a resolution was passed requesting the authorities of the University to make the meeting an annual celebration of the Foundation of the University, and hold it each year in the future on July 17, unless that day should occur on Sunday.

In the notable meeting just held, there were men from Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia. Its influence, it is believed, will be felt throughout the entire region east of the Mississippi. Among those who made generous donations were laymen from Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, and South Carolina.

It is not permitted to print the names of the donors but it is not improper to say that the gifts ranged from $25 to $10,000, and only two were for a less amount than $1000. One brother gave $10,000, two brothers gave $5000 each, nine gave $1000 each, two $500 each, and one $200. Men gave as the Lord had prospered them, and gave with glad hearts and free.

It is believed that other gifts will speedily follow as the result of the meeting.

A strong committee considered carefully the immediate and urgent needs of the University during the next twelve months, and recommended the erection of three new buildings by the first of September, 1919, at a cost of $185,000, and the committee further recommended that a canvass for this sum be prosecuted by designated Commissioners without delay.

As has been said the sum of $35,000 is already in hand, and more than $30,000 was contributed at the meeting. There remains, therefore, to be raised the sum of $120,000. This amount will surely be raised at once, and of course it will be reckoned as a part of the $5,000,000 which the General Conference ordered to be raised during the current quadrennium.

Surely the membership of our Church in the region east of the Mississippi River, seeing that we are in reach of a really great University, will not delay to carry forward this great enterprise to complete success.

THE METHODIST CABINET.

By Rev. A. H. Williams.

A place in the work of the Church for every saved individual is a binding obligation in God's plan for developing a great people, and for extending his kingdom in the world. Other conditions, of course, are implied, but "Go ye also into the vineyard" is an essential; and, says the Word, "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

The minister is not an exception to this rule. He, too, has his place and mission, and if God has "called" him, he can "find a way, or make a way." The Author of the call would be unjust to him, as he would be to any Christian worker, to provide for him a "Salvation-made-easy" plan of entrance to the ministry and to success in his appointed duties. "These are they which come out of much tribulation," is the final compliment at the day of rewards, and no special question will be propounded, at that time, as to whether the expounder of the Word has wrought at the First Metropolitan on $4000 per annum, or at Grundy Mission on $350, provided he has "fought a good fight." God knows his own, and the angels come to the mountain small chapel just the same as to the city auditorium. "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase." "Was he of Nazareth or of Damascus?" found no place when the everlasting gates were lifted, and the King of glory came into his eternal triumphs.

The Grundy pastor, however, may not greatly desire to return to his present charge. Perhaps he should not. A good and true man may be damaged by being kept too long at a trying post of duty, not for any defective interest for the post, but out of consideration for the man. And then the man on $4000 is at the peril of classifying himself as being "superior dirt" by reason of his continued prominence and big pay.

Men of the ministry differ, of course, and so also do pastoral charges. A "silver trumpet" may do the work of a "ram's horn," but not always may the order be reversed for the good of God's Church, nor even for the good of the minister himself. But a chance for life and an opportunity for growth are needed by all alike.

"The fittest will survive," it is suggested; but this applies only in part. Proper stationing has much to do with church surviving, and also with growth for the man of the pulpit. Too many burdens too long endured by a pastor, or by a pastoral charge, must produce damage and prevent progress. Take a Bishop, even, and place him at Wool Sack Circuit on $200 per year, and instantly he is needing a double portion of Divine grace. A city home with $4000, is a large item, and helps immensely to carry burdens. And $4000 is small, of course, considering the large service to be rendered, and the compelling much of expense. But remove the sufficient salary, and let the minister become simply John Brown, on $200, without name and special consideration, "little and unknown, loved and prized of God alone," and then it comes to pass that "grit and grace," with every good preparation, are at a premium. The timbers of his structure are seriously tested, and the same process continued must, in time, crush the man of even "flint-and steel." Men, in instances, make opportunities, but more often do opportunities make men.

The Methodist Church is doing well, and promises to become yet more a factor in disseminating the Word of life, until the truth of God shall have been spoken around the globe, and until the knowledge of Christ shall fill the earth. Any weakened faith in the "stationing power" must do grave damage, and produce exceeding unrest among the churches, and among the men of the ministry.

In providing for the pastoral charges it is natural to be solicitous, first, for the more prominent and better-paying congregations; and in stationing two men of equal merit it is easy for "the Elder," and for the Bishop, to remember the one of these most fully in mind, and to leave the other to the good mercies of whatever may occur, and all this without wrong intention and in perfect innocency, except that men charged with duties so responsible are supposed to be awake fully to the needs of every pastoral charge alike, and to the needs, as well, of every man of the pastorate who is committed for assignment.

A great business of the Church is to produce preachers, as well as to develop pastoral charges. The working forces of the kingdom, both as to ministers and congregation, must have consideration; not simply is the dispenser of divine truth developed and brought to best efficiency by ordinary education, and by instructions at the "Institute," but also by prudent stationing among the churches. The greatest "Seminary" may not produce a full-fledged man of the ministry, important as is this preliminary preparation. Finest fruit trees are not grown entirely in the nursery.

Many times a good charge should take a competent pastor who has "endured hardness" to his financial hurt, and the well-fixed preacher many times needs a large opportunity with smaller salary. This would be wise and just, unless we insist that a hungry man should eat little for the reason that already he is famished, and that a well fed minister should be sumptuously provided for because of the fact that already he is abundantly supplied; this, at least, unless it be true that the Bible teaching, "Bear ye one another's burdens," does not apply to men in the ministry.

The men of the pulpit, along with the best educators and very greatest statesmen, do not serve for money as a first consideration, but even a racing horse, of finest blood, must perish from extra work and too little in feed for too long a time; equally is it true that too much in continued plenty, and the added service, must unfit for the best efficiency and largest usefulness.

The American Methodist churches have developed a good percentage of valiant and well-trained men of the ministerial office by means of rather much in abstemious habits, and a few in very many of the Conferences have been well provided for with less than greatest good to themselves and with something in damage to the cause of Christ, and injury to the less-favored men of smaller opportunity.

The aphorisms, "a lean dog for a good race," and "a hungry soldier for a good fight," are honoring, in a sense, and comforting (?), but previous good treatment is implied in each case, and it still remains true that "extremes are dangerous."

Also it is written, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you," under like conditions, "do ye even so to them."

A LETTER FROM THE ARMY.

Dear Mr. Editor: I would like to send a message through the columns of our paper to the friends and loved ones "back home." A preacher in the ranks of the army seems to be a rare thing here, but Company 6 has one at least, myself, a Methodist preacher from Newton District, Mississippi Conference.

In the first place, I want to say that the Y. M. C. A. deserves the highest praise for the work they do here. Theirs is the first friendly hand extended to the new comer. As soon as new men arrive here they are taken to the Y. M. C. A. tent where they are furnished paper, envelopes, stamps and pencils and are required to write a letter to the homefolks enclosing a letter from the commanding officer explaining conditions here.

The soldiers are well fed and equipped and every precaution is taken to insure health and happiness. Good, wholesome forms of recreation are furnished in order to "cheer up" the boys.

I am sorry to say that the men as a whole are not religious. We hear lots of cursing and bad language, but I have an idea that the men who are cursing here cursed when they were at home. In my own tent the five men besides myself all cursed at first, but every night after mess I read aloud a chapter from the Bible and pray. Last night I pleaded with my boys to leave off cursing and every man in my tent gave me a solemn promise not to curse any more; and their promises have not yet been broken in my hearing. Praise God for that much! and I'm humbly praying that every man in Tent 35, Company 6 (my tent) shall be converted before we go to France. You pastors, pray for us, and insist on your people's praying for us. Drop a card with a word of exhortation to any one that you know in camp. The men will appreciate it and great good may be done. You home folks, write us cheerful letters and send them often; just a few lines every few days will cheer us up wonderfully.

Well, I must cut my letter short—a soldier hasn't much time to write. I hope, Mr. Editor, you can give space for this. I will not see it in print unless you send me an extra copy, for my paper goes to my home address at Pelahatchie, Miss.

I would appreciate getting cards from any one who cares to write to me here and will answer as many as possible. The address must be given in full as I give it below.

Don't forget us when you pray; and if it isn't asking too much will you make a special prayer for the men of Tent 35, Company 6?

Yours truly,

MARVIN K. MILLER.

EVERY PRESIDING ELDER INVITED PRESENT.

In point of spiritual fervor and holy enthusiasm, there never has been a more successful and joyous meeting than the conference of the presiding elders, pastors, laymen and lay women of the Missouri, Southwest Missouri, St. Louis, Illinois and Denver Conferences, held July 30-Aug. 1, in Centenary Church, St. Louis, Mo., which was called by Bishop W. B. Murrah, who is in charge of the Sixth Episcopal District, to study and plan for the great Centenary of Missions in our Church. Every one of the presiding elders of the above-named Conferences, and several from other Conferences, were present. Laymen from a great distance broke important business engagements to be present. The good women of the missionary societies of the several Conferences contributed much to the success of the meeting.

Hear a few testimonies: Rev. Clarence Burton, of Sikeston, Mo., said: "This conference has wonderfully impressed me. It was a season of refreshing from the Lord. The Centenary of Missions is the biggest program ever put on by our Church and if other regional conferences will be as enthusiastic as the one just closed in St. Louis, every measure proposed in the Centenary plan will be carried out."

Rev. H. P. Crowe, presiding elder of the Farmington District, St. Louis Conference, bore testimony to the fact that "this is one of the greatest conferences I ever attended and a remarkable fact is that every presiding elder invited to be present was at the meeting. The program was intelligently presented by our leaders and I rejoice at the enthusiasm shown by preachers and laymen in the Centenary Movement."

Bishop James Atkins, with glowing face, stated: "This conference again proves that there is a God for this hour and that nothing is impossible with him. I am glad I could be at this conference with my honored colleagues, Bishops Hendrix, Murrah, McMurry and Ainsworth. The conference was inspirational, instructive and spiritual, and there is no doubt in my mind that our great Church will mobilize her spiritual forces and that our centennial celebration will be a triumphant success."

The other Bishops present also expressed themselves confident of victory in the greatest undertaking ever enterprised by the Church.

Mr. John R. Pepper, of Memphis, Tenn., said: "The enthusiasm shown by the presiding elders, pastors, laymen and the consecrated women present at this conference is fresh proof to me that our centenary program will go 'over the top.' Bishops, presiding elders, pastors, laymen and lay women were alert to every phase of the work to be undertaken and I am sure they will return to their charges with an intelligent grasp of the campaign so finely planned. Such a meeting as this means the reaching of the last member of every church in the Connection. It is indeed applied religion in a thorough-going way."

Every address delivered by the Bishops and others was a call to the Church for the cultivation of her spiritual resources and the promotion of the recognition and practice of stewardship of life and substance.

Rev. F. T. Keeney, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Syracuse, N. Y., who was instrumental under God's blessing in securing the full quota of tithers in the Central New York Conference, and Rev. E. G. Richardson, district superintendent of the Brooklyn North District, visited the conference and imparted valuable information.

The following Centenary Commission was appointed by Bishop Murrah: President, Bishop W. B. Murrah; Vice President, Rev. W. T. McClure; Secretary, Rev. Clarence Burton.

Denver Conference—Rev. R. E. Dickenson, Messrs. J. R. Killian and J. R. Shivers.

Missouri Conference—Rev. A. C. Johnson, Messrs. Paul M. Culver and A. E. Richardson.

Southwest Missouri Conference—Rev. W. T. McClure, Messrs. W. J. Campbell and Burt S. Lee.

St. Louis Conference—Rev. Clarence Burton, Messrs. J. D. Baker and R. D. Lewis.

The St. Louis pastors were untiring in their attention to their guests and expressed themselves as delighted with the attendance of the St. Louis Methodists at all sessions.

In brief, all who attended the conference left with the determination to secure large numbers for the fellowship of intercession; to work for the enrollment of all as Christian stewards and to plan for definite work in public presentations during the campaign.

The next conference will be held in September, in Dallas, Tex.

A PROGRESSIVE PASTOR.

Dear Brother Carley: For the past two weeks it has been my privilege to assist in the Gasque Chapel and the Homewood meetings with Brother M. L. White, the faithful, diligent, and painstaking pastor. Fourteen years ago, when a "boy preacher," I helped him on the Walnut Grove charge in fourteen meetings. I was then impressed with his progressive way of doing things. He was all over the country, preaching, holding meetings, receiving people into the Church, and organizing churches. I find him doing the same thing now. One reason I write this is to mention his work with the young people in the "Teacher-training" course. It was my privilege to address a class of seven the other night, when they received their diplomas. Two others on the charge have received diplomas, and still others will finish the course soon. Now, if this pastor can do this out here in a country circuit, ten miles from the railroad, why can't we have more graduates—trained teachers—in our Mississippi Conference? I was very much impressed with the service and predict for the Sunday schools on the Homewood charge a great future. We must have trained leaders in every department of our church work. Let us all follow Brother White's example.

GOOD NEWS FROM COMMISSIONER SELBY.

My Dear Brother Carley: I have received some splendid contributions for Emory University during the past few days. Brother James Hand, of Purvis, is the largest contributor so far—$5000. With the $1000 previously donated, he is to be credited with $6000. Brother L. N. Dantzler has made another thousand dollar contribution, thus making $2500 so far.

One of the very best contributions I have received is that of $500 from Dr. W. P. Gray, of Waynesboro. This is made notwithstanding the doctor enters the service of his country right away.

ROBT. SELBY,

ASSESSMENT FOR EDUCATION PAID.

Dear Brother Carley: I have just received check for educational assessment for Friar's Point, Miss. Brother A. S. Raper is our pastor there.

IN MEMORIAM.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

"Friend after friend departs." The year has hardly more than half gone, yet the gaps in the ranks made by the fallen heroes, both men and women, are conspicuous. David Sullins, D.D., "the old man eloquent," of the Holston Conference, has passed over the river. What a host doubtless welcomed him in the "land that is fairer than day!" W. S. Harrison, D.D., poet, philosopher, theologian, farmer, nobleman, has ascended to learn the secrets of the sky, glimpses of which his musical genius disclosed while still here below. If he had lived in Massachusetts instead of Mississippi, he would have had a national, instead of a merely provincial, fame; which speaks well for Massachusetts and is hard on Mississippi. It takes brains to appreciate such a poem as "The Supremacy of Life." If Milton is in heaven, I fancy he and Harrison are congenial spirits there. And S. M. Thames has joined the hosts above. There was a man for you! Not brilliant, but strong and true, courageous and faithful, common sense in breeches! He was a clear thinker. His logic was a sledge hammer. He lisped, and it gave flavor to his speech. Methodism and Mississippi owe much to this stalwart champion of the Christian order of the world.

It is going back some time, but let me lay a flower on the tomb of Dr. Felix R. Hill, Sr. I believe his entire ministry, with possibly one or two breaks, was spent in the pastorate. So it was with some of our strongest men, like Leroy M. Lee, and John E. Edwards, and R. N. Siedd, of Virginia, and so on. We probably never had a more beloved man, or one less ambitious for place. When John R. Deering, of Kentucky, got to heaven, I am sure there was a shout among the sons of glory! Perhaps that grand old hero, Bishop Kavanaugh, led the hallelujah, and Hiner, and Messick, and all the Blue Grass choir! The last time I saw him we did not finish our talk. I'm anxious to renew it, and will by and by. Amen!

Here in Mansfield I am reminded of another friend and faithful soldier of the Cross, inconspicuous in the roll of fallen heroes, to whose memory our official records pay scant regard; but whose devotion and useful service in the Church well deserve a tribute of love. I mean Rev. T. H. Morris. I had the pleasure of knowing this good man many years, and of noting his fine service and effective ministry. He was born in Elberton, Ga., in 1862, but was reared in Elizabethtown, Ky. Before he began preaching he was engaged in editing and publishing several papers, but feeling that he was called to a higher work, he joined the Louisville Conference in 1897, and served Mansville Circuit, and Smith's Grove, and then was sent to the home of his boyhood, Elizabethtown, where he built the "Lucinda B. Helm Memorial Church." It was there that my acquaintance with Brother Morris began, and our friendship was born of the goodly fellowship we enjoyed. He was then physically strong, and in the full prime of his useful life. After serving the "Marcus Lindsey Memorial Church" in Louisville, Bishop Key requested his transfer to the Texas Conference, and he was stationed at Palestine. From that work, he went as presiding elder of the Tyler District. After that he was pastor at Bryan, Texas, where he did a fine work. Bishop Mouzon then transferred him to the Louisiana Conference, and sent him to Mansfield. He was here four years, and left a gracious memory of his useful ministry

Brother Morris' health began to fail here. The root of the trouble seemed to be malaria, but it took the distressing form of a facial paralysis that affected his speech. He was sent to Monroe for one year, but in the second year had to stop and try to recover. He came to Shreveport for awhile, and I was hopeful he would master the disease. But all effort was in vain. After bravely battling with his affliction, he went to Dallas, where he quietly laid off the armor he had so faithfully worn for twenty-one years, and went home to God. Brother Morris was happily married to Miss Josie Rouse, of Louisville, Ky. Sister Morris survives him, together with a son, and three married daughters, and his aged mother. I never heard him preach, for he always made me preach for him when I was in his charge. But the works he served, and the testimony of those who did hear him, show that he was a preacher of unusual ability. From what I knew of him, however, I think his chief forte was as a pastor. He got hold of the hearts of his people. He did a great work here in Mansfield. He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

So they pass and are no more seen in the walks of men. And we forget them so soon! But they are with God, and the amaranth that never fades encircles their brows, and they find high employment in the sky, and await our coming after awhile. There is no malaria to poison the air of "the sweet fields beyond the swelling flood;" no paralytic stroke to hush the tongue that makes the music of heaven; no sickness to interfere with the glorious service of the "saints to glory gone!" And when I think of the goodly society of those I have known and loved here below, I, like Paul, am almost in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and be with Christ and those celestial friends.

GENERAL CONFERENCE ACTION ON THE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL.

Methodism was born in a university and has always put high emphasis on education. In the extent of its holdings and the number of its students it is probably the leading denomination in our country. At the same time our Church has known how to make use of the unlearned man with a sound religious experience and a genuine call to preach. More and more our Church is emphasizing college and seminary training for our ministry. For those who cannot take their studies in residence, no better method of mastering the four years' conference course of study than the Correspondence School has been devised. The great majority of our preachers have enjoyed its benefits. Its methods of study are vastly superior to the necessarily hasty and superficial work of examination at the Annual Conference. Hundreds of unsolicited testimonials from our preachers certify to their profit under its instruction. Our recent General Conference, following the recommendation of a number of Annual Conferences, was so impressed with these facts that it very wisely made compulsory attendance on the Correspondence School for all undergraduate preachers. The Conference also ordered that the work of the School hereafter should be done at two different points, namely, at the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, Texas, and at Emory University at Atlanta, Georgia. Those students west of the Mississippi are to do their work through the School at Dallas and those east of the Mississippi through the School at Atlanta. This new arrangement will become operative on the first of September. On and after that date students west of the river will address all their communications to Correspondence School, Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas, and those east of the river will send theirs to Correspondence School, Emory University, Georgia (leaving off in the address Atlanta. This will insure quicker delivery of mail).

The work of instruction will be done by the full professors of the theological faculties of the two universities. Our students will thus receive the highest official instruction in our Church. There will also be great benefits to the universities from this regular articulation between them and every undergraduate preacher in our connection.

I am glad to be able to announce also that Prof. J. L. Cunninggim has been elected Director of the Correspondence School at Southern Methodist University and that Dr. C. C. Jarrell has been elected Director of the Correspondence School at Emory University. Prof. Cunninggim is well known to the Church, having been the founder and for a number of years the director of the Correspondence School when it was located at Vanderbilt University, for which service he deserves the thanks of the Church. He is now an esteemed member of the faculty of the Southern Methodist University. Dr. Jarrell is a prominent and honored member of the North Georgia Conference and is known to the Church for his past work as pastor and author. He has been for several years the Commissioner of Emory University for the North Georgia Conference.

By direction of the General Conference, the undersigned will have general oversight of the two Correspondence Schools, though most of his time is to be devoted to ministerial supply and religious education.

Will not our presiding elders, our Conference committees, and other friends interested notify expected candidates for admission on trial and other undergraduates of these new regulations so that they may enroll promptly and complete their course of study in time? These new regulations are to take effect in each Annual Conference with the beginning of the new Conference year.

Some of the brethren have asked, if all undergraduates are now to take their studies through the Correspondence School, what is there left for the Annual Conference committee to do? The answer is that the Discipline still leaves the Annual Conference committee supreme. They are the judges of each student's work and if they consider that a student is not qualified to advance, they can refuse to advance him although he may have a certificate from the Correspondence School. The law of the Church still requires all undergraduates to appear before their Annual Conference committees for examination. The committees can make this examination as brief or as extensive as they think wise. It seems to me that the purport of the legislation is for the Conference committees, unless they think advisable to make exceptions in special cases, to accept the work of the Correspondence School as showing the technical knowledge of the subject by the student. And the committees can examine and advise the brethren as to their ideals of the ministry, their methods of work, their habits of study, and their general personality; that is to say, to continue the same investigation of a man during his four years of study that the committee on admissions exercises when he applies for admission on trial. There is a wide field just here for usefulness both to our young brethren and to the Church.

WAR CONDITIONS
—REFLECTED IN—
TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

Notes and Comment

The New Liberty Loan.

Secretary McAdoo has announced that the campaign for the fourth liberty loan will begin Saturday, September 28, and continue three weeks, ending October 19. The amount of the loan will probably be $6,000,000,000 and the rate of interest which the bonds will bear 4½ per cent. There is no fear that the loan will not be promptly over-subscribed.

Cotton Crop Smaller.

The August report of the Department of Agriculture on the cotton crop condition shows a loss of 1,616,000 bales, as compared with the July report. The deterioration is due largely to the drouth that has prevailed for several weeks over the cotton belt. The estimate now is 73.6 per cent of a normal crop, against the July estimate of 85.8. The short crop that now seems likely will probably not cause the grower much loss, the increased price offsetting the decreased number of bales. There is something, after all, in the law of compensation.

What It Is Costing.

A recent official statement says that the war is costing Great Britain $34,920,000 a day, or $1,455,000 every hour, or nearly $25,000 a minute. It is costing the United States about $50,000,000 a day, or a little over $2,000,000 an hour, or nearly $35,000 a minute. The British casualties for July were 67,291; the total of the casualty list for the United States was reported on July 31 as 12,318. This is a big price in money and men and it is becoming greater all the time, but—"a pearl of great price is not to be had for the asking." We can and will pay all it costs to make the world fit to live in.

The Submarine Menace Being Overcome.

Sir Eric Geddes, first lord of the British admiralty, gave the House of Commons last week a review of the shipping situation now as compared with a year ago. Then the net loss in tonnage was 550,000 gross tons monthly; submarines were not being destroyed as fast as the Germans were building them; merchant shipyards were short of men and material. Now the situation is changed in many respects. Instead of losing tonnage, during the last quarter there has been a gain of something like 100,000 tons a month. This result has been obtained by decreased sinkings and increased buildings. The submarine has not been wholly overcome, but we no longer fear it as a decisive factor in the war.

The War Situation.

The war situation in France continues to be favorable to the Allies. The Germans have used every effort to maintain their ground, but under the driving attacks of our forces, have been pushed gradually back. There has been no indication of a rout, but in the fiercest kind of hand-to-hand fighting, as well as in artillery and infantry attacks, the Allied troops have shown their superiority over the Teutonic forces. The usual excuse, that the retreat is a part of the strategy of the German commanders, is being used to convince the German people that their army is still victorious and invincible. The Allied commanders, however, without making any boasts, seem to be very well satisfied with the course of events. We are prepared to hear at any time of some decisive action.

Turkey, Too.

Although it has not been officially confirmed, news has come that Turkey has broken official relations with Germany. In explanation of the break, it is said that the Turkish officials have come to resent the domineering ways of the Germans and have blamed them for the lack of food and other supplies in Turkey as well as the reverses suffered by the Turkish arms. They believe they are being impoverished by the Germans in the effort to provide food for the Teutonic soldiers and civil population. They claim, also, that Germany failed to keep her promise of aid against the British in Palestine and Mesopotamia. This is merely another illustration of German's utter selfishness in her attitude toward all the nations of the earth. The trouble is that Turkey has found it out too late.

They Must Know a Good Deal.

A report from the American field hospitals in France says that when a wounded German officer is captured and has to go on the operating table, before ether is administered he begins counting "one, two, three," monotonously but with an earnestness indicative of his concentration. The explanation given by the nurses is that the average person talks when under an anaesthetic; the German knows this, and instead of talking and giving information, he keeps on counting. We admire the determination he shows in keeping the enemy from getting information, but we imagine if he would talk, he would tell many a story of discouragement and despair that would be worth as much to our men as the revelation of military secrets. Enough information has already come through the lines to show that the German morale is not what it was in the beginning of the war.

No Place for a Congressman.

News dispatches last week announced that a party of six American congressmen had witnessed from a hillside some severe fighting on the Aisne-Marne front. The report naively says: "The congressmen probably would have remained on the eminence longer had not the German heavy shells begun exploding overhead. That ended the sightseeing trip in that vicinity, one congressman remarking that the Germans could quit that sort of business right then so far as he was concerned." We do not blame the congressman for his natural trepidation under such circumstances; he was not there as a combatant but as an on-looker, that he might learn that which would make him a better legislator at home for winning the war. But we cannot help thinking of the thousands of brave men who, in trenches and shell holes, hold their ground in spite of the murderous assaults of the enemy; who have won imperishable glory by driving on in the face of shot and shell and gas and all the horrors of war.

Under Government Control.

The Postoffice Department of the United States Government assumed possession, control and supervision of the telephone and telegraph systems of the country at midnight, July 31. This step was in keeping with congressional action and presidential proclamation. Postmaster General Burleson has announced that until further notice the companies will continue operation in the ordinary course through the regular channels, and that all officers and employees will continue in the performance of their present duties on the same terms of employment. The plan is, however, to coordinate the facilities of the various companies for the best interest of the public and the stockholder. This action is in keeping with the Government's determination to bring under its control every agency that is essential for the proper conduct of the war when it becomes evident that private control would interfere with progress. The selfishness and inefficiency of private individuals will not be allowed to hinder the program for winning the war. Government control will probably work hardship and inconvenience in some cases, but every loyal citizen is willing to do his part for the good of all. The Government at least will not attempt profiteering.

This is War.

We have known it all along, but to see the bald statement of it in print makes us shudder: the ultimate military objective of both sides in the great battle now raging in Europe is to kill—to destroy the fighting power of the other; all the energies of mankind to-day are centered upon the accomplishment of this terrible task—the destruction of human life. When we think of it in general terms, it is awful. But after all, it is well. There are some things that are worth infinitely more than life. When the attainment of those things hinges upon the sacrifice of life, we cannot hesitate. "Better a live dog than a dead lion" is a coward's expression of a most contemptible philosophy of life. When the maintenance of self-respect, the welfare of our children, the sanctity of our homes, the preservation of liberty, the freedom of conscience make it necessary, it is not only permissible to kill—it becomes a duty. The allied nations of the earth are not violating fundamental morality in their efforts to destroy the enemies of civilization—they are observing it; even Jehovah commanded the Israelites to destroy utterly their enemies. It is the last resort of outraged humanity. We reverently pray for the success of our arms. But personal hatred has no place in our hearts.

THE CREED CHANGED BY GENERAL CONFERENCE IN 1854.

Dear Brother Carley: I desire to thank Brother Geo. H. Thompson for the information he gives in regard to the change in the Apostles' Creed effected by the General Conference in 1854. I searched the index of the Journal of several sessions of that body and failed to find anything concerning the Creed. I did not have Dr. Peterson's History of the Revisions of the Discipline at hand.

It occurred to me after reading Brother Thompson's statement that I might find the matter under the head of "Revisals," and I found it. In the Journal of 1854, page 362, it is recorded: "Report No. 4 of the Committee on Revisals, was taken up and acted upon item by item." Among the items was this: "On page 114 (Discipline), fourteenth line from the top—strike out 'Holy Catholic Church,' and insert 'the Church of God,' and omit the foot note." The item was adopted. That settles the question as to the authority by which the change from "Holy Catholic Church" to "the Church of God," was made. But it does not settle the question as to the original form of the Apostles' Creed. It simply shows that the General Conference of 1854 rejected the form of the Creed as originally held by Methodism, and as I understand is held to-day by all Christians who use the Creed at all.

WE MUST DO OR DIE.

By Bishop U. V. W. Darlington.

The Centenary Celebration of Missions is the unmistakable call of God to our Church. The time has come for us to give ourselves to the task assigned us. While we have an honorable record in missionary endeavor, yet we have by no means measured up to our ability. In this celebration we have an opportunity such as we have never had to fix the heart and thought of the Church upon the world's need of our Christ.

The doors of the world are open to us and the needs are much greater than we are able to conceive. Our possession and the world's need makes the obligation a binding one. The suffering world needs our Christ, and we have the means to meet those needs. What will become of us if we do not discharge our obligations?

The time has come for us to do or die.

STRAIGHT TRAFFIC.

"Father," said Ernest, as he rode downtown in New Haven beside Dr. Benton in the automobile, "why are you always laying so much emphasis upon habits? I think you're asking me to take a pretty long look ahead. Shouldn't a fellow have a few years in which he can be care free? It doesn't seem to me that a young fellow should take life as seriously as you are trying to make me take it. I want to have my four years in college care free, without everlastingly thinking of consequences. If I need to, I can turn over a new leaf when I get through college."

As Ernest finished his protest they were just approaching the corner of Chapel and Church Streets. About twenty-five feet from the corner they passed a traffic signpost that read, "Straight Traffic at Next Corner."

"What does that sign mean?" asked the doctor, for he was from out of town and had not seen it before.

"It means," said his son, "that now you've passed that post you have to go straight ahead. You can't stop, and you can't turn."

"Well, I guess," said the doctor, as his machine shot out of the traffic into the open street ahead, "that's as good an illustration as I need. Ernest, I've been practicing medicine long enough to have seen a good many sides of life, and the more I see of it the more I'm convinced that it's pretty much like that traffic post—once you get beyond a certain point with some things there's no stopping. You simply have to go right through. The drink habit or the drug habit is an example. I don't suppose anyone who started out with a friendly glass now and then thought he was going to end with delirium tremens. But before he knew it, he ran by the last point of recovery, just as I ran by that signpost, and after that it was 'straight traffic at the next corner' for him.

"It reminds me of one time when I took the wrong train at New York. I wanted to get off at Norwalk, but I'd got on a through express to New Haven, and to New Haven I went. First you take the train; then the train takes you. The time to do your thinking about your destination is before you take the train. You say you don't want to be everlastingly thinking of consequences while you're in college. Well, it's because I don't want you to have to think everlastingly about consequences after you get out of college that I am warning you to be careful now. The turning over a new-leaf idea is a snare laid by the devil. What you've written by habit in your nervous system is written, and it's always there either as an ally or as an enemy. Don't run past the signposts, and then expect nature to reverse the traffic regulations for your benefit. Beyond a certain point it's 'straight traffic at the next corner' for us all."—Youth's Companion.

THE ONE WHO WAS REALLY BRAVE.

"Elton Tilton is just the bravest boy you ever saw, mother," said Winfred. "One day a big dog came along with his tongue hanging out, and we thought it was mad, and scrambled over the fence; but Elton walked right along as calm as ever. He says he isn't afraid of bears or tramps or anything. I wish I was as brave as Elton, but I'm afraid I never will be."

"I heard a story about two boys the other day," said his mother, "and I thought one of them was very brave. They went to school together, and one day they thought it would be great fun to hide a frog in the teacher's desk. But the frog tipped over the ink bottle, and spoiled a number of examination papers and other things, and the teacher was very angry. He asked the guilty boy to own his fault like a man and take the punishment he deserved. He put him upon his honor, you see. Well, the oldest boy who found the frog and first thought of the joke, sat still in his seat without a blush; but the little boy, though he trembled with fear, went to the desk before the whole school and owned his fault. And he sat for an hour on the dunce's stool, a target for fifty pairs of eyes."

"O mother," cried Winfred, "I was so ashamed! I'll never do anything so mean again as long as I live. How did you know?"

"I heard two boys talking about it as I rode in the car. I was proud of my boy, Winfred; and I pitied Elton Tilton's mother, for I said to myself; 'My boy was brave, but her boy was a coward.'"

"Why, I never thought that was being brave!" said Winfred.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

THE DOG THAT SAVED A SOLDIER.

Attached to a French command was a dog named Michael, larger, stronger, more intelligent than the others and of a gentle nature that made him a general favorite. Michael, although most "sociable," centered his affections upon a young French soldier named Henri. Every day at the soup hour Michael would appear carrying a tin can and place it beside Henri, who would fill it as he did his own, and they would dine together.

The day came, however, when Henri failed to return, and as the men stumbled back again to safety Michael scanned with anxious eyes each pale, haggard face, his sensitive nostrils quivering with dread.

When the last man had been accounted for and Henri was still missing, the animal darted toward the battlefield, and after some time returned, greatly excited and carrying an old half glove which belonged to his friend. He could scarcely wait for the attendants to bring a litter before he started off again, his great intelligent eyes imploring them to hurry.

In a remote part of the field they found the young fellow lying still and cold. After a hasty examination the attendants left him for dead, hurrying away to succor the living, but Michael refused to be convinced. Being left alone, he mounted his solitary guard, his face almost humanly expressive of grief.

The attack took place about sundown and it was not until late that night that comparative quiet had settled down upon the trenches.

Suddenly the moon flashed from behind a cloud, and the alert sentinel peered sharply about, then brought his rifle swiftly to his shoulder.

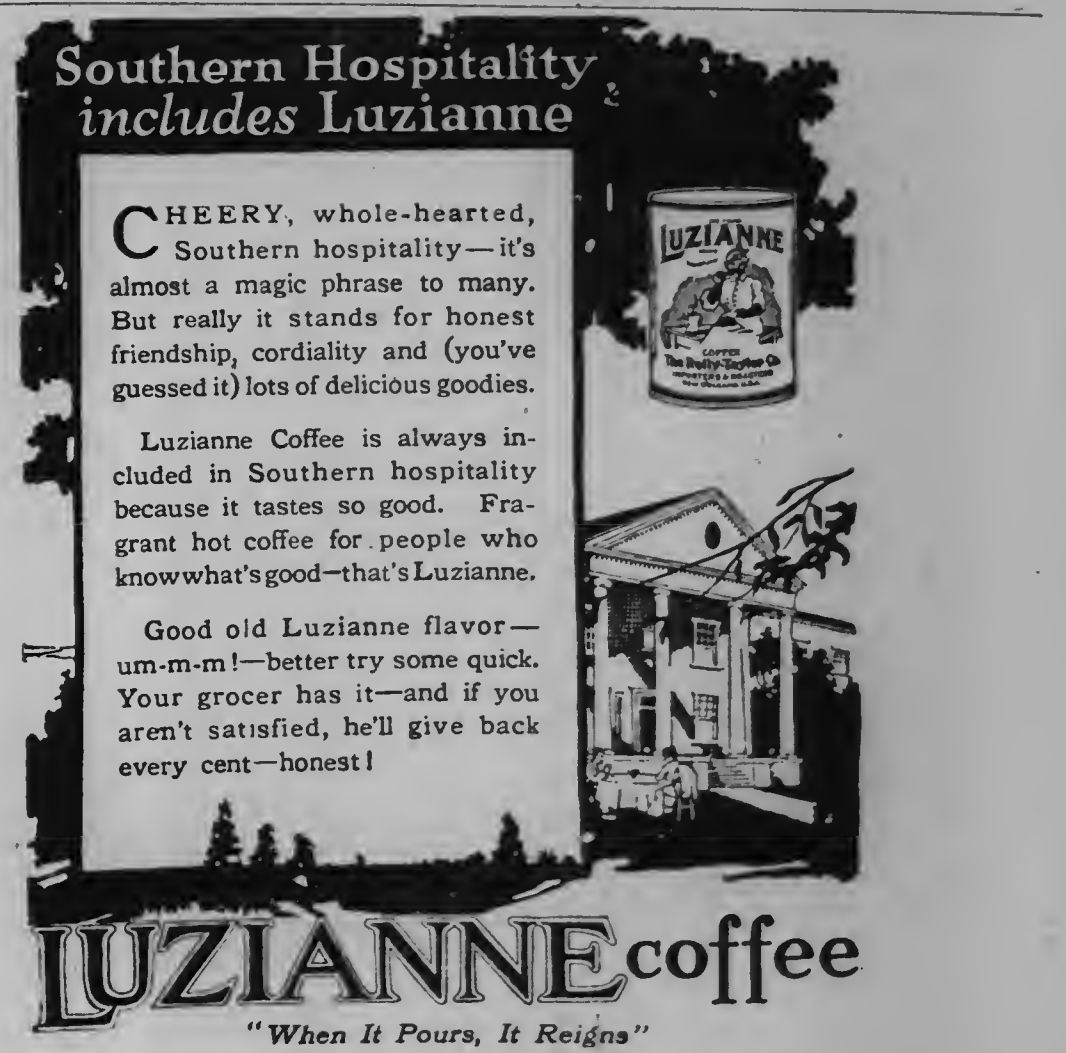
Not twenty feet away, creeping slowly toward the trenches, but halting abruptly every minute, loomed a large dark object. The sentry advanced cautiously, finger on trigger, demanding curtly, "Who goes there?" followed by the stifled exclamation, "Michael!"

Michael it was, gasping, panting, but still the same old dog Michael—but not alone. Behind him, parts of his uniform literally torn away by the dog's teeth, lay Henri, dragged from the battlefield, inch by inch, by the devoted animal. And miracle of miracles, the boy was actually breathing.

How the animal had accomplished such a Herculean task and escaped the vigilant eyes of the attendants will ever remain a mystery, but suffice it to say that little, fragil-looking Henri ultimately recovered, to challenge death once more at the front.—Our Dumb Animals.

"YOU'RE A BRICK."

When Tom says admiringly to Harry, "You're a brick!" I wonder if he knows how the saying originated.



In the golden days of Greece an ambassador once came from Epirus to Sparta, and was shown by the king over his capital. He was surprised to find no walls around the city.

"Sire!" he exclaimed, "I have visited nearly all the towns in Greece, but I find no walls for their defense. Why is this?"

"Indeed!" the king replied, "you cannot have looked carefully. Come with me to-morrow and I will show you the walls of Sparta."

On the following morning the king led his guest out upon the plains, where his army was drawing up in battle array, and, pointing proudly to the valiant soldiers, he said:

"There you behold the walls of Sparta—every man a brick!"—Exchange.

Editorial

THE COUNTRY PREACHER.

We are thinking to-day of the country preacher on the hard circuit, off the railroad, away from the current of things, traveling dusty roads and preaching in little churches and schoolhouses twice, three times, maybe four times a day. He has not many books, and he gets few newspapers, and he is cut off largely from association with his brother ministers during the year. His salary is not very large, and it is not paid regularly; he may not even get all of it at the end of the year. His wife and children have normal tastes and he would gratify their desire to live like other people and have what other people have. But his resources are small, and the high cost of everything makes it hard for him to keep out of debt and provide the necessities of life. He is having a hard time.

But we are not thinking of the hard time he is having so much as we are of the work he is doing. It is important beyond all estimate. Those men and women in the country, those boys and girls, to whom he ministers, have souls of infinite worth. They need the gospel of salvation as much as the wealthy and cultured dwellers in the city—and the country preacher is giving it to them. He may be lacking in the learning of the schools, but he is a pupil of the great Teacher and he is taking a course in the university of experience. He may not speak with the finished grace of the orator, but the simple words of truth have a strange power as they fall upon the ears of people whose lives he knows and whose needs he knows. And these country men and women, these country boys and girls, after awhile move to the city—some of them do—and their affiliation with the city churches and their activitiy in religious work show how faithfully and how well that country preacher did his part. People are being saved in the city, and leaders are being raised up in the city, but it is still true that the country churches are furnishing a large proportion of the working force of the average city church. And what would we do for candidates for the ministry, if these country preachers were not constantly laying their hands upon some one called of the Lord and leading that one into the way of consecration and service? The country preacher is having a hard time, but he is doing a glorious work.

And as we are thinking of the glorious work he is doing, we are thinking, too, of the recognition that is his due. He will be honored in the courts of Heaven—let him not be forgotten on earth. The salary a man receives and the name of the charge he serves are but poor standards, after all, by which to estimate his value in the sight of God. Humility, and patience, and courage, and faithfulness, and sympathy and love—these are some of the things that count for most, wherever a man is found.

Certain titles are taken, and rightly so, to show the esteem in which a man is held by the world—titles represented by A. B., and B. D., and D. D., and Ph. D., and LL. D. We hold that one of the noblest of all titles that a man may affix to his name is indicated by the letters, C. R.—Circuit Rider.

PATRIOTISM DOES NOT JUSTIFY PROFANITY.

It is a pity that some enthusiastic patriots give profane expression to their feelings. Patriotism is a holy sentiment that stirs the depths of a man's soul. We do not wonder that those who are emotionally inclined adopt vigorous methods in letting the world know how they feel.

But patriotism and religion are too closely allied for one deliberately to violate the precepts of the other. A godless patriot and a Christian slacker seem to us to be contradictory terms. The natural fitness of things would at least suggest that the best Christian is the best patriot, and vice versa.

It is not unusual, however, to hear men, and women too, in declaring their devotion to their country and their hatred of their country's enemies, use expressions that shock even sophisticated sensibilities. We are accustomed to hear profanity as we pass thoughtless and wicked men on the streets of the city—men who evidently are habitually careless of their forms of speech; but we cannot accustom ourselves to the use of oaths and imprecatory expletives by those who are normally clean of speech, even though they are agitated by the holy feeling of patriotism.

Least of all have we patience with profanity in the pulpit.

WE BELIEVE IT.

We take the liberty of quoting two sentences from a personal letter to the Publisher by Rev. Henry T. Young, the active and successful Conference evangelist of the Louisiana Conference. Speaking of the close of a good meeting in which he had been engaged, he says: "Sixteen gave their names at the close of the meeting to take the paper. * * * I believe if every one holding a revival meeting this summer in Louisiana and Mississippi would urge the claims of our paper at the close of the service that we would reach the ten thousand goal."

We believe Brother Young is right. We are convinced that one of the first things every new member of the Church ought to do, is to subscribe for his church paper. And we believe most of them would do so, if the matter were presented to them clearly and forcibly. And in addition to the new members, it is altogether probable that a great many old members of the Church, who have never taken the Advocate, would gladly take advantage of the opportunity to enroll as subscribers. New members usually want to have something definite pointed out for them to do in line with their Christian duty, and old members who feel the reviving influence of a religious campaign are glad to express their renewed determination to be loyal Methodists by some definite act. In many cases, all that is lacking is for the preacher to present the matter with proper emphasis.

We very much hope that our brethren will keep the Advocate in mind during the remainder of the year, and that they will make special effort to secure renewals and new subscriptions this month. August is the dullest month of the year, usually, in the Advocate office. There is just as much work to be done, and the expenses are as great as ever, but the income is materially less. This puts a heavy strain upon the resources of the paper. We are bending every energy now to the task of pulling through successfully what has been, in many respects, one of the most trying years in our history. Under normal conditions the strain would not have been so great, but we have had to meet unusual demands as to labor, paper, and postal charges. We need the help of our friends. Their energetic efforts at this particular time will help us greatly, and they will be deeply appreciated by Editor and Publisher alike.

TRANSLATING RELIGION INTO LIFE.

One of the difficult things for the average Christian to do is to translate religion into life. It is very easy for most of us to separate thought and feeling, and action. As we read the Bible, or join in the worship of the sanctuary, or listen to the preaching of the Word, our hearts are stirred within us and our thoughts range the high hills of spiritual excellence. But when we come into contact with the hard realities of life, too often we forget those holy emotions that made us happy, and become querulous and hard and bitter. Our tempers are ruffled by some incident of business or social intercourse and before we know it our tongues have uttered the stinging word that violates the law of love. Or under the stress of driving labor and keen competition we do something that is not in keeping with the strict requirements of the religious life.

After all, a religion that is not lived is not worth very much. It does not satisfy the deeper longings of our own hearts, and it does not commend our faith to our fellow-man. Our actions always speak louder than our words, and the world, at least, will judge us largely by our actions. When we translate our religious feelings and thoughts into the details of conduct, we speak a language the world can understand. And the world will listen reverently to what we say.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, of St. Mark's and Mary Werlein Missions, is still in Touro Infirmary, but is gradually improving. He has suffered a great deal, but is now well on the road to recovery.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, the hard-working pastor of our Louisiana Avenue Church, New Orleans, has been on the sick list for several days. He is improving, however, and expects to be able to fill his pulpit next Sunday.

Rev. T. L. Oakes, of Sallis, Miss., brings us under obligations by sending us two subscriptions. He adds the encouraging word that he is trying to get others to take the paper. He reports that all is going well in his charge.

A Bible class is maintained at the First Methodist Church, this city, that is always glad to receive new members. Visitors in the city will receive a cordial welcome to its meetings, which are held at the Sunday school hour.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., our pastor at Madison Station, Miss., writes that he is busy in the midst of summer revival work and that the Lord is blessing the work. Brother Lewis is a choice spirit and a fruitful laborer in the vineyard.

Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer reports that it was his privilege to preach last Sunday to large and appreciative summer congregations at Louisiana Avenue Church at 11 a. m., administering the communion, and at Carrollton Avenue Church at 8 p. m.

Rev. R. M. Brown has completed the work of the Y. M. C. A. Training School, at San Antonio, Texas, and has returned to New Orleans. He will not enter the Y. M. C. A. work at present, but will continue in charge of Felicity Church.

Rev. J. E. Selfe, our pastor at Covington, La., was a caller at the Advocate office on July 5. He reported the outlook encouraging on his work. His son, Maurice, has recently entered the army service, being connected with the ordance corps, at Fort Hancock, Ga.

We regret to learn that Rev. W. W. Mitchell, the popular presiding elder of the Durant District, has recently suffered a painful and extended period of illness. Missing his appointments was no small part of his suffering. We trust that he has fully recovered his health.

Rev. Jas. T. McCafferty, our efficient pastor at Durant, Miss., has recently closed a good meeting at that place, in which he was assisted by Rev. E. S. Lewis, of Greenville. Brother Lewis was among friends at Durant, having served as pastor there some fifteen years ago.

We appreciate expressions like the following from Rev. Chas. F. Smith, presiding elder of the Beaumont District, Texas Conference: "The 'Old New Orleans' is a welcome visitor. Having been brought up on it, I still like it. Blessings upon the paper and the new Editor."

We enjoyed a visit one day this week by Rev. J. L. Williams, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference and now a local preacher in our Church. He is Superintendent of the Louisiana Child Finding and Home Society, which has its headquarters at Shreveport.

Rev. C. W. Alford, a son of Rev. N. E. Alford, a very useful local preacher in the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, himself a local preacher, has enlisted in the army. He has been stationed at Jackson, Miss., but is expecting to be sent with his company overseas in the near future.

Rev. J. H. Jolly, of Seminary, Miss., in renewing his subscription, says that his charge is moving along nicely. He had just closed a splendid meeting at Sanford, where he was assisted by Rev. Chas. E. Downer, and was to begin one at Eminence on August 4, with Rev. Jasper T. Smith assisting.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions, recently sent in: Rev. Rolfe Hunt, Montrose, Miss., 2; Rev. J. R. Bright, Rosedale, Miss., 4; Rev. G. L. Lauderdale, Brookville, Miss., 2; Rev. H. B. Thomason, Bayou Chicot, La., 3.

Rev. E. B. Moll, who for several sessions has been a student at Centenary College, has been actively engaged during the summer in holding revival meetings. He informs us in a personal note that the Lord has graciously blessed his labors. He was expecting soon to begin a union meeting at Ringgold, La., to last two weeks.

The Seasbore Camp Meeting began its annual services last Tuesday evening. Rev. F. M. Freeman, of the Louisiana Conference, and Rev. G. S. Harmon, of the Mississippi Conference, are two of the preachers for the occasion. We have received no information as to the Alabama representative. We trust that the meeting this year may be a gracious season of refreshing.

Dr. U. G. Foote, the scholarly pastor of Rayne Memorial, New Orleans, will spend the month of August in Kentucky and Missouri, his old home. Provision has been made for all the services of the church during his absence. Dr. Foote has poetic gifts of a high order. For the benefit of any who may have failed to notice it, we call special attention to his strikingly original and beautiful poem, "Four Patriots True," in our issue of July 25.

Rev. J. A. Alford, pastor of our Second Methodist Church, New Orleans, reports that his church has suffered a great loss by the enlistment of its Sunday school superintendent, Brother H. C. Husson, in the service of his country. Brother Husson is now stationed at Jackson Barracks. For two years and seven months he has made for himself a fine record, and rendered a great service to Second Methodist Sunday school. We doubt not he will make an equally fine record in military service.

Rev. R. G. Moore, of the North Mississippi Conference, writes that he will spend the month of August at Holly Springs, Miss., with his mother. He will remain there until September 13, when he will leave for San Francisco to take steamer for China. He goes out as a regular missionary, having been assigned, for the present, to educational work in Soochow University. He will keep in touch with his former work by having the Advocate sent to him regularly in his new field of labor.

A personal note from Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo informs us that he is gradually returning to normal strength. As soon as he can get from under the immediate treatment of dentist, throat specialist, and physicians, he expects to go to the mountains for the benefit of the bracing air. He expresses a longing to get into his district that he may take up the work that is on his heart. Prayers will continue to be made that this great servant of the Church may soon be completely restored to health.

Dr. F. N. Parker, of the Candler School of Theology, Atlanta, Ga., filled the pulpit at Rayne Memorial at both the morning and evening hours last Sunday in the absence of the pastor, Dr. Foote. We had the privilege of hearing him in a great discourse on "The Grace of God" at the evening service. Dr. Parker honored the Advocate office with a call Monday morning. He will preach at Rayne Memorial next Sunday, and it is probable that he will hold all the services during the absence of Dr. Foote.

The death of Judge T. C. W. Ellis, at his home in Amite, La., last week, removed one of the most eminent jurists of Louisiana. For thirty years he served on the bench in the Civil District Court, New Orleans. He was a member of a notable Methodist family of Louisiana, himself being a graduate of Centenary College. The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. Alonzo Early, and Dr. F. N. Parker, of the Emory School of Theology, Atlanta, Ga. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family.

We acknowledge the honor of a call by Mr. F. E. Gunter, of Jackson, Miss., on Monday of this week. Brother Gunter is one of the most progressive and successful business men of his State. We happen to know that he has done magnificent work recently as the State Chairman of the War Savings Stamps Committee. With it all, however, he is not too busy to give attention to the work of the Church. He is an official member of Galloway Memorial, at Jackson. He has just returned from the great missionary meeting at St. Louis.

Rev. R. A. Clark, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, but now of the Memphis Conference, is a happy man; he should be, at least, and he says he is. He is stationed at Covington, Tenn., "one of the very best appointments to be found anywhere." He has seven hundred members, who give him an elegant house to live in, pay him a living salary, love him and brag on him. What more could a man wish for? We thank him for cordial words in memory of the happy days when we were students together at Millsaps College.

Rev. W. H. Nelson, pastor of our church at Yuba City, Cal., has been elected editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate to succeed Rev. W. E. Vaughan, who was compelled to give up the work on account of ill-health. Dr. Vaughan served the Church faithfully for seventeen years in his responsible position, and it is with sincere regret that we chronicle his retirement. We pray that he may soon be restored to health and strength by a period of rest. We extend hearty greetings to the new editor and wish for him abundant success in his new work.

The Church Extension Handbook for 1918 lies on our desk. It is fully up to the standard of previous editions. It gives an exhaustive account of the work of the Board, including the loan fund and annuity departments, which have reached such large proportions. The book is prefaced by a short sketch and splendid likeness of Bishop McMurry, who, as Corresponding Secretary of the Board, accomplished a monumental work. Every pastor who has not already received it should write to the office of the Board, at Louisville, Ky., for a copy.

We have received a copy of the Handbook of the Methodist Men's Club from the general secretary, George Stanley Frazer, of Washington, Ga. The organization is pledged to promote loyalty, fellowship, and service among men of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The Club has received the endorsement of Bishops, connectional officers, presiding elders, pastors, college presidents, and hundreds of leading business men from all walks of life. The organization seems to be spreading rapidly throughout the Church, evidently meeting a real need.

Announcement has been made that Rev. John F. Foster has been appointed to Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, in place of Rev. A. F. Vaughan, who is now a chaplain in the U. S. army. Brother Vaughan left the early part of the week for Hoboken, N. J., to await further orders. Brother Foster is expected to be in his new pulpit next Sunday. He is no stranger in New Orleans, having been reared in this city and having served pastorates here in former years. He will receive a cordial welcome from the membership at Carrollton Avenue and his many friends hereabouts.

Rev. J. L. Evans, of Haughton, La., is happy because a fine baby boy has come to bless his home. The visitor arrived on July 21. We pray Heaven's richest blessings upon this son of the parsonage whose grandfather is Rev. C. C. Evans, of the Mississippi Conference. Brother Evans states that he has made application for a chaplaincy in the army.

Governor Pleasant, of Louisiana, has issued a proclamation designating Sunday, September 1, as Young Men's Christian Association Recruiting Sunday. The purpose of the special services called for is to find and recruit men and women for the great work of the Y. M. C. A. overseas.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.

Dear Mr. Editor: Please announce through the Advocate that the Annual Camp Meeting at the Camp Ground at Crystal Springs will begin on August 15 and continue ten days. Rev. W. C. Swope, of Charleston, Missouri, will do the preaching. We are expecting a great meeting. Let all who can, attend. J. S. PURCELL, P. C.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

Miss SITA MAE GARRETTE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Garrette, was born in January, 1899, and passed from this life on July 12, 1918. It is hard to give her up but God doeth all things well. She be united with the Methodist Church in early days. She lived a quiet life, making friends wherever she went. She was thought well of by all who knew her. The body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Union Church, her pastor, Rev. J. W. Price, conducting the funeral service. She leaves a father, mother, three brothers, four sisters, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn her death. Cheer up, loved ones, for you must remember your loss is her gain. And if all goes well, some sweet day you will be with her never to part. A friend,

MEETING AT MARIETTA, MISS.

We have just closed our meeting here at our church in Marietta. Brother J. W. Ward, of Booneville, did the preaching for us. We all enjoyed his splendid and inspiring sermons, and were elevated to a higber plane of spiritual living. We feel sure that our church was greatly benefited by his presence and great preaching. We are moving along smoothly here on the Marietta Circuit. We are serving a good people here. We are just commencing our protracted meetings. We enjoy reading your editorials in our paper. Yours truly, in the cause of Christ, G. B. LOVE.

Marietta, Miss.

BOSSIER CITY (LA.) CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Just a few words in regard to the Bossier City—Wesley charge. There are four preaching places on the work, three church buildings, no parsonage. I am glad to say the Bossier City Methodists and their friends are anxious for a church building and are working to that end. There are four Sunday schools, one Missionary Society and a Teachers' Training class, all doing fairly good work.

We held a meeting at one of the country churches the first week in July, Holly Springs, with Brother J. B. Williams doing tbe preaching. Tbe services were well attended; sometimes half the people could not get in the church. There were no new members added to the roll, but the members and the community were greatly helped. There are some as fine people in the Holly Springs neighborhood as you will find anywhere. May God's richest blessing rest upon that people and that church.

We are in the midst of a meeting here in Bossier City, with Brother Williams doing the preaching. My goal for this place in regard to membership is 100 per cent increase and a mighty awakening of our people. The call today is for Christian men and women, and I believe if the call is strong enough, the people will heed.

At tbe close of the service at the Wesley Church last Sunday I had the privilege of baptizing seven children in one family, with the father and mother standing on each side, and of receiving the oldest daughter into the Church.

Tbere have been several special days in my churches this year, and "dinner on the ground" is a common thing.

Everything is moving along very nicely. I hope and pray, the year will close with good results in every way. Pray for us. Your brother,

J. M. BOYKIN.

LETTER FROM REV. M. G. JENKINS.

Dear Brother Carley: I have suffered a return of the malady with which I suffered last year about the time of the session of the Louisiana Conference, which placed me near deatb's door, but I am rejoiced to say that my condition is not near so bad. Yet I have not fully recovered from it.

I wish to express my sincere sorrow at the death of Brother J. L. P. Sheppard. Brother Sheppard was my first presiding elder in tbe Louisiana Conference, and I always held him in the highest esteem. I regarded him as one of the best of men. I regret deeply his demise—a great man has fallen in Israel. May God bless his affectionate wife and family.

There are others of the Louisiana Conference for whom I cherish the profoundest love and respect. I feel assured that I shall not be able to meet them all again in this life—I am now in my eightieth year—but I feel assured I shall meet them "some sweet day."

I am living with my widowed daughter at Mineola, Texas.

M. G. JENKINS.

A GOOD BUSINESS OPENING.

The steady increase of the livestock interest in the Southern States warranted our making a thorough investigation of the natural advantages of the Southland for the raising of good horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry compared to Northern States like Iowa that for years have been looked upon as leaders in these lines.

The reports of our experts justify our establishing headquarters in the South at some centrally located city having good railroad connections as soon as suitable arrangements can be closed.

Our business will require the help of a number of reliable men who must be well and favorably known among planters and farmers who own stock in the vicinity of their home town and we prefer men with some knowledge of livestock.

These positions are worthy the prompt attention of any one who is looking for a chance to make money in a reliable, steady and growing outdoor business.

AMENDMENT TO THE CHARTER OF STANDARD COMPANY, INC.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Louisiana,
Parish of Orleans.

BE IT KNOWN, that on this Twenty-fifth day of June in the year 1918, before me, J. KENTON BAILEY, a Notary Public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned,

PERSONALLY CAME AND APPEARED, William B. Reily, Jr., herein appearing in his capacity as President of the "Standard Company, Incorporated," and William B. And said appearers declared that a special meeting of the stockholders of said corporation, at which all of the stockholders were present or represented by proxy, was held this day at the domicile of said corporation, by virtue of and pursuant to a unanimous waiver of notice, agreed to and signed by all of said stockholders in person or by proxy, and that at said special meeting of stockholders, by the unanimous vote of all of the stockholders of said corporation, all consenting and agreeing thereto, and by resolutions unanimously adopted, Article 1 and Article III of the charter of said corporation were altered, amended and changed so as to read as follows, to-wit:

Said dividends shall be cumulative and shall be paid in preference to any dividend on the Common Stock. In the event of liquidation or disposition of the assets of this corporation, the holders of said Preferred Stock shall be paid the par value thereof, together with the dividends above provided, before any payment is made on the Common Stock.

The Common Stock shall own the remainder of the net earnings of this corporation after the payment of the dividends on the Preferred Stock as above provided, or as much thereof as may be distributed by the Board of Directors and not reserved for the surplus or undivided profits.

Each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote in all stockholders' meetings for each share of Common Stock standing on the books of this corporation in his name, to be cast in person or by proxy, and the majority of the votes cast shall control any election or issue in all stockholders' meetings, but no vote on any matter shall be allowed to any stockholder on account of any Preferred Stock standing in his name.

This corporation may begin business as soon as Five Thousand Dollars of its Capital Stock is subscribed and paid for in cash. The Capital Stock of this corporation may be increased to One Hundred Thousand Dollars in either Preferred Stock or Common Stock, or partly in both, as shall be deemed best at a stockholders' meeting. The One Thousand Shares of the Capital Stock at present outstanding shall be classed and denominated as "Common Stock" and shall be so marked upon the face of the certificates by the Secretary of this corporation upon presentation for that purpose by the several holders of said stock. The remaining Four Thousand Shares of Preferred Stock shall be sold and issued, from time to time, at not less than par and for cash, as the Board of Directors of this corporation may authorize and direct. And this corporation, through its Board of Directors, shall have the right to call in and cancel any outstanding shares of Preferred Stock, in blocks of One Thousand Dollars at a time, upon the payment of the par value thereof, provided dividend amounting to Seven per cent per annum from the date of issue to the date of cancellation is or has been also paid on said stock."

All as will appear from a certified copy of the resolutions of the meeting of said stockholders, hereto annexed and made a part of this act.

It can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid, and every woman who suffers from backache, headache, nervousness, should take this "Prescription" of Dr. Pierce's. It is prepared from nature's roots and herbs and does not contain a particle of alcohol or any narcotic. It's not a secret prescription for its ingredients are printed on wrapper. Send 10c. for trial package to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

ATLANTA, GA.—"It is indeed a pleasure to tell what Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription did for me during the state of gestation. I was so nervous I would shake almost like anyone with a chill and could not eat anything without being nauseated. My husband got me one bottle of the 'Favorite Prescription,' and I began to take it. The nausea ceased after the first dose. I took only two bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription,' and was surprised and gratified at the marked improvement in my condition. I have also used this medicine for other troubles with good results."—MRS. DORA E. DONEHOO, R. F. D. 5.

You Can't Rub It Away; Rheumatism is in the Blood

Liniments Will Never Cure.

If you are afflicted with Rheumatism, why waste time with liniments, lotions and other local applications that never did cure Rheumatism, and never will?

Do not try to rub the pain away, for you will never succeed. Try the sensible plan of finding the cause of the pain, and go after that. Remove the cause, and there can be no pain.

You will never be rid of Rheumatism until you cleanse your blood of the germs that cause the disease. S. S. S. has never had an equal as a blood purifier and scores of sufferers say that it has cleansed their blood of Rheumatism, and removed all trace of the disease from their system.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at your drug store, and get on the right treatment to-day. If you want special medical advice, you can obtain it free by addressing Medical Director, 23 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga.

What Is Nuxated Iron?

Physician Explains—Says Public Ought to Know What They Are Taking—Practical Advice on What To Do To Build Up Your Strength, Power and Endurance and Increase the Red Blood Corpuscles.

The fact that Nuxated Iron is today being used by over three million people annually and that so many physicians are prescribing it as a tonic, strength and blood builder in weak, nervous, run-down conditions has led to an investigation of its merits by designated physicians and others whose reports should be of great importance to the public generally. Among these is the statement made by Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and Westchester County Hospital, who says: "When one patient after another began asking my opinion of Nuxated Iron, I resolved to go thoroughly into the subject and find out for myself whether or not it possessed the real value claimed by its manufacturers and attested to by so many prominent people. This is exactly what I believe every honest, conscientious physician should do before prescribing or lending his endorsement to any product whatsoever. If an article is worthless we practitioners ought to be the first to know of it and if it is efficacious we are in duty bound to recommend it for the welfare of our patients. A study of the composition of the Nuxated Iron formula so impressed me with the therapeutic efficacy of the product that I immediately tested it in a number of obstinate cases. So quickly did it increase the strength, energy and endurance of the patients to whom it was administered that I became firmly convinced of its remarkable value as a tonic and blood builder. I have since taken it myself with excellent results. There are thousands of delicate, nervous, run-down folks who need just such a preparation as this but do not know what to take. Therefore I have urgently suggested the widespread publication of the sworn statement of the composition of its formula so that the public may know what they are taking. This complete formula is now to be found in newspapers throughout the country. It is composed principally of organic iron in the form of iron peptonate of a special specific standard and glycerophosphates which is one of the most costly tonic ingredients known. To the credit of the manufacturers it may be said that they use the most expensive form of iron peptonate, whereas by employing other makes they could have put the same quantity of actual iron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost and by using metallic iron they could have reduced the cost to less than one-twelfth, but by thus cheapening the product they would undoubtedly have impaired its therapeutic efficacy. In my opinion a careful examination of this formula by any physician or pharmacist should convince him that Nuxated Iron is to be placed among the very highest class and most strictly ethical preparations known to medical science. It excels anything I have ever used for building up the system and increasing the red blood corpuscles thereby enriching and fortifying the blood against the ravages of disease."

The last and worst thing that can be said of a nation is that it has made its children sad and weary.—Ruskin.

A GREAT MEETING AT BELEN, MISS.

The town of Belen has passed through a very unusual and gracious protracted service of over a week's duration. The Rev. J. H. Bell, of Columbus, was secured to conduct the services.

From the first, the meeting gave evidence of vital power. The evangelist strove to make the revival revive; that is to rekindle the smoldering sparks of faith and godliness and quicken into active consecration the pious energies of the church members. All denominations took active part in the services and we feel the whole community has been stirred as never before. We have never seen such unmistakable evidence of the power of the Holy Spirit.

Most evangelists operate along original lines. If three words could depict Brother Bell, they would be freshness, force and faithfulness. He has his own characteristic way of getting close to the people and his appeals are irresistible. His compelling and moving illustrations are profoundly thrilling and gripping. But his unflinching effort to show God's people their errors and call them back to their allegiance by vivid appeal to Scripture and the Omnipresent One—"there was the hiding of his power."

It was interesting to note the increased attendance from time to time and how he held his congregations—the last service being the very best of all. At this service many men who had never spoken in church before voluntarily rose and gave expression to the good the meeting had done and the blessings received in their own lives.

The churches are on a higher plane; believers are strengthened, discord and dissension are wiped out; the pastor is held in higher esteem and appreciation; and with one accord and earnest desire and purpose our people are reaching out after the higher ideals of life.

The prayers and best wishes of the community will follow Brother Bell in his fruitful and efficient work for the upbuilding of the Kingdom.

As an aftermath of the meeting and as a most beautiful Christian and characteristic act on the part of this neighborhood, next morning after the close of the meeting the good people of the three churches, led by Brother Bell as their spokesman, invaded the old courthouse, where the Presbyterian minister was marooned, and "showered" him and his family with the most substantial and abundant proof of their desire to remember the "stranger within our gates."

REVIVALS ON THE KILMICHAEL CHARGE.

Dear Mr. Editor: I have just closed three glorious meetings in my charge, which is Kilmichael, Miss., of the North Mississippi Conference. Rev. E. M. Vance, of Atlanta, Ga., did the preaching at Kilmichael and Stewart; Rev. Johnnie Johnson, of Myrtle, did the preaching at Tomnolen, and Uncle Sunny Elliott, a great layman of our Conference, was with us at Tomnolen. We had the "old-time religion" display at each of these places. God was mightily with us and blessed our efforts. W. V. SHEARER, P. C.

LATEST WAR NEWS.

An editor in the Far West dropped into church for the first time in many years. The minister was in the very heart of the sermon. The editor listened for awhile and then rushed to his office.

"What are you fellows doing? What about the news from the seat of war?"

"What news?"

"Why, all about the Egytian army being drowned in the Red Sea. The minister up at the church knows all about it, and you have not a word in our latest. Bustle around, you fellows, and get out an extra-special edition."

WHAT WE CAN DO.

What can we do? We can pray. Modern knowledge is showing more and more the reasonableness of prayer. Mind is now known to touch mind, and thought to influence thought. The united direction, the sustained intention of many minds will reach other minds. We give up prayer, because we so often pray amiss, without intensity, without fervor, and there is no answer. God, in Whom are the spirits of the blest, in Whom are gathered up the aspirations and the high thoughts of countless generations—God waits, ready, if we earnestly ask, to pass on to those who need our strength, our faith, our hope.—Canon Barnett.

TIME OUT.

"Nothing but bananas, ma'am," was the reply.—Christian Register.

Repartee.

"Pop, what is repartee?"

"Repartee, my son, consists of thinking, when it is too late, what we might have said if we had only thought of it in time."—Exchange.

All the More.

"I'm afraid, Will, you do not love me any more—that is, not as well as you used to."

"Why, Gracie," interposed hubby, "why do you say such a thing?"

"Because you always let me get up to light the fire now."

"Nonsense, my silly love! Your getting up to light the fire makes me love you all the more."—Exchange.

Honors Even.

Once in a while the choirs are able to score off on the minister. The minister announced just after the choir had sung its anthem, as his text: "Now when the uproar had ceased." But the singers bided their time patiently, and when the sermon was over, rose and rendered in a most melodious fashion another anthem, beginning, "Now it is high time to awake out of sleep."—Exchange.

Too Much for Him.

Bobby, the son of the house, aged four, was not the sort of boy that comes in to entertain grown-up visitors. Quite the contrary. His place was the backyard playground, and he knew it. But one day, when he entered the drawingroom inadvertently, he was beckoned forward for introduction to a caller. "Bobby," said his mother, "this is Mrs. Lord." Bobby went up and shook hands gravely. Then he turned and regarded his mother with an amused twinkle. "Aw, say, muvver," he returned, "you're kiddin' me. There ain't no Mrs. Lord."—New York Evening Post.

WHERE DRUGS FAIL.

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer from chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning or other curable condition due to impure blood do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred on the average have reported "no beneficial results. This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

CHURCH IN NO MAN'S LAND.

All over the war zone, even out in No Man's Land, the soldiers of the American Expeditionary Force seek religious service, often at the additional risk of their lives, and assemble in places of worship as unusual as were the meeting places of the early Christians. Never before was there such an army, whose fighters seek worship calmly amid shells, in the shadow of hostile aircraft. No matter how dangerous the position, these sincere boys from America who came overseas for a great, unselfish purpose, always welcome the Y. M. C. A. secretary who risks his life to reach them to hold Sunday services.

A shell crater in No Man's Land was the strangest place in which a "Y" man held services, though others reported cover the entire field of danger. Pews and pulpits are the least essential requirements. A camouflaged gun emplacement often is the sanctuary and the gun butt is the pew. In a village under fire, where gatherings were prohibited, a thin line of men backed against the walls along a street while the speaker flattened himself against the opposite wall.

Men seated on the firing step of trenches have listened eagerly to words of comfort, while in an outpost two sat looking out into No Man's Land with their automatics handy, but as much at religious services as were those Pilgrim forbears who carried their matchlocks to church. In a little summer house of an old chateau one Sunday morning men sat about a round table. Others heard a "Y" man speak from the pitcher's box of a baseball diamond.

Another "Y" man stood beside an old stone cross near a village church above which two aeroplanes were swooping down upon others in an attack, and as the villagers pushed their way into the sanctuary the American spoke quietly to his fellows in khaki. The band did not play its concluding number that evening, for the old pipe organ within the church was booming forth a hymn of praise as the preacher out-of-doors lovingly placed his hand on the old cross and summoned the fellows before him to respond to his challenge.

Let no reader think this religious work is forced on the soldiers. Far from it. In the face of the great problem, united for a great, serious purpose and with the artificialties of life stripped away, these men demand and seek spiritual solace. They have risked death or terrible wounds to assemble when they can hold religious services, as did some American boys one Sunday recently in the Lorraine sector when they gathered to take communion in an old apple orchard, surrounded by a wall.

Having finished the prayer of consecration, the minister at the communion table beneath the trees was about to break the bread when the enemy started firing. At the time ten men were on their knees in a semi-circle about the pastor, while many others stood farther back, respectfully watching and waiting. Suddenly a gun boomed, a shell shrieked through the orchard, and the congregation threw itself prostrate on the ground.

All quietly resumed their reverent attitudes and the service proceeded. Another shell sirened through the orchard trees and again the communicants pitched full length on the grass, to rise and resume the sacrament when the missile had passed, the service continuing as steadily as though this alternate kneeling and prostrating was part of the ritual.

The circumstances leading to the services actually held in No Man's Land were as dramatic. A Hun shell had felled a great tree out there and ten Americans had been sent over the top to hold this outpost in the crater. A Red Triangle man, arriving at the front line for his regular Sunday services, heard of them and with his bag well-filled with supplies cautiously followed their trail through the tangle of ugly barbed wire. He found ten men sitting low in the crater under the shadow of the tree roots. Snipers would have picked off any one who stood. They presented eight different denominations, but they did not care about that. They wanted Sunday services.

So with trench mortars bellowing and high explosives whining overhead, the older man with the Red Triangle on his uniform spoke about "peace in the individual heart" in the center of war's whirlpool.

"We're going to write home that we've been to church in No Man's Land," one soldier told the Y. M. C. A. man before he started back over his perilous trail. "We'll never forget this Sunday—if we ever get out of this crater. It's made better men of us."

Then the "Y" man went on, looking for stranger churches, knowing that if he did, he would also find the congregations, for the Red Triangle must go everywhere in the war zone ministering to the mental, spiritual and physical needs of the soldiers.—Bulletin, National War Work Council.

DR. BELLE H. BENNETT SPEAKS TO THE WOMEN OF SOUTHERN METHODISM.

Members of the Committee appointed by the Woman's Missionary Council at its last session held in Knoxville. Tenn., April 3-11, to attend the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in the interest of the legislation touching the Woman's Work of the Church, reached Atlanta, Ga., the seat of the Conference on the first day of the session.

The memorial and petitions presented by the women were referred to the proper committees, and later reached the body for action. All the requests of the Woman's Missionary Council were granted. The memorial for full membership for women in the Church created perhaps the greatest interest and the warmest discussion.

From the beginning it was evident that a very large majority of the body was heartily in favor of granting laity rights to the women of the Church. However, in a few days our committee was informed that some sharp opposition to the form of the memorial had developed in the Committee on Revisals, to which it had been referred.

On May 13, the memorial came before the house and after less than 30 minutes' debate, was passed by an overwhelming majority, despite the fact that a rider, involving the Constitution of the Board of Missions, had been attached to it by the committee. When the Chair announced that the measure was adopted, the enthusiasm was so great that the men rose from their seats and turned to the women in the galleries, waved hands and handkerchiefs and cheered with hearty, sympathetic approval.

The following morning in a formal paper the College of Bishops declared that the admittance of women to the councils of the Church was a constitutional question that could not be decided by even a two-thirds vote of the General Conference. The body immediately reaffirmed the action of the previous day by a vote of 256 to 57, thereby "over-ruling the Bishops' veto," this sending the matter down to the Annual Conferences for final decision.

By a resolution later in the session, the Bishops were requested to present the matter to all the Annual Conferences of Southern Methodism within the next twelve months. A constitutional question thus referred to the Annual Conferences requires a three-fourths vote of all members of all the Conferences to legalize the change.

Many prominent friends of the cause said that the men so sincerely and earnestly desired to give the women full membership in the Church that it is evident that it will pass the Annual Conferences by a large majority.

The women of the Council believe that God's time has come for woman to assume her full responsibility in the Church. They realize that it means indefatigable and patient work on the part of the friends of the cause, both men and women, to present clearly the issue to the eight or nine thousand preachers and laymen who compose the Conferences, and in whose hands, under God, rests the final decision.

My appeal to the Church now is for constant and united prayer that the Holy Spirit may guide and direct in all this work and that in the result which is inevitable, the spiritual life of the Church may be quickened, the name of Jesus, the Savior and liberator of women, may be glorified and the kingdom of this world may become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

BELLE H. BENNETT,
President, Woman's Missionary Council, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

NOTES FROM THE FRENCH FIELD.

The MacDonell Home, the home established by the Woman's Missionary Council in the French field, has continued its activities through the summer, touching the heart of the missionary problem by reaching the heart of the homes in getting hold of the women and girls. Now the regular fall work is being taken up, the work of taking girls who have had little or no advantages and giving them religious, industrial, and educational training.

Two girls are in the home already. A number of others wish to come. Most of them have not means sufficient for the entire expense and must wait for outside help; others who might pay the amount required do not yet realize that it is of much value to a girl to know how to read and write, or to receive training of any kind.

There are two girls who should be of special interest to our Methodist people. They are Lucile and Maggie Martin, daughters of our French missionary, Rev. Anatol Martin. Brother Martin is a zealous, consecrated servant of the Lord who for more than a decade has given himself unsparingly to the work in the French mission field, enduring hardships, privations and persecutions with joy and thanksgiving. His family, likewise, is devoted to the work, striving in every way to witness for Christ and to be a blessing in the community. Brother Martin receives a small salary and has to provide his own home. The amount is insufficient for even the daily needs of a family of ten and there is nothing left to spend for the education of these two splendid girls who want to be fitted for service.

If you, reader, wish to help these girls, send contributions, or write for further information to Mrs. L. M. White or to Miss Ella K. Hooper, Houma, La.

"GOD'S LANGUAGE."

The native name for the new Navaho Bible is God Bizad, God's Language. Surely no greater service than this work of translation could have been done for the Navaho people, who number over 30,000, and whose 93 per cent of illiteracy makes their country "the darkest spot in the United States."

Rev. F. G. Mitchell, of Tolchaco, Ariz., one of the present translators, writes:

"The Navaho young people in the Training School at Tolchaco, Ariz., were very happy indeed when the beautifully printed Scriptures in their own language came from the American Bible Society, and the missionaries at the various stations are exceedingly grateful for this much-needed help for which they have waited so long."—Missionary Review of the World.

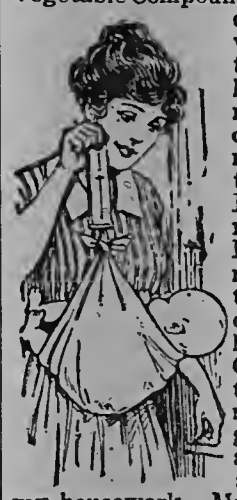
"Life never begins to be serious in the largest sense until we feel that we have a mission in the world."

WAR HEALTH AXIOMS.

Every sick civilian worker means waste of war power.

Every sick child withdraws an adult from needed work.

Every case of serious illness increases pressure on doctors, nurses and hospitals.



Women, as a real war service, must prepare themselves to prevent needless illness, to care intelligently for the sick in their homes and thus to hasten recovery and return to usefulness.

The Red Cross course in Elementary Hygiene and Home Care of the Sick prepares women for this life-saving, energy-conserving war activity.—Red Cross Bulletin.

MOTHERS TO BE

Should Read Mrs. Monyhan's Letter Published by Her Permission.

Mitchell, Ind.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me so much during the time I was looking forward to the coming of my little one that I am recommending it to other expectant mothers. Before taking it, some days I suffered with neuralgia so badly that I thought I could not live, but after taking three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was entirely relieved of neuralgia, I had gained in strength and was able to go around and do all my housework. My baby when seven months old weighed 19 pounds and I feel better than I have for a long time. I never had any medicine do me so much good."—Mrs. PEARL MONYHAN, Mitchell, Ind.

Good health during maternity is a most important factor to both mother and child, and many letters have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., telling of health restored during this trying period by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

REVIVAL AT PURVIS, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: I wish to report a splendid series of services at Purvis, recently conducted by Rev. H. T. Young and his singer, Mr. Aldridge, of Louisiana. The services were very spiritual and greatly enjoyed by us all. Mr. Young is a fine preacher. His genial and happy disposition won our hearts. His simple gospel messages drew us closer to our Savior, and made us feel our responsibility as Christians. The messages were just what we needed. Some ten or more joined the Church. But this does not measure the amount of good accomplished.

Calomel Dynamites A Sluggish Liver

Calomel salivates! It's mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day you'll be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you, while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It's harmless, pleasant and safe to give to children; they like it.

NOTES FROM MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE FIELD SECRETARY.

I should like very much to devote a good deal of space to the wonderful trip that I have just had the pleasure of taking.

I had the privilege of being in John L. Alexander's class, who is considered our very best authority on the adolescent. He was good. Mr. Smith gave a fine course in Sunday school music, which was most helpful. The rest of the faculty at Conference Point was good but these two did me the most good.

Conference Point is the beauty spot on Lake Geneva. Lake Geneva is the prettiest body of water I ever saw. It is an ideal location for a training school.

Lake Junaluska is much better equipped and the grounds are much prettier and the natural scenery is much better. I wish that they might have a Lake Geneva there. Lake Junaluska is the prettiest artificial body of water I ever heard about. It is over fifteen hundred feet higher than Lake Geneva so there is that added advantage in the natural physical conditions. It was a sight to me to see the clouds bumping around all day on the top of the hills. It just looked like they were going to break themselves into a thousand pieces.

The work I took at Junaluska was adult. Dr. Barclay gave a most excellent course and dealt with the very problems that the adult worker needs, I thought. Dr. Harris gave a fine course on the young people also. The public lectures were strong and helpful.

I came home feeling that, taking everything into consideration, the Divinity School was giving as strong and in some respects a stronger program than I found in either of the above places.

For Sunday school work alone I could not say this, of course, for that is the purpose of the other two and they are trying to fill their mission, surely a much needed one. I hope that there might be worked out in connection with the Divinity School a Sunday school program that would be similar to the work done at these other places. I believe it can be done and hope the way may be opened up so that it will be done.

Pray for the District Institutes. On to Enterprise, August 13, 14; on to Forest. August 15, 16, Meridian and Newton Districts. Pray for me.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

Your Greatest Problem—That Boy of Yours.

What kind of a man will he be ten, twenty, thirty years from now? You know, every parent knows, that it depends entirely upon the training he is getting right now, his associations, his ideals, his inspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, Principal of the Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., has been training boys for twenty-five years. He wants your boy. He recognizes in him one of the men who may some day manage big affairs and he wants to train him for that end. His school has been built and equipped, and his instructors chosen with the first and only consideration of giving the boy the mental and physical training, the association with clean, high-minded men, the ideals of character, the inspirations to ambition, which the world expects.

Robert K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome, inspiring personality, and his school is the material projection of that character. Write Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., to-day, and let him send you a catalogue and tell you what this school can do for your boy.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CLERGY IN THE RECONSTRUCTION OF THE CRIPPLED SOLDIER.

The following statement has just been issued by Douglas C. McMurtrie, Director of the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled men:

"We must count on the return from the front of thousands of crippled soldiers. We must plan to give them the best possible chance for the future.

"The Government will provide the best of surgical care and special training for self-support. But whether this really puts the disabled man back on his feet in the community depends on whether the attitude of the public operates as a help or hindrance.

"The American Red Cross desires to enlist the assistance of the clergy of the United States—in their joint roles of personal advisers and leaders of community opinion—in promoting sound doctrines on these four points:

1. To convince the public that the cripple is not helpless but capable of being restored to complete independence if trained and placed in the right line of work.

2. That it is no kindness to encourage the cripple to idleness; that on the contrary every influence should be brought to bear to have him accept training and prepare for useful employment.

3. That the duty of the community is intelligently to employ him, rather than to expend equivalent energy in social entertainment or in the expression of unwise sympathy which tends more to demoralize than to build up character.

4. To make known to the public in general, and to the families of soldiers in particular, the remarkable results in the reconstruction of crippled men being attained by modern methods of medical and social science. The greatest terror in war has been the prospect of returning home disabled. It is no more than fair that mothers should know how little the loss of a limb means now to the man who is himself determined to succeed.

"Your enlistment in the cause is an essential link in the chain of restoring the cripple to useful employment, which will make him, in truth, no longer handicapped."

MARRIED.

At the residence of Mrs. D. C. Langford, Morton, Miss., on July 31, 1918, by Rev. Jas. G. Galloway, Lieut. ALBERT N. HORNE, of the Tank Corps, stationed at Gettysburg, Pa., to Miss MARTHA BUNCH.

God knows how my heart longs for the day in which it can be said, "It is Peace." But I would rather for the whole of the rest of my life, whatever it costs, be unable to say these blessed words until I could say the other and greater words about the task committed to us: "It is finished."—The Archbishop of York.

BIG THINGS IN A BIG WAY.

One of the tragedies of life is the way some of us deal with big things. We never seem able to get the idea of big things into our heads. In a kind of half-conscious way, we know this is a big world we live in, and we have a vague feeling that big deeds are being wrought; but we never really sense the tremendousness of the interests at stake and of the work to be done.

One reason of this, perhaps, is to be found in the fact that we allow ourselves to assume a kind of detached attitude toward the world at large. We have our own small circle, filled with our immediate personal interests, and we are never able to see beyond or above these. We are satisfied to be left alone because we practically live alone, knowing nothing and caring nothing about things that do not bear directly upon our own well-being. We are confessedly provincial and rather take pride in being so.

Another reason of this tragic way of dealing with vital issues, is our failure properly to coordinate values. We do not "see things sanely and see them whole." The insignificant is elevated to the place of the supreme and we spend our lives contending for that which at least is worth only a small part of our time.. We belong to the party of the "Big-endians" or "Little-endians" and fritter our lives away over a purely incidental detail of conduct, utterly unaware that the chief thing, after all, is to get at the meat of the egg.

But the chief reason of this every-day tragedy of life is our unwillingness to pay the price in the expenditure of intellectual and spiritual energy that will enable us to grapple vigorously and effectively with the forces that are contending for the mastery to-day. We do not have to overcome inertia of mind and soul in following the line of least resistance. An indolent confidence that "all's well with the world" leads to an easy-going, sluggardly attitude expressed in, "what's the use?" What ought to be prophetic vision and apostolic zeal dwindle away in the face of the comfortable doctrine of "let alone."

We need to awake. This world will never again be what it was before the war began. The foundations of the Faith stand firm, but there is going on a recasting of philosophies and a reorganization of institutions that will vitally affect the race for ages to come. The Church faces a situation more stupendous in its significance than it faced when the Roman Empire acknowledged the validity of its claim. To be alive to-day is an inspiration beyond any that men have ever felt before; to be a minister of the gospel in times like these is a privilege that comes only once in the course of events; to be a young minister, with the strength of youth, hearing the high call to service and viewing the measureless fields of usefulness, is an opportunity the angels might covet. Now is the time, if there ever was a time, to do big things in a big way.

SOME PREREQUISITES OF GOOD PREACHING.

This is the time of all times for the preacher to do good preaching. There is a religious predisposition on the part of a great many people, brought about by war conditions, that is enlarging our congregations in many places. The moral needs of the individual and of the community are standing out in an unusually clear light. The insistent call of duty is making itself heard in no uncertain tones. The sufficiency of the gospel has been demonstrated in extreme cases. The preacher who does not realize the situation and respond to it needs to bethink and bestir himself.

It may not be amiss to consider briefly some of the essentials of good preaching. We are not presumptuous enough to suppose that we can instruct our brethren, who are wiser than we, but we may be allowed to emphasize some of the things that all of us need to keep in mind.

First of all, the preacher must himself have a genuine religious experience. It must be a present, continuous experience. Probably very few men have responded to the solemn call to preach without having felt in their own hearts the saving power of the grace of God. They have entered upon their work not as a profession, but as a passion. But it is altogether possible for a preacher, as a layman, to lose the vivid sense of spiritual reality and become more or less formal in the discharge of the obligations that rest upon him as a minister. The passionate zeal, the overflowing joy, the boundless hope, the invincible faith that characterized us in the beginning, may have largely disappeared because our personal religious experience has not been continuous. If we are to be good preachers, we must at least have an experimental knowledge of what we are recommending to others. We cannot make others understand clearly what we know very little about ourselves; we cannot show to others what we have never seen; we cannot give what we have not received. Therefore we cannot be good preachers unless there is in our own souls a vital consciousness of the wonder-working power of God.

The reality of our own religious experience is, after all, the strongest credential we can carry into the pulpit. It sustains us under the pressure of the problems that bear heavily, sometimes, upon every thinking man; and it commends us, as nothing else does, to those who sit under our ministry. People will listen attentively to a man who, they know, is speaking of the facts of his own consciousness. The actual experiences of the soldier who has acquitted himself creditably in the trenches are listened to with a great deal more eagerness than are the theories of the recruit.

In the second place, before a preacher can do good preaching, he must become a part of the people to whom he ministers, and of the times in which he lives. This alone will articulate his message with the needs of mankind. The ascetic idea was that separation from the world was necessary for sanctity; as a result, the system of hermitages and monasteries arose. But the social teachings of Jesus have clarified men's minds on the subject of personal relationships, and to-day the Christian ideal is to be worked out in associational life. The man who does not feel a gripping interest in the lives of his fellow-men, who detaches himself from the community activities where he lives, who is not in touch with the spirit of his own times, is not likely to count for much in the moral uplift of the world. This identification with the interests of the world does not, of course, imply conformity to the ways of the world. It simply means that before a man can preach a good sermon he must learn to know men as they are, to know the things they are interested in, to feel the influences that are shaping their lives. He cannot do it by keeping himself away from them.

Again, good preaching is dependent upon hard work, careful study, thorough preparation. We always try to maintain a reverential attitude when we go to church; but we confess that our patience is sorely tried when we have to listen to a discourse that is altogether platitudinous. We take it that preaching is a serious business, and to attempt it without a realization of its seriousness is largely to fail in the very beginning. "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed," is an indictment that was brought against a careless ministry some centuries ago; it may be applicable in some cases to-day. Certainly, the shepherd who depends upon chance harvests of hay and grain to feed his flock will not always be able to satisfy them. And it will be no wonder if they begin to look elsewhere for provender. A few extraordinary men have the power of speaking effectively without much preparation, apparently; but most men have to labor diligently in the acquisition and organization of material before they are ready to appear before an audience. Fortunately, we can always have the pews to speak to, because they are fastened down; but live people are likely to go away unless we say something. And we cannot say much unless we give ourselves to diligent study.

In this day of need the preacher who has a genuine religious experience, who makes himself one with his people, who works hard, will be able to get a hearing. And many a heavily-burdened man, many a sorely-tried woman, after listening to such a man, will say gratefully, "That was a good sermon to-day."

It is a remarkable fact that Jesus never lost heart. He suffered all the weariness and pain and disappointment that men suffer, but he kept his faith in human nature and he maintained his grip on God. As a result, though he sweated drops of blood in Gethsemane and died in agony on Golgotha, he now dominates the moral universe and reigns in glory.

CATCHING THE WAY OF GOD.

Yes, they have caught the way of God,
To whom self lies displayed
In such clear vision as to cast
O'er others' faults a shade.

A bright horizon out at sea
Obscures the distant ships;
Rough hearts look smooth and beautiful
In charity's eclipse.

Love's changeful mood our neighbor's faults
O'erwhelms with burning ray,
And in excess of splendor hides
What is not burned away.

'Tis not enough to weep my sins,
'Tis but one step to heaven;
When I am kind to others, then
I know myself forgiven.

THE PROSPERITY OF THE WICKED.

Long ago the psalmist confessed that he "was envious at the prosperity of the wicked," and we find ourselves thousands of years afterwards feeling just about as he felt. If goodness be pleasing to God, then why is not prosperity linked to it by divine ordination? And if wickedness be under the frown of the Most High, how is it that so many wicked men are prosperous? To clear-visioned souls whose gaze sweeps beyond the petty limits of today and here this question offers but little difficulty; but to weak-visioned souls it seems to undermine the very foundations of the faith. "The prosperity of the wicked!" It is with us. How shall we account for it?

In the first place, we must remember that not all the wicked are prosperous. We know half a dozen such in our immediate neighborhood, and we jump to the conclusion that the majority of the wicked are like these. But a little reflection reveals the fact that only a very small percentage of the wicked are really prosperous. We know a few hard drinkers who seem to be making money, but as a rule hard drinking does not add to wealth, but quickly dissipates it. And gambling and debauchery, dishonesty and lying, hatred and envy, all undermine prosperity rather than cause it. It is not fair in such a purview to count those who have inherited wealth, and apart from these we shall find that the wicked who prosper are not nearly as numerous as we had reckoned.

And when we begin to consider the cases that undoubtedly exist, we find another explanation. These men are prosperous, not because of their wickedness, but in spite of it. With few exceptions a man's sins are unprofitable even on a dollars and cents basis. The fact that a man is a drunkard does not bring custom to his door; the fact that a man is untrustworthy does not aid his business; the fact that he is hateful and hates others does not add to his profits. And if he be prosperous while he is wicked, we shall have to look elsewhere than to his wickedness to discover the secret of that prosperity.

Some of the causes of prosperity are very clear, and hard work is one of the clearest. If we delve into the secret of many a fortune we shall find it built upon this solid foundation. While others slept or idled, or played, this man toiled, and the success he has won he has deserved to win because of his unremitting toil; and even the fact of his wickedness does not cancel the fundamental fact of his toil. His success came, not from his sin, but from his toil. And the man who doesn't toil, but is only "good," hasn't anything like a good argument against the success of the man who laid one good foundation stone of success in his hard and unremitting toil.

But toil alone does not win success. If a man desires to prosper in any business, then he must adapt his business to the constituency which he aims to serve. The man who desires the patronage of any community must find out first what that community wants. To force my choice upon any community in preference to its own is usually neither possible nor profitable. The chief secret of many a prosperous life is its adaptability to the conditions around it.

And honest service is usually at the bottom of men's prosperity. Advertising does much, but it soon wears out unless there is something worth advertising. It is possible, perhaps, by unlimited advertising to mix a cent's worth of sugar with half a cent's worth of dye and unlimited whiskey and water, and sell the result as a Universal Pain Panacea at one dollar per bottle, and so clear a fortune in a few months; but the panacea will soon cease to do its work, and some fresh fraud must be designed. But usually prosperity is based upon real service, and honest and upright dealing with the public. It is common in ill-informed quarters to look upon any great success as based upon fraud, but it will be found rather to be based upon real value rendered to a public which cannot always be fooled.

But sometimes business prosperity is founded upon such a little thing as good-nature. We patronize the man who smiles, the man who shows that he appreciates our custom, the man who not only has "the goods," but who also is easy to deal with. Crankiness is a costly luxury, in which no business man can afford to indulge. Many a church member has found all sorts of fault with his fellow members for patronizing a rival who was a "sinner," forgetful of the fact that that sinner somehow was a much pleasanter man with whom to do business than was he who had for years been a member of the church. It was not the rival's wickedness which created his prosperity, but his kindness and good-nature.

There are cases, however, where a fortune has been made possible only by uniform cultivation of the most hardened selfishness. There are fortunes which are built upon tears and blood; there is a prosperity which damns its possessor to the lowest hell; a wealth every dollar of which cries out to the God above for justice against the possessor. Fortunately few men are built of such stuff as will enable them to acquire such a fortune, or will make them proof against the sufferings of their business victims, and yet while the cases of such prosperity are few they are sometimes startling, we must confess. Such men we can only leave to the judgment of the future and the muttered curses of the thousands whom they have wronged. Apart from these cases we think we shall find that the prosperity of the wicked is due, not to their defiance of God's laws, but to their obedience to those laws.—The Christian Guardian.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND A PATRIOTIC OPPORTUNITY.

By William T. Ellis.

To "keep the home-fires burning;" to prevent a slump in national idealism; to maintain patriotism on the highest levels; to save America to essential religion; to help Christians to be big and brave enough for any changes in conventional religious forms that the war may bring to pass; and to preserve the soul of the nation from becoming calloused or embittered or darkened or otherwise hurt by the war—this is the clear present task of the Christian Church and all her agencies. "New occasions teach new duties." This grave hour of history seriously summons all leaders in religious thought and activity to great and unusual efforts.

Some uncertain spirits may falter and ask whether the Gospel has any word for this unprecedented day. Such know neither the times nor the Gospel. The eternal contemporaneousness of the message of Jesus was never more clearly manifest than now. The war itself has unleashed for all the nations, in newness and practicality, the principles and spirit of the Savior. Our present need is for alert interpreters of the Gospel and of our times. The clamant query is not "What?" but "How?" Methods of pressing home to the hearts of all the people—especially of those outside the normal reach of the Church—the pertinency and power of the truth should engross us now.

Even more pervasive than the outreach of the pulpit is the influence of the Sunday school. It goes to every village and cross-roads of the nation. The Sunday school lesson is possibly the most potent single educational or character-shaping influence in the whole world to-day. Its message is multiplied ways and times without number: what the teacher reads is carried to classes and homes and into conversation, growing like a snow-ball as it goes. I wonder if even the Sunday school workers have realized the full potency of the lesson? For these Scripture portions are all related to life. They are selected for their character-forming qualities. They contain the truth which, if pressed home with regularity and with interest, will keep the nation itself steady.

There are surprising potentialities for patriotic and Christian propaganda in these lessons. Every qualified commentator and teacher will interpret them in the light of the world war and its implications. They offer a rare opportunity for presenting the reality and workability of the teachings of Jesus. As one who has been treating the Uniform International Sunday School Lessons for daily newspaper readers, I can testify that I have found them aglow with messages of fortitude for our fighters, of comfort for their kindred, of illumination for patriotic service, of inspiration for new ministry to the world, and of vindication for the ideals of America and the Allies, as expressed by that stalwart Sunday school man, President Wilson. These lessons bring the eternal Word of God to bear on present perplexities which will never be satisfactorily solved in any other manner. When the lessons are linked with life, the throbbing, thrilling, tremendous life of the present crisis, they are as absorbing as dispatches from the battle-front. By them, the purposes and principles of the people may be maintained at the lofty levels which the occasion requires.

Patriotism summons editors and writers and teachers to utilize the Sunday school lessons as a vehicle for conveying the highest interpretation of our country's cause. In times of great feeling, like the present, the public is most sensitive to spiritual appeals. Therefore, if the sincerely religious aspect of this war for righteousness is clearly and consistently presented to the people, their spirits will be strengthened and their resolution will be established. Patriotism is unshakable when founded upon faith in God. Surely this is the hour wherein all the tides of national feeling may be purified and directed by religious conviction. Both State and Church may greatly be served now, if Christian leaders are alert to the occasion.

That is the note which should be dominant during these heart-hungry days in Church press, Sunday school publications, and wherever else the truth may be told. Religion and patriotism should be inseparable. A reverent and teachable respect for the truths of religion can keep patriotism from deteriorating into mere blatant nationalism and militarism. So it becomes the task of all who write or speak in the name of the Gospel to pour into the day's spirit of patriotism the great impulses and inspirations and inhibitions of the Christian religion. Thus shall we not only help to win the war; but also we shall help the nation to win our own souls.

Swarthmore, Pa.

"Life, indeed, must always be a compromise between common sense and the ideal—the one abating nothing of its demands, the other accommodating itself to what is practicable and real."

IS THE YOUNG MAN SAFE?

A country boy went to the big city to achieve success. He was a product of a Christian home, a Sunday school and church. His time and money were in a new market. Worldly forces made him flattering offers, the enticements were insistent, the points of contact were numerous. The church was there, but not everywhere. The Sunday school was willing that he should come, but not determined to get him. He went where he was most wanted. He made his investment with the fever-stricken pleasure-seekers of a pulsating city. After bitter experience, robbed of his value to the world of pleasure, he was found by the belated church, and won to the unselfish forces of Christ's kingdom. He became a wide-awake church man.

He could not forget the multitudes of victims sent from the country to the hydra-headed, insatiable city. He determined to do what he could to have his church on time at the city ports of entry. He became the teacher of a young men's Bible class. He associated with him young men who knew the ways and the perils of the city, but knew also the saving power of Jesus Christ. The regular sessions of the class were understood to be occasions for spiritual re-enforcement for the main task of winning others. The prayers were intimate, breathing a spirit of real brotherhood. The sick members were mentioned by name. They were visited and ministered to. Men out of work were helped to get employment. They were followed with an interest deeper than professional. Finding employment was regarded as but one step toward safety. The class must help the man to find food for his unnourished soul. He must find Christ, and fellowship with Christ's folks.

The leaders of this class never admit that there is a man who may not be won. If their efforts seem to be failing, they apply more love—love in terms of kindness, sacrifice, patience, the love that never fails. One evening the teacher and the president of the class pointed out to the writer a fine upstanding, forward-looking man, saying, "It took us seven years to win that man, but we got him."

One day a distinguished leader in organized labor circles visited the class. He was restless under the weight of responsibility that rested upon him. He was to meet the President of the United States and other distinguished leaders within a few days for the consideration of matters of great moment to the nation's welfare. He was so impressed with the spirit of the men, who sang and prayed and worshiped so devoutly, that he was emboldened to ask their prayers on behalf of his mission to Washington. He is now one of the most ardent supporters of the work of the class. He enjoys richly the fellowship of this body of brothers.

The class has grown in numbers, and has developed such a strength of organization and control of resources that it has assumed the support of its teacher, who is now able to devote his entire time and consecrated genius to the direction of the class activities.

One might travel the country over and not find a finer example of what Christianized fellowship among men means for the conservation of character amid the strain and stress of a modern city.—Rev. W. S. Bovard, D.D., in Zion's Herald.

CENTENARY IS OPPORTUNE SAYS BISHOP JAMES ATKINS.

Calling it the greatest meeting which had ever been held at Lake Junaluska, Bishop Atkins made the opening speech of the conference. As a preface to his address on the opportuneness of the Centenary, he told of the first meeting held in the tabernacle, a missionary meeting at which a small group of laymen pledged one hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars. "Since then other great meetings have been held here," he said, "but none in the class of this meeting to-night."

Answering the question as to the opportuneness of the Centenary celebration, Bishop Atkins said, "This opportuneness manifests itself from a number of considerations. One of these is that the Church now as never before regards its obligations to the races of the world. All lines have been wiped out, political, civil and social lines, as the needs of humanity have become one. The needs of the world, without regard to other conditions, have become the one objective of the Church of Christ."

The second reason was given in the fact that the Church is in the eyes of the world as it has never been before. Men are recognizing, according to the speaker, that the Church is proving itself alive to every interest of mankind.

Again, the opportuneness of the missionary movement appears, said the Bishop, in the fact that the Church is united and that every branch of the Church of Christ falls into line to do the patriotic act and to do the religious thing that we are called upon to do for our Lord and Master.

"The opportuneness of this Centenary," said the Bishop, "is also seen in the deepening religious sense of the times. This is true not of the Church alone, although the Church itself is on its knees more than at any period of its history, but it is also true of the world on the outside. It is this deepening sense of the religious things in the world that constitutes a responsibility to us. If Methodism should flinch in the face of such a time it would everlastingly disgrace the name of Methodism."

The needs after the world war are such that the Bishop urged upon his hearers that, "We must find ourselves and let the world find us in a state of preparedness for meeting this issue. The commercial side of the world must meet its issues; politicians and statesmen will take care of theirs, but you are charged with the responsibility for meeting the highest issues of the Church of Christ. All this constitutes a reason for the opportuneness of the Centenary movement."

MAKING PROGRESS BY GOING BACKWARD.

The first Christian century, as regards its unrivaled revelations of truth and life, is still far in advance of the twentieth century. The New Testament is the most up-to-date book in the world. Jesus was not only ahead of his time, but ahead of all times. The fortieth century, no matter how advanced its science may become or how perfected its art of living, will still look to him as the Author of all progress. More than three thousand years ago Moses gave the Hebrews a code of moral laws which have, ever since, been the basis of the world's most humane and just legislation. The modern man, who in character, ideals, and achievement would be abreast of his age, must go back thirty centuries for his moral inspiration and instruction. The Man of Galilee, in like manner, is to-day far in advance of the world's best thought and life, and the twentieth century is compelled to go back to the first for the ideals and motive power of its coveted progress.

In so far as it has not done this it has lapsed into barbarisms that outstrip the most extravagant inhumanities of ancient paganism. Eliminate from the intellectual and moral life of a great nation the moral instructions and principles of Jesus, and the people most boastful of progress and efficiency will sink back into conditions that are bestial and diabolic. The Teutonic repudiation of moral law and order, of justice, truth and brotherly love, of the common decencies of organized society, is nothing less than twentieth-century science, efficiency, kultur, without the spiritual illumination of the first century. A river runs dry when its far-off mountain springs cease to flow. The springs from which Christian civilization flows are the Sermon on the Mount, the moral principles, life and spiritual revelations of Jesus. Without them the boasted evolutions of mankind are soon found to be devolutions. In fact, creative evolution in the realm of morals has been a false claim. It may be, as Bergson says, the characteristic process in nature, but in the realm of man's free will and spiritual personality progress comes only through "creative revolution," which is only another name for supernatural redemption.

Progress in morals is optional, not natural. Men elect to be good, or they never become good. God co-operates with the intelligence and voluntary will of man when man covets and appropriates the divine enduement. His incarnation in Jesus Christ becomes man's opportunity for godlikeness. It is both an ideal of character and a method of revelation and redemption. In his divine humanity Jesus opens the way for humanity's co-operation with God in the moral and spiritual process of world-building. Wherever and whenever men have availed themselves of this divine provision for their deeper needs they have made steady and majestic progress in character, capacity, and achievement. Whenever they have severed connection with supernatural energy by skepticism, materialism, false philosophies of life, or voluntary choice of evil, they have sunk into rapid decline.

To-day this process of decline, in the moral decay of great empires, is visible to all the world. Teutonic science has set aside the supernaturalism of the New Testament. Jesus is reduced not only to a mere man, but to a man with a sentimental, impractical, false philosophy of life and morals. The sanctions of morality thus gradually and imperceptibly lost their hold on the Germanic empire. Human wit disowned its need of spiritual illumination and guidance. Abandoning the ideals of the gospel, the leaders of a great nation resorted to material force and scoffed at reliance upon divine energy. Caesar took the place of Christ, and the collapse of civilization and of Germanic Christianity has been the natural and necessary outcome of despising the teachings of the first century, through the materialistic ambitions of the twentieth.

This appalling revelation of human depravity and decline, and of man's inherent capacity for self-destruction, has renewed the confidence of the western world and of all lovers of truth and humanity everywhere, in the spiritual verities of the New Testament and in the divine ministry of Jesus. The Church has never adequately had the courage of its convictions as to the practicability of the gospel, and, just now, international conditions make impossible the present application of the pacific principles of the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus himself recognized the fact that there were times when self-defense and the cause of justice itself made it impossible to operate the higher motive and principle. Referring to such a time, he said to his disciples, "He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one." In other words, it is impossible to deal with a burglar or murderer on the basis of gentleness and love. Conditions are not normal. And they are not normal because one of the parties has refused to be governed by the divine program of conduct and character. For the time being he has to be dealt with on the basis of his own spirit and action. This, however, in no way qualifies the literal truth of Christ's teaching. It is the exception that proves the rule. Its abnormality proves that right human relationships can be established only in the spirit and according to the teachings of the Master. Jesus taught his disciples not to retaliate, to have great patience with personal insults and turn the other cheek to the offender, and even to love and pray for one's enemies. This rule of life is for universal application, and it is self-evident that universal obedience to this ideal would put an end to human strife and controversy, and change the face of the world.

To say, then, that such an idealistic conception of human relationships is impracticable is worse than infidel, it is sheer nonsense. It is the only ideal that will work, for in the present suicide of the race the world is learning, or should learn, that of all programs on earth the most unworkable and ruinous is that of strife and hatred and war. When men and nations are mutually willing to adopt the principles and accept the spirit of Jesus as not only normal and practical, but divine, skepticism will cease, and the Sermon on the Mount will be seen to be the only key to world-unity and peace. The world must go back to the first century for its inspirations and ideals if it would live normally and make progress in the latest century of its onmoving life.—Western Christian Advocate.

MEMOIR OF REV. W. C. LESTER.

The true epic of our times is not man and material splendor, but man and God. The only essential revelation of God is man and the only super-man is the God-inspired man. A noble life filled with the light of God and breathing the radiance of hope and faith, crowned with heroic service and deathless love, rises infinitely above and outlives all pride and pomp and glory of empire. If we must have heroes, and wars in which to make them, there is no war so brilliant as the war with wrong; no hero so fit to be sung as he who has gained the bloodless victory of a spotless life and unquenchable sympathy and mercy for bewildered and broken humanity. This quality is the positive virtue of character and not transient impulse, a rocket rushing fretfully up to disturb but for a moment the darkness which surrounds it, but it is a steady fire which darts forth tongues of flame. True life is no sparkling epigram of unmoral action but a luminous epic of character. In the long, dark history of the ages, men of God, the heroes of the Cross, have been the highest types of chivalry, the best exponents of truth and righteousness, the noblest reliance of virtue and the safest guardians of civilization.

All of the above, and much more than can be expressed by our poor tongue, is true of our dear, erstwhile brother and fellow-laborer, but now sainted, William C. Lester. He was born in Yalobusha, County, Miss., on October 29, 1853, and was a son of Dr. James D. and Lizzie Cook Lester. His own mother died when little William was two years of age. It is said that for almost a day before she left this earthly scene she had her child near, her hand upon his head, praying God to keep and guilde and make a preacher of him.

It is not hard for those who knew Brother Lester, als exceedlng sweetness of spirit, his gentleness of manner, his loving radiance of soul, to believe that the earnest prayers of his sainted mother were answered in his life to the end of his days. Upon his mother's death he was left to the care and training of his Grandmother Lester, who was nobly furnished for such a delicate and responsible duty. How well she succeeded in this sacred charge was evidenced in the life and character of the man.

Brother Lester's early years were spent on the farm, where he caught and interpreted many of the head and heart problems of life which built him into a man of rare strength, poise, calmness of spirit and soundness of judgment. The beginning of his education was in the country school. Later on, his grandfather moved to the city of Oxford and William was put in the State University. From this university his mental training and discipline were obtained which so well fitted him for his life work.

Brother Lester was married to Miss Permella Allen Patterson, of Tula, on August 26, 1875. She proved to be a wife and mother worthy the name and the companionship. She is a woman of rare character and common sense and they two made a happy, attractive home, not only for their children but for all who entered it.

His faithful wife and six devoted children survive to mourn their loss: Mrs. Capt. Bradford, Miss Daisy and K. P., of Tutwiler, Miss., Mrs. Thatcher, of Dallas, Texas, Lieut. William C., with our Expeditionary Force in France, and John P., a noble, heroic soul who was among the very first volunteers of that immortal army of American patriots to brave the seas and the deadly submarine menace to give their lives for the sacred heritage of world liberty. John P., true to his blood and ideals of Christian training, was among the very first few of American youth to draw the sword and face the enemy in the thick of the fight on the sacred soil of sunny France. In this battle he was slightly wounded and is now in a German prison in West Prussia. The Dear Lord—some sweet day, when peace shall come again to men—will bring these brave sons of a noble sire back to their loved ones and their friends who are lonesome while they are gone.

Brother Lester was soundly converted at the Oxford Camp Ground and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1874. He was licensed to preach in December of the same year and was admitted on trial in the North Mississippi Conference, November 23, 1875. He was received into full connection two years later and was ordained deacon by Bishop Pierce. In 1879 he was ordained elder by Bishop Kavanaugh. His entire itinerant life was spent in the North Mississippi Conference, where he served the following appointments: 1876-7, Newport circuit; 1878-80, Richmond circuit; 1881, Quincy circuit; 1882-4, Sarepta circuit; 1885-6, Benela circuit; 1887-8, Atlanta circuit; 1889-92, Chester circuit; 1893-4, Eupora circuit; 1895, Ackerman circuit; 1896, Coffeeville circuit; 1897-1900, Black Hawk circuit; 1901, Sidon and Itta Bena; 1902-4, Houston and Wesley; 1905-8, Guntown and Baldwyn; 1909, Crawford circuit; 1910-11, Webb circuit; 1912-13, Isola circuit; 1914-16, Arcola circuit; 1917-18, Tutwiler circuit. From this latter appointment the faithful itinerant was transferred from the labors of the church militant to the rest and peace of the Church Trlumphant. Suddenly, like a watch in the night, without previous warning and with only a few minutes of violent coughing on the night of February 28, 1918, just at 11:30 o'clock, the wheels of life stood still and the spirit of comrade and loving friend and brother went home to the God whom he adored and served. The writer was with him only a few days before his demise in his first quarterly conference. Brother Lester was just beginning what promised a fine year's work. He was hopeful and cheerful, but alas, alas for our human calculations! His people loved him and showed the keenest anguish of sorrow and loss when he was taken. They did all they could for him and his stricken family.

Brother Lester was a strong, thoughtful gospel preacher, a man of keen observation, analytical mind and great spiritual insight into the deep things of God, in the Bible and outside of it.

His life was greater than any sermon ever preached by the most eloquent of men. His troubles and griefs over the loss of his children had only mellowed and sweetened his great heart of peace and quiet and made radiant with eternal assurance the deep and silent yearnings of his noble soul. His love was like the love of a woman and his life the clear shining of the sun on a cloudless day. He was a noble husband, a tender father, a genial friend, a faithful minister of Jesus Christ, and we know where we shall find him. On the first Sunday in March the writer accompanied the sad members of the household to Ackerman, Miss., where, in the afternoon, we held the last rites of the funeral service under the tabernacle of old South Union Camp Ground, and amid the sorrow and tears of scores of his former friends and parishioners, we laid his mortal remains beneath the red hills to await the resurrection of the just in that glad day when the Lord shall come to gather his children home.

I loved him devotedly for the warm heart he carried for all his kind. The dear Lord bless and guide and keep in peace his lonely companion and sorrowing children!

LAKE CHARLES AND THE STORM.

Dear Brother Carley: Our little city has just passed through the worst storm ever known in this section of the State. In fact, we deemed ourselves outside the storm area. Beginning early Tuesday, the 6th, the wind increased in velocity until it reached its maximum in mid-afternoon. Not a single building wholly escaped and many were completely demolished, including residences, stores, factories, mills, schools and churches.

Fortunately the storm came in the day time or else hundreds would most certainly have lost their lives. None of my own congregation were fatally injured, though a number were hurt, and several quite seriously. The steeple of our church was wrecked, and, indeed, we may not be able to make further use of the church; but that has not yet been determined. In case it can be repaired, we have sufficient storm insurance to make temporary repairs. The parsonage, including garage, was damaged also, but all of my family escaped without the slightest harm.

The total damage is immense and it will take a long time to repair homes, rebuild churches, factories and mills, and years to repair the financial losses. The more advanced rice crops have been badly damaged, but the late rice will probably recover somewhat.

The people as a whole are setting themselves to the task of opening streets and repairing and rebuilding, and everybody is cheerful, looking hopefully to the future and thankful that no more lives were lost. Thirty persons were killed in this section, but less than one-third of them in Lake Charles.

While we were unable to use our church, the Presbyterians and the Methodist Episcopal people opened their churches to us in a most brotherly way. As the M. E. pastor is away on his vacation, we decided to accept the invitation extended by his congregation, and I preached to good congregations at both the morning and evening hour.

This is the fourth storm of the kind that I have passed through, and if the "weather man" is willing, I have had enough.

OUR REPRESENTATIVE CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C., NEARING COMPLETION.

It will be good news to the Church at large to be informed that our Representative Church at the National Capital is rapidly approaching completion.

The Commission, appointed by the General Conference, to erect this great church, met in Washington, D. C., on August 7 to inspect the work already done and to provide for the speedy finishing and furnishing of the structure.

It was found that the work on the building has so far advanced that the congregation can worship in the Sunday School Assembly Hall by the last Sunday in September and occupy the completed building by January 1, 1919, provided all outstanding subscriptions and pledges are paid at an early day and a few thousands of dollars additional are secured within the next few months to supply furnishings suitable for such a church.

Even in the present unfinished condition of the building, it is one of the most impressive churches in Washington and represents Southern Methodism more than creditably. It may be described justly as magnificent.

The Commission directs me to request all who have made subscriptions, or pledges, to make payment without delay, to the end that the work may be finished free of all debt or incumbrance. This result is in easy reach if all parties will heed this request and if some who have not contributed heretofore will now come to the aid of the enterprise. Many subscribers have already paid in full their subscriptions. Others have paid in part. Some have not paid anything yet.

The Commission has made contracts, relying upon the payment of all outstanding subscriptions and pledges, and these contracts can be promptly met if all parties concerned will send without delay their contributions to the Financial Secretary, Rev. George S. Sexton, D. D., Shreveport, La., or to Rev. H. A. Boaz, D. D., Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, Louisville, Ky. The Commission delayed the execution of the building until resources were in hand or in sight to finish the work without debt, feeling that our people could not afford, and would not approve, a debt on this Representative Church at the Capital of the Nation.

Rejoicing in what has been accomplished, the Commission now calls upon the Church at large to supply the funds still lacking to complete this noble enterprise without a penny of debt upon it. This can be done, and the Commission believes it will be done. Complete success is in sight.

WARREN A. CANDLER,
Chairman of the Commission.

WANTED, for a mission church, a second-hand organ; must be cheap. Address Julian S. Duncan, University, Miss.

TO THE PASTORS, STEWARDS, SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS, AND LAY LEADERS OF THE HATTIESBURG DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: Please allow me to call attention in a special way to the following very important items, and urge that they be given early and very earnest attention. Our Church is calling on us as never before-to rally to her needs. Let us not falter in the great demands laid upon us, but be as true and brave soldiers of the Cross as we expect our soldier boys to be on the battlefields fighting for our life and liberty.

1. Let all of our pastors and lay leaders and Sunday school superintendents inform themselves thoroughly on the Missionary Centenary Movement that they may be able to instruct the membership. Later on in the year it is hoped to have at least three institutes in the district to consider this greatest movement our Church has ever made. Be ready for it.

2. The War Work Commission of our Church is asking for a special collection from each charge for equipment of chaplains and other workers at home and in foreign fields where our boys are to bleed and die, and to win their great victory. May we not make special effort and send in the amounts at an early date, that we may not be behind other churches in this work? Bishop Lambuth, Chairman of the Commission, and our own Bishop Kilgo are urging that this be done at once. We cannot afford to be less loyal to the call of our Church than to the calls of our Government to which you have so nobly responded. The amounts have been apportioned by the Commission, and some of the brethren are already busy raising their part.

3. The Sunday School Institute of our district will be held at Collins, August 29, 30. Let every pastor and superintendent be present, if possible, as well as officers and teachers, members of Sunday school committees, officers of Wesley Bible classes, and delegates elected by the Sunday school. Don't let us forget to have Children's Day services in every Sunday school where they have not already been held, and have as large collection to report as possible. Ours must be a banner district.

4. The time for pushing the Conference collections and pastors' salaries is upon us, and should be vigorously prosecuted before the next drive comes for Liberty Bonds, Red Cross, and other calls necessary to winning the war. Times are prosperous, and we should have the best report at Conference in the history of our district. Let us all bestir ourselves to this end.

5. It is highly important that the very best men available be elected at the fourth quarterly conference as lay leaders, and that every charge leader be present on Centenary Day at our Annual Conference at McComb. Let us ask God to help us find the men and secure their attendance at our Conference. Pray and work for great revivals.

6. There can be nothing more helpful in assisting us in measuring up to the present responsibilities and in aiding us in keeping our people informed, than our Conference Organ. It should be put into as many of our homes as possible. No one can be a well-informed Methodist without it. We have been asked by the Annual Conference to secure 200 new subscriptions in this district this year—a very modest request; yet, so far as I have been informed, we are considerably short of that number. Can we afford to fail to do that much? Some of our pastors have secured their allotment, and some have gone beyond. Are you one of these?

Special mention should certainly be made of the Haughton and Doyline charge with an offering of $53, as this charge stands right at the top with First Church, Alexandria, which led in Children's Day offering last year.

There are a number of the large schools which have not made remittance on Children's Day offering, and there are a number of the smaller schools which have secured programs from the Publishing House and have not sent in funds.

The Monroe District is the only one that has sent in more money this year than was paid in last year, and if we reach the $1000 that the Board is working for, each of the other districts will have to do just a little better than was done last year.

Brethren, please help to ring up the $1000. If you have observed Children's Day, send in the money. If you have not observed the day, have some kind of service which will be a credit to your school and take an offering for the Sunday School Board.

Brother Holloman has gone to Chicago and from there overseas in Y. M. C. A. work, and as acting Treasurer, I count on you to keep enough money coming in to keep us going till Conference, without borrowing from the bank, to meet current expenses.

THE STORM AT MERRYVILLE, LA.—AN APPEAL.

Dear Brother Carley: A terrific storm struck our town yesterday, doing great damage to crops and property. The town is a wreck. Many houses are down all over town. Only one life was lost. Our church was blown off its blocks and badly damaged. We may be able to jack it up and put a new foundation under it. The parsonage was damaged very little. Our loss is considerable. We have just finished repairing our parsonage, and the home of almost every member of our church is damaged, some of them totally wrecked. Any help the brethren can render us will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly,

J. A. McCORMACK, P. C.

Merryville, La., Aug. 7.

The following anecdote shows the regard which most men have for wisdom: "Old Diogenes, receiving no attention while discoursing of virtue and philosophy, fell to singing a funny song; and multitudes crowded to hear him! 'Ye gods!' he said, 'how much more is folly admired than wisdom!'"

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.

She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.

So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

Notes and Comment

Let Them Do It.

A dispatch from Paris says that an order issued by the new chief of the German admiralty staff, Admiral Scheer, is taken to mean that the Germans want to attack the British naval forces. We know very little about the exact present condition of the British navy with reference to a general engagement; but we do know something about the fighting qualities of British seamen. If the Germans want to try issues, let them do it.

What Shall We Do Now?

According to newspaper reports, the Negro servants of New Orleans have formed a union with a membership of 1800 at present. They have announced that when their membership reaches 2000, they will strike for shorter hours and higher wages, all of which shows that the Negroes are progressive citizens who keep abreast of the times. "Less work and more pay" is a popular cry everywhere—and in a good many cases it is just. People who are able to keep servants will probably grant their demands before the strike takes place. Labor is to-day coming into its own.

Hoover Signally Honored.

Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, the American Food Administrator, doubtless has his enemies at home. But the value of his work is fully recognized by most people and it is placed to his credit accordingly. A unique distinction has been conferred upon him by the Belgian government. By official action he has received the title, "Honorary Citizen and Friend of the Belgian Nation." This honor is given him in recognition of his service when he stood at the head of the colossal undertaking of feeding Belgium. To live in the hearts of the people, is the greatest honor that can come to any human being.

"Marse Henry" Retires.

Announcement has been made that the Louisville Courier-Journal has passed into the control of Judge Robert Worth Bingham and that Mr. Henry Watterson, who for almost fifty years has been in editorial control, will retire as active editor. Mr. Watterson has, in our opinion, been on the wrong side of many questions, but he has been a striking and influential force in American journalism, and his public utterances have been widely quoted. He will continue his connection with the paper as "editor emeritus," a title chosen by himself, and will contribute to its editorial columns from time to time.

All Right Everywhere, Then.

We clip the following from a New Orleans daily newspaper: "The Moose lodge of New Orleans No. 477, voted itself dry Wednesday night at a session at its headquarters, 1422 Canal Street. This was in honor of Senator E. M. Stafford's prohibition vote in the State Senate. Senator Stafford is Dictator of No. 477. There were only two dissenting votes. The clubhouse bar goes immediately. 'Otherwise we are all right,' say the Moosers." We do not vouch for the truth of this report, and we know nothing of the habits of the Moosers generally, but they are certainly "all right" when they vote out the clubhouse bar. If they are all right "otherwise," they must be pretty good people.

Storm Strikes Lake Charles.

A terrific storm struck Lake Charles, La., on Tuesday afternoon of last week, killing and wounding a score or more of people, and doing damage that is estimated at over a million dollars. For awhile on Tuesday it looked as if New Orleans would be in the path of the tornado but, fortunately for the city, the storm changed its course. The Methodist Church at Lake Charles was injured by the crashing of the bell from its place in the steeple; every church in the city was injured. Offers of help were immediately sent to Lake Charles by Governor Pleasant, the mayor of New Orleans and others, but the heroic people of that city announced that they were able to handle the situation. Gerstner Field, the government aviation training camp, situated near Lake Charles, was greatly damaged.

The First Bale.

The new cotton crop is beginning to be put on the market and the daily newspapers contain numerous reports of the appearance of the "first bale" in various communities. Far be it from us to say which was the "very first" reported. We really do not know, and if we did, we would not risk the danger attendant upon the stirring up of personal and community jealousies. But we are glad to note that the opening price for cotton seems to be good. The recent unfavorable government report on the crop condition for the month of July immediately stiffened the market, and the prospect now is, that the growers will be well compensated for the abnormal expense they have been put to in raising this great staple of the South. This means much to the Church and all benevolent causes. We trust many of our preachers will be able to report "collections in full" at Conference.

A Close Call.

It was reported last week that a German submarine shelled and sank the Diamond Shoals lightship, off Cape Hatteras, N. C. The submarine came within a half-mile of shore, according to the report. That was a pretty close call—closer than enemy vessels have ventured to make for sometime. We attach no special importance to these isolated attacks of the under-sea craft. They are probably made with the hope of bringing terror to the hearts of timid Americans. But they will fail of their purpose. We know perfectly well that our naval and military authorities are thoroughly alive to the situation, and no great danger is to be anticipated from these enemy boats. Probably considerable capital is made of these visits in Germany, but we are accustomed to the wild boasting of the Hun leaders made to keep up the spirit of their misinformed people. We are not uneasy.

The War Situation.

The war situation continues to be altogether favorable to the Allies. The retreat of the German forces has gone steadily on, the Allies capturing a large number of prisoners and much material. The French and British forces have struck a new blow against the enemy in Picardy, winning notable success. It is reported that a proportion of officers and sturdiest soldiers is being withdrawn from sections of the German army for the formation of a force of half a million which is to receive special training and have special organiation. It is believed that this force is being organized to stand behind the Rhine against an invasion of German soil. This would seem to indicate that the Kaiser realizes that the tide of war is about to turn, if indeed it has not already turned, and that he is making preparation for a defensive stand. Looked at from any angle, the prospect at this writing is most encouraging for the Allies.

The New Draft Bill.

The Government authorities are urging the passage by Congress of a new draft law changing the present age limits to 18 and 45. The Senate Military Committee is holding hearings on the bill now, and will present the measure when Congress convenes on August 24. General March, Chief of Staff, has announced that the United States has reached the decision to enlarge its military program to carry out the policies agreed upon at the recent inter-allied conference at Paris to speed up prosecution of the war and bring it to an early conclusion. In keeping with this decision, the War Department plans an army of approximately 5,000,000 men, to be raised as soon as possible. We now have about 3,000,000 men under arms. It is the general impression that while, according to the new bill, all men between 18 and 45 will be subject to military duty, those between 18 and 20 will be kept in this country until the last. More and more we are coming to realize that we must put into this war all our energies and resources if we would be victorious. Food and man-power are the essentials of success. We have both, and we are going to put them unreservedly into the fight.

Shall the Government Enter the Packing Business?

The Federal Trade Commission, after an exhaustive investigation of a great volume of evidence, much of it taken from the confidential files of the packing companies, has recommended government acquisition and control of all the principal stock yards, cold storage plants, warehouses, and refrigerator and cattle cars. The Commission says the power of the five leading packing companies has been "unfairly and illegally" used to manipulate live stock markets, restrict interstate and international supplies of food, control the prices of dressed meats and other foods, defraud both the producers and consumers of food, crush effective competition, secure special privileges from railroads, stock yard companies and municipalities, and profiteer. If these accusations are supported by the evidence, we sincerely hope the Government will lose no time in taking such measures as will effectively remedy such an intolerable situation. It is almost impossible to conceive of men who have become so lost to all feeling of decency as to become guilty of the things charged in the report. The penitentiary would be the proper home for an indefinite period for such business perverts.

Ratification Wins in Louisiana.

At 12:50 p. m., Thursday, August 8, the House of Representatives of the Louisiana Legislature, by a vote of 69 to 41, adopted the resolution that had previously been adopted by the Senate, ratifying the prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This action is a most encouraging sign of the growth of sentiment in favor of national prohibition. When the amendment was proposed by Congress, its opponents counted confidently on its rejection by Maryland, New York, and Louisiana. However, when the issue was presented, Maryland promptly ratified; in New York, the fight ended in a draw and the question was put off till next year; now Louisiana has lined up on the right side. Governor Pleasant is to be commended for his quiet determination that the State should have an absolutely fair chance to pass on the question with a full representation in the Senate after it had failed in that body by one vote owing to a vacancy in a district that was known to be strongly prohibition. To that end, he called a special session of the Legislature. Full credit must be given, also, to Rev. A. W. Turner, the State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, who has led the fight valiantly. The following praise, contained in an editorial of the New Orleans Item, in its issue of August 8, is fully deserved: "Meantime, friends and opponents of Dr. Turner, who has led the prohibition fight, will have to congraulate him. He has fought long, handled his case ably and successfully. He has not been played with by the politicians but has proven himself a master strategist, for he has played with and against the politicians and has proven a master at the game." Louisiana is the thirteenth State to ratify the amendment. There are still thirty-five States to vote, and their Legislatures will meet next January. Of these, eighteen are already for prohibition, and can almost certainly be counted on to vote for the amendment. Of the remaining seventeen, only five will have to vote for the amendment to make it effective. It does not take a prophet to foretell the outcome. National prohibition is almost at hand.

Do not run after happiness, but seek to do good, and you will find that happiness will run after you. The day will dawn, full of expectation—the night will fall, full of repose. This world will seem a very good place, and the world to come a better place still.—Southern Churchman.

Your Brain Must Have Pure Blood.

No more important physiological discovery has ever been made than that the brain requires a due supply of pure blood. It is estimated that this organ receives as much as one-tenth of all the blood that is sent from the heart—a great deal more than any other organ of the body. If the vitality of the blood is impaired, the blood then affords the brain an imperfect stimulus and there is mental and physical languor, sluggishness or inactivity.

Pure blood is blood that is free from humors; it is healthy blood, and the term pure blood as it is generally used means blood that is not only right in quality but also in quantity. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure, rich, red blood. This is one of the great truths about this great medicine.—Adv.

THE SAMPLER'S MESSAGE.

"I don't love Annabelle any more. She's not niee to me and I'm not going to play with her, so there! there!"

Mother sighed. Annabelle was the little girl next door, and she and Isabella had been having far too many quarrels of late. The two children were really lnseparable in spite of all their fussing, so after Isabella had been playing alone for a little while she made the complaint that she always made when she tried to get along without Annabelle for more than half an hour.

"Oh, dear! What shall I do now?"

"Why not go up into the attie and play 'dress-up,'" suggested mother.

The little girl clapped her hands.

"Oh, goody!" she cried, "that's just what I'll do," adding, naughtily, "Annabelle hasn't any dress-ups. Guess she never had a great grandmother!"

Isabelle elimbed to the attic, and was soon deep among the treasures it contained. At last in the very bottom of the trunk, she found a box she never had seen before. She opened it expectantly and out of the discolored paper wrappings fell the quaintest little dress in the world, with shoes, stockings, and even pantalets to go with it!

Isabelle held them up.

"They'll just fit me," she eried. "Oh, goody, goody!" Flve minutes later Isabelle was changed into a little girl of long ago. And how quaint she looked! She was dancing up and down when her eyes fell on great-grandmother's sampler in a corner of the storeroom.

Isabelle sat down on a stool in front of it. The letters were dull and faded and the little girl could hardly see them. At last she managed to piek out all the letters of the alphabet and afterwards to spell out the words, and this is what they said:

"Love one another, 1841, Ann."

Isabelle hung her head for a moment or two.

"That means me—and Annabelle," she said aloud. "Love one another!"

She jumped down from the stool and ran lightly down the stalrs. She was halfway down when she remembered something. "I must get a dress for Annabelle," she said to herself.

Ten minutes later mother looked out of the window and smiled as she saw two little girls of long ago walking together happily in the garden.—The Sunbeam.

WINGLESS BIRDS.

There ls a myth about the birds, that when they were first ereated they had no wings. The story ls that God made the wings, put them down before the birds, and said: "Now, eome, take these burdens up and bear them." The birds had beautiful plumage and voices. They could sing and shine, but they could not soar. But at the word of their Maker, they took up the wings with their beaks and laid them upon thelr shoulders to carry them. At first they seemed to be a heavy load and rather difficult to bear. But as they eheerfully and patiently bore them, and folded them elose over their hearts, lo! the wings grew fast, and that which they once bore now bore them. The burdens became pinions, and the weights became wings.—G. B. F. Hallock.

THE LITTLE LOAF.

Many years ago there was a great famine in Germany, and the poor people suffered from hunger. A rieh man who loved children sent for twenty of them and said to them: "In this basket there is a loaf of bread for each of you. Take it and come back again every day tlll the famine is over. I will give you a loaf eaeh day."

The ehildren were very hungry. They seized the basket and struggled to get at the largest loaf. They even forget to thank the man who had been kind to them. After a few minutes of quarreling and snatehing for bread, every one ran away with his loaf except one little girl, named Gretehen. She stood there alone at a little distance from the gentleman. Then, smiling, she took up the last loaf, the smallest of all, and thanked him with all her heart.

The next day the children eame again, and they behaved as badly as ever. Gretchen, who would not push with the rest, reeelved only a tiny loaf, scarcely half the size of the others. But when she eame home, and her mother began to cut the loaf, out dropped six shining coins of silver.

"Oh, Gretehen!" exelaimed the mother; "this must be a mistake. The money does not belong to us. Run quiek as you ean and take it back to the gentleman."

So Gretehen carried it back; but when she gave the gentleman her mother's message, he said: "No, no; it was not a mistake. I had the silver baked into the smallest loaf in order to reward you. Remember that the person who is contented to have the smallest loaf rather than quarrel for a larger one will find blessings that are better than money baked in bread."—Ella Lyman Cabot, in Ethics for Children.

BLESS HIS DEAR HEART.

Into a very elegant palace car entered a weary-faced, poorly-dressed woman, with three children, one a baby in her arms. A look of joy crept into her face as she sat down in one of the luxurious chairs; but it was quickly dispelled as she was asked rudely to "start her boots." A smile of amusement was seen on several faces as the frightened group hurried out to one of the common cars. Upon one young face, however, there was a look which shamed the countenance of the others.

"Auntie," said the boy to the lady beside him, "I am going to carry my basket of fruit and this box of sandwiches to the poor woman in the next car. You are willing, of course?"

"Don't be foolish, dear. You may need them yourself."

"No, I'll not need them," he answered, decidedly, but in a very low tone. "You know I had a hearty breakfast, and don't need a lunch. The woman looked hungry, auntie, and so tired, too, with three little babies clinging to her. I'll be back in a minute, auntie. I know mother wouldn't like it if I don't speak a kind word to the least of these when I meet them."

The worldly aunt brushed a tear from her eye after the boy had left her, and said, audibly, "Just like his dear mother."

About five minutes later as the lady passed the mother and three children, she saw a pretty sight—the family feasting as perhaps they had never done before. The eldest child, with his mouth filled with bread and butter, said, "Was the pretty boy an angel, mamma?"

"No," answered the mother, and a grateful look brightened her faded eyes "but he is doing an angel's work, bless his dear heart!" And we, too, said, "Bless his dear heart!"—Peoria Call.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

Editorial

"I HOPE TO MEET YOU IN HEAVEN."

In a recent number of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, mention is made of Rev. Joseph Wardle, who is known above everything else for his habit of including invariably in his greeting to another person. these words: "I hope to meet you in heaven." Whether he is handing his fare to the street car conductor, or being presented to the President, he never fails to express that hope. He bears testimony to the fact that time after time expressions of gratefulness have come to him for his words.

Many of us do not realize how much good we may accomplish by a word fitly spoken. Oftentimes a kind of fearful timidity keeps us from uttering the helpful word that springs to our lips. We are too afraid that an expressed interest in the spiritual welfare of those we meet will be resented as an impertinence. Of course, common sense should be our guide, but it is doubtless true in many cases that such interest on our part would meet with a grateful response.

Some of us cannot do much at best; but we should not fail to do what we can. A little act of kindness, a simple, helpful word, a warm clasp of the hand may bear rich fruitage in eternity. The seeing eye and the willing heart will enable us to take advantage of many opportunities to cheer some struggler along the way.

THE VALUE OF AN EDUCATION.

We do not believe that the value of an education is to be measured chiefly by materialisitic standards at all; but these have to be taken into consideration. They appeal tremendously to the average boy and girl, and if they can be induced to continue in high school and college for the sake of the purely material rewards that will come to them, we may hope that they will receive the larger values of a widened horizon and a keener perception of the essential things of life.

The following statements, taken from an exchange, are worth pondering by young people and their parents who are facing the question of continuing the school course next fall:

"A college education multiplies the values of a life career over a common school and high school education by 9 1-3; over a common school education only by 125; over no school education by 817. If you have a common school education, your life is worth 3.8 times as much to the world as though you had no education. If you have a high school education, your life is worth 23 times as much as if you have only a common school education, and 87 times as much as if you have no education. If you have a college education, your life is worth 8 1-3 times as much as if you have only a high-school education, 215 times as much as if you have only a common school education, and 817 times as much as if you have no education. Certainly it pays in life values to get a college education.

"The college graduates of this country comprise about one per cent of the male population over twenty-one years of age. Yet this one per cent has furnished more than one-third the members of Congress, over one-half the Presidents and Cabinet officers, and over two-thirds of the Justices of the Supreme Court. Every Chief Justice has been a college man but one, and he left college to serve in the Revolutionary War. The ratio of our distinguished men who are college graduates is very much on the increase."

Somebody has gone to the pains to figure out the average earning power of a high school graduate compared with one who is not; the result shows a difference in favor of the graduate at the end of 23 years, of $74,982.

THE MIDDAY PRAYER.

The custom has become established in a good many places of ringing the bells at noon, or some other convenient hour, as a signal to call the people to prayer for the success of our cause in these trying times. The little town of Verbena, Alabama, has adopted this as a kind of official prayer: "God bless our President, our soldiers and the nation, and guide them on to victory." Every afternoon at six o'clock the church bell rings, and the men, women and children, wherever they are, stand and repeat the brief prayer. It is a beautiful custom. In New Orleans, every day at eleven o'clock, the bells ring and, we doubt not, thousands of heads are reverently bowed while a prayer is breathed for the success of our cause.

The deepening of the prayer-life will, we believe, be one of the great spiritual results of the war. Men and women who have never prayed before are turning to God in these troublous times. And as they are doing it reverently and in faith, they are receiving help and comfort that sustain them in their daily walk. After the war is over, they are not going to forget the source of their help, and they will continue to turn to it.

It will be well for all of us to fix this habit of regular, daily prayer, whether it be specifically for the success of the war or not. We need God's blessing upon us at all times for all things. We can scarcely conceive of an American Christian's praying now without remembering the cause that lies so near to the hearts of us all; but we need to call upon God in normal times as well as in war times, and if we fix the habit now, it will be the cause of untold blessing in the days to come.

CHANGES IN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

At its recent annual meeting at Lake Junaluska, the General Sunday School Board inaugurated several changes in the method of carrying on its work. One of these changes was the practical abolishing of the divisional system of field work and the centering of all field activities in the office of the Corresponding Secretary of the Board at Nashville. Dr. C. D. Bulla was elected to the office of Corresponding Secretary, and Rev. A. L. Dietrich, Field Secretary for the Gulf Division, was elected Assistant Corresponding Secretary. Brother Dietrich will remove from Meridian, Miss., to Nashville, Tenn., at once. He has made many friends among both preachers and laymen during his service in the Gulf Division. who will follow him with their prayers in his new field of labor.

GENERAL PERSHING A METHODIST.

The Central Christian Advocate of July 10 contains this interesting item: "General John J. Pershing was born in a Methodist home in Laclede, Missouri. His father was Sunday school superintendent. A letter from our pastor in Laclede, Dr. T. E. Sisson, says that the people there get rather warm at any criticism of their hero. Dr. Sisson speaks of the lad as one who more often listened to elders than consorted with any village rough. He was converted in the Methodist Church and his name is recorded as a member. They had a big Pershing celebration on the Fourth of July. Amongst other things a message to the 'home-town boy' was passed by his old schoolmates and chums, Aunt Susan Hewitt, who used to make an apple turn-over for the towheaded youngster, being one of the signers. Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, who returns to France this week as a representative of the Kansas City Star, takes the message to the general in person."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. R. H. Barr, our pastor at Foxworth, Miss., reports that his work is on the upward grade spiritually. We thank him for sending us a renewal subscription.

A note from Rev. W. H. Jordan, of Arcadia, La., enclosing a subscription, says that things are moving along nicely on the Arcadia charge. Arcadia is a delightful North Louisiana town.

Professor Joseph Henry Gilmore, of Rochester University, the author of the well-known hymn, "He leadeth me, O blessed thought," died at Rochester, N. Y., July 23, in his eighty-fourth year.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, after an illness of considerable duration, was able to fill his pulpit at Louisiana Avenue last Sunday. He will assist Rev. Leland Clegg in a meeting at Naborton, La., next week.

Brother J. A. Price, of Corinth, Miss., has our thanks for a club of five renewals and four new subscriptions. Our friends who are looking after the interests of the Advocate are encouraging us very much.

Mrs. M. B. Dottery, of Carbondale, Ill., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, expresses her love for the M. E. Church, South, and her appreciation of the Advocate. We thank her for her kind words.

Bishop Kilgo's article on dancing which appeared in the Advocate last week has attracted considerable notice in the local secular press. The Times-Picayune, the State and the Item reproduced it in part.

Rev. J. L. Nabors, of Kossuth, Miss., in a note enclosing four subscriptions, states that his work is moving along splendidly. He gives us the promise of additional subscriptions soon, for which we thank him.

Rev. J. F. Foster, the new pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, paid the Advocate office a pleasant call on Monday. He occupied his new pulpit on Sunday and reported a cordial reception by his congregation.

Brother T. W. Howard, of Athens, La., has brought us under obligations by sending us a club of ten subscriptions, with check to match. He will receive as a premium a fine Bible. We hope many others will do likewise.

A note from Rev. W. D. Bass has some kind words concerning the Editor and a promise to present the claims of the Advocate in connection with his evangelistic work. We thank him very much for his interest in the paper.

The United States Treasury has extended additional credits of $100,000,000 to France, $9,000,000 to Belgium, and $3,000,000 to Serbia. The total of credits advanced to our associates in the war against Germany is now $6,492,040,000.

Rev. F. J. McCoy, of the Houma charge, Louisiana Conference, paid us an appreciated call one day last week. He had accompanied a friend to the city for treatment in a local sanitarium. He reported his work in a prosperous condition.

We thank Rev. B. H. Williams, of Florence, Miss., for a list of four subscriptions recently sent for our files, with the assurance that he will soon send at least six more. The energetic efforts of our friends are greatly appreciated by both Editor and Publisher.

We learn from the Holly Springs Reporter of August 8 that Rev. E. R. Smoot, our pastor at Holly Springs, Miss., had been called to Indiana on account of the serious illness of his father. We sincerely hope he found his condition improved when he arrived.

Rev. J. E. Williams, of Sumrall, Miss., recently sent us a club of eight subscriptions. We express appreciation of his kindness and commend him for his interest in the Conference organ. We believe the Church paper will help him in every department of his work.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. F. M. Freeman, the Editor had the pleasure of preaching twice last Sunday to our Parker Memorial congregation in this city. He received a cordial greeting from his old parishioners, and was given an attentive hearing.

"Lightless nights" are effecting a great saving in coal, the Fuel Administration reports. A saving of 60,000 kilowatt hours, equal to about 100 tons of coal, was made the first night in Manhattan Borough, New York City. It is estimated that 1,000,000 or more tons of coal will be saved every year in this way.

Rev. E. C. Driskell writes from Greenwood Springs, Miss.: "I have just closed a great meeting at New Hope Church, with fourteen additions. The work is moving forward." We are always glad to hear news of this kind. Genuine revivals among our people mean the strengthening of the Kingdom in every part of its work.

We take off our hat to Rev. R. H. Bamburg, of Oak Grove, La. He sent us last week a club of ten subscriptions, which was secured by Mrs. Bamburg. We also take off our hat to her. Brother Bamburg has under way a splendid brick church at Oak Grove, upon which he expects to be able to report good progress by Conference.

Rev. John G. Sloane, who is well-known to all Louisiana Conference preachers as a most accommodating and efficient member of the Auditing Board, is the wide-awake pastor at Haynesville. He is mindful of the interests of the Advocate as well as of other phases of his work. We thank him for two subscriptions recently sent in.

The National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. has just begun the publication of a new weekly, which is definitely designed to strengthen the morale of our soldiers as they leave the home land. From a careful reading of the copy which it was our privilege to see, we are sure it will accomplish its purpose. It is called, "Going Over."

Rev. W. A. Terry, pastor of Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., has our thanks for two subscriptions recently sent in. Brother Terry states that the congregations are good at all his services and he is meeting with encouraging success in his work. We have the pleasantest recollections of the Broad Street people—we were their pastor once.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, the energetic presiding elder of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, has been busy in revival meetings since the Divinity School, and he has three more to hold. He was to assist Rev. S. D. Howard at Boeuf Prairie church, beginning last Saturday. He reports that the prospects are good for an advance over the record of the District last year.

Rev. H. H. Smith, of Ford, Va., has compiled a 32 page booklet, "The Soldier's Armor," containing helpful quotations from the Scriptures and other sources, prepared especially for pastors and others to enclose when corresponding with soldiers. We find it to be a most excellent tract for the purpose. It may be had of the compiler for ten cents a copy, or for five cents when five or more are ordered.

A recent note from Sister T. S. Randle informs us that Brother Randle is still in poor health, and the physicians have advised that he go to Texas for the benefit of the climate. They expect to go to Yoakum, Tex., in September. Their son was on the Covington when she went down, but escaped with his life. He is now in France. Their many friends will remember Brother and Sister Randle in their prayers.

Brother H. H. Ahrens, who is in charge of the publicity department of the Missionary Centenary Campaign in our Church, made us a pleasant visit one day last week. He was accompanied by his son, F. Herman Ahrens, a successful business man of New Orleans. Brother Ahrens reports gratifying progress in connection with the Centenary campaign. Great plans are being made for the meeting in Dallas, Tex., early in September.

We thank Rev. R. I. Collins, of Courtland, Miss., for a good list of subscriptions sent in last week. Brother Collins was in the midst of a good revival meeting at Chapel Hill on his charge, where he was being assisted by Rev. Will J. Harney, of Kentucky, one of our general evangelists. The subscriptions were secured as a result of the meeting. This fact confirms our opinion that the revival season is a fine time to extend the circulation of the Advocate.

Rev. Frank Seay, of Southern Methodist University, has declined to accept the degree of D.D., conferred on him by Emory University at its recent commencement, on the ground that he disapproves the custom of setting some apart in an honorary group by calling them "Doctor," while others are called by what society considers a lesser term. His general position is that titles conferred by university degrees are contrary to the spirit of Americanism.

We learn from the Columbus (Miss.) Dispatch that Rev. S. L. Pope, the beloved pastor of the First Methodist Church of that city, has volunteered his services for the Y. M. C. A. in France, and that in all probability he will within a few weeks be en route to his new field. Brother Pope is the third Columbus minister to offer his services to the cause. Rev. J. H. Bell, and Rev. T. L. Holcomb, of the First Baptist Church, having previously entered the service.

To acquaint the people of the country more thoroughly with the part the U. S. Navy is taking in the present war, an elaborate exhibit, with equipment and accoutrements of the service, is to be made this summer at the large fairs throughout the land. The display will be made in connection with that of the Joint Committee on Government Exhibits, which includes the various departments and activities of Federal work. The exhibit will be shown at Shreveport, La., October 30 to November 4.

Brother S. H. Meyer, the treasurer of the Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference, requests us to call attention to a letter he has received from Dr. O. E. Goddard, urging all pastors to remit money collected for the Board of Missions in order that the Home Department may be placed on a cash basis. The Department is now running on borrowed money, and the amount that has to be paid for interest is a considerable item. We trust all our pastors will give prompt attention to this appeal.

Since the Advocate went to press, we have detected an error in the paragraph on page 6, "Ratification Wins in Louisiana." Louisiana is the fourteenth State that has ratified the amendment, instead of the thirteenth, as stated. The States that had previously ratified, according to an official publication of the Anti-Saloon League, are: Mississippi, Virginia, Kentucky, South Carolina, North Dakota, Maryland, Montana, Texas, Delaware, South Dakota, Massachusetts, Arizona and Georgia.

Rev. Standifer Raper, of Friars Point, Miss., evidently knows how to do things. All the Conference assessments and church debts on his charge have been paid, and some needed repairs have been made on the parsonage. Several members have been received into the Church. He was assisted in a good meeting at Farrell by Rev. I. F. Holland, of Gunnison. He hopes to have the church at Friars Point dedicated soon by one of our Bishops. We thank him for an invitation to be present on that occasion.

The National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War is arranging for the resumption this fall on a wide scale of the speaking campaign in which fifty-five prominent ministers and laymen toured the country during April, May and June. Sir George Adam Smith, Principal of Aberdeen University, returned to his home in Scotland a few days ago; but two other noted British clergymen will be brought to America in September to take his place—Rt. Rev. Charles Gore, Bishop of Oxford, and Rev. Arthur T. Guttery, minister of the Primitive Methodist Church of Liverpool.

Rev. H. T. Young, the Louisiana Conference evangelist, has recently closed a fine meeting at Oak Grove, where Rev. R. H. Bamburg is pastor. There were two decisions for the ministry, and one young lady, the daughter of the pastor, gave herself to work in the mission fields. Notwithstanding the fact that Brother Bamburg had recently sent us ten subscriptions to the Advocate, Brother Young secured nine more at the close of the meeting. The revival season is the time to push the circulation of the Church organ. Brother Young was scheduled to begin a meeting with Rev. T. J. Warlick, at Grayson, La., this week.

We had the pleasure of spending Wednesday, August 7, on the Seashore Camp Ground. The morning service had been held when we arrived, and we could not remain for the night service. But we heard fine reports of the preaching of the brethren who are conducting the meeting, Rev. F. M. Freeman, of the Louisiana Conference, Rev. R. J. Haskew, of the Alabama Conference, and Rev. G. S. Harmon, of the Mississippi Conference. The three presiding elders who have the meeting in charge, Rev. O. V. Calhoun, of the Mobile District, Rev. J. R. Jones, of the Seasbore District, and Rev. W. W. Holmes, of the New Orleans District, were at their posts. The reports were that the meeting had made a good beginning.

Bishop W. F. McMurry was called to Louisville, Ky., on August 4, and after a sermon in the Methodist Temple, of which Rev. A. R. Kasey is pastor, ordained the following ministers, who have been approved by the Commission on War Work and accepted as chaplains by the War Department of the United States Government. These brethren are completing their course in the Chaplains' Training School at Camp Taylor: Francis Asbury Budkin, South Carolina Conference, deacon and elder; Baebman Gladstone Hodge, North Alabama Conference, deacon and elder; Clinton Jay Bushey, Mississippi Conference, deacon and elder; John Byron Coan, Northwest Texas Conference, elder; Edwin Earl White, Northwest Texas Conference, elder.

THE ONE THING LACKING.

A young minister had been making an idol of his sermons. They were to him the one thing in his ministry. He read, and culled, and studied oratory, and searched for illustrations as men hunt for gold, and studied climaxes and epigrams; but some way he seemed to bring down no game with his arrows. He went to an old minister with his heartache, and after the old minister had listened sympathetically, he gently said, "It seems to me that you have put about everything into those sermons that you could think of; but suppose you try mixing in a few blisters and backaches."

"Blisters and ba—"

"Yes, go a mile out of your way to lift someone's burden. Rob yourself of an hour from your precious books just to let some old woman bore you with her story. You have heard it already, but never mind. Give up your sleep some night to hold the hand of someone in suffering. All that your sermons lack is just a few drops of your own heart's blood."—John F. Cowan, in the Christian World Pulpit.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

MALISSIE ANN WOODS JONES PERRYMAN was born in 1848, and departed this life on July 26, 1918. Good-by, dear mother; you have gone to a better land, where there is no pain or sickness. Oh, how I will miss you! But I rejoice to know you are at rest. May your soul be with your loved ones in the bright beyond, where all is love. You have left but one dear child here below; she still cherishes and loves you. Her loving daughter,
MARY BELLE JONES.

Mrs. MARTHA LELILD TOWNSEND was born in January, 1819, and died on July 21, 1918, after a few days' illness. She was twice married, first to Madison Harrell, in 1843. To this union one child was born. After his death, she married Wm. S. Townsend in 1845. To this union nine children were born, three of whom survive: Allen Townsend, Houston, Tex.; O. E. and W. S. Townsend, Oaknolla, La. She made her home during her widowhood with her two sons, O. E. and W. S. Townsend. She was born in Calcasieu Parish, the daughter of Martha L. Morgan and Reece Perkins. With the exception of a few years, her life was spent in east Feliciana Parish. She was always of a cheerful disposition; she loved company, loved her Church, was always hospitable. Her home was always open to preachers. She was always active, rarely ever sick. Her eyesight never failed. She always read her Bible the first thing after breakfast. She died in her 99th year. She leaves a host of grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren to mourn her lost. But we weep not for Grandma, as those who have no hope, knowing that if we follow her as she followed Christ, we shall meet her in the great reunion, where we shall be with her and the redeemed of God forever. Her pastor,
J. L. CADY.

After a long illness of seven weeks, MONROE SPELL passed away from labor to reward. The deceased leaves to mourn their loss a host of friends and relatives. He served in the war of 1864. He was born on January 20, 1843. Near the end of the war, on December 6, 1864, he was married to Miss Egalentine Hoffpauir. To this union 12 children were born. The deceased fell asleep on July 28, 1918. He is missed among us, but we mourn not as those without hope. While he lived a quiet life, being a member of the M. E. Church, South, for fifty years, he attended the church as often as possible, and was willing to use all his talents when called upon. His last days were spent in Estherwood and his delight was to be with his children. He left the testimony that he was going to rest, in the arms of Jesus. Just a few days before he passed away he told us he was soon going home to Jesus. He was always submissive to the will of God and seemed to be anxious to go home. On his bed he would have the old songs sung to him and would join in. His remains were laid to rest in the old home cemetery where a host of his loved ones sleep, awaiting the trumpet sound. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, who had known him all his life. His nephew,
J. H. HOFFPAUIR.

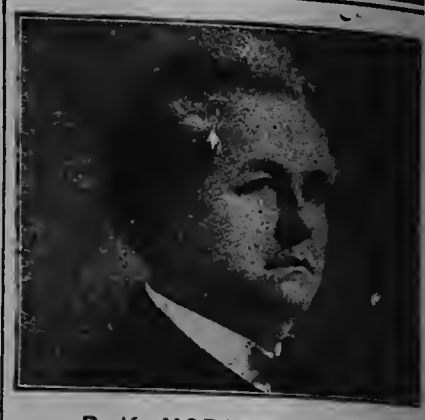
Miss LURLINE WADE was born at Dubach, La., on December 27, 1902, and left this world, which continues not, near Eola, La., on May 12, 1918, for the "city which hath foundations whose architect and maker is God." Lurline was always a girl of sweet disposition, noble character and attractive manners, but after her translation into the kingdom of God's dear Son, there was a marked change and transformation of heart and life. The divine fires refined her nature, the presence of God's spirit exalted her character and energized all the powers of her being. She visibly became a partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light, for her face shone from the happy day that fixed her choice on her Savior and her God with a radiance never seen on land or sea, except in the countenance of a child of God. She had a depth and richness of religious experience rarely known in the life of a mere girl. Out of the abundance of her heart she would relate the wonderful work of God in her own life and praise Him for his great saving and helping power whenever the opportunity was given. She was not only ready in testimony and gifted in prayer but she was "always abounding in the work of the Lord," being fruitful in every good work and increasing in the knowledge of the Lord.

Her religious experience involved her whole being, quickening her intellectual faculties and energizing all her physical powers, which were unmistakably manifested in her exuberance of spirits and her mental superiority and literary excellence and scholastic attainment. Her natural life was so short and her death so premature to her devoted loved ones and true friends; but an all-wise God and loving Father hath taken her away. He doeth all things well. Help us, O God, to say as the Master did in Gethsemane, "Thy will be done!"

Her second translation has occurred in that an entrance has been ministered unto her abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The brief lapse of time intervening between the two translations, the one into the spiritual kingdom of God's dear Son and the latter into the everlasting kingdom of the Savior, gave her a glorious opportunity (which she utilized to the utmost) of serving her fellow-beings, of shining for God and holding forth the word of life, which have left an indelible imprint on the lives of those among whom she lived and labored. Like faithful Abel taken in the bloom of youth, "she being dead yet speaketh." She has blazed the way to the glory world; she has gone to be with Christ, which is far better. May her dear grief-stricken parents and loved ones meet her and be with her in that kingdom that never ends! May all that have known and loved her here join with her in the everlasting song and crown Christ Lord of all! Her former pastor,
LEON I. McCAIN.
Hammond, La., August 1, 1918.

GOOD MEETINGS ON THE RINGGOLD CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: I wish to give notice of a meeting just held at Grand Bayou. We had a great meeting. There were 35 who professed to receive a blessing in the meeting. I am sure this was a great revival. Many of the members of the Church were blessed and will work more, as they realized their duty. Brother Moll is a power for good. God is with him. He comes to each service confident that God will bless, and he does.



We received eleven members, nine of this number by baptism. Our hearts were made to rejoice to see little children come into the kingdom and testify to the loving power of God.

We begin another meeting here at Ringgold on August 4. Brother Moll is on the job to help. He will be here for ten days. He has a few open dates and the brethren will be fortunate to secure him in this work.

I closed my meeting at Rocky Mountain on the 20th with a great revival. Twenty souls were added to the kingdom, 14 by profession of faith and baptism. Brother C. B. Powell, of Bienville, helped me at this point. He is a good man, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, and has power with God. The Church was revived at this point. I am rejoicing because our God is still with us and will bless if we trust him.

I will send you some subscriptions to the Advocate in a few days.

Yours for service,
J. F. DRING, P. C.

WHAT OF YOUR BOY?

His education and training, and the development of his mind, body, and character depend on you, his parent. It is a grave responsibility, for there are so many antagonistic influences that come into play in a boy's life. As every boy looks back over his education and training he can always point out some one influence, some one life that has had a more profound influence. To thousands of boys this influence has been the guiding spirit, the personal association and the inspiring character of Mr. Robert K. Morgan, principal of Morgan School for twenty-five years. He knows boy nature. The close personal associations which he has fostered between his boy students and himself, his carefully chosen faculty, his careful attention to the boy's work, his thoughts, his talents, and his special needs, have given great prominence to his school and have characterized the success that he has merited in successfully shaping the lives of thousands of youths at the shaping age.

A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., will bring you a catalogue and full information about this school.

Our Boys in France and Home Protection

The men on the firing line represent the pick of our American youth. One in four of our boys at home was sick, rejected because of physical deficiency. Many times the kidneys were to blame.

If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of the Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N.Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily between meals. Then procure at your nearest drug store, Anuric (double strength). This "An-u-ric" drives the uric acid out and cures backache and rheumatism.

If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vegetables, with only little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day for a month.

Send Dr. Pierce ten cents for trial package. "Anuric"—many times more potent than lithia, eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar. A short trial will convince you.

SYLACAUGA, ALA.—"I have successfully used Doctor Pierce's Remedies, especially the Anuric Tablets, and they did me much good, as I suffered a great deal with my kidneys."—E. BLACKWOOD.

DAYTONA, FLORIDA.—"I procured two packages of Anuric Tablets, and after taking one package will say I have been almost completely relieved of the chief trouble, the dropsical swelling of my feet and legs, and I also note a marked improvement in my circulation."—E. DILLINGHAM, Box 294.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

To Louisiana Preachers and Superintendents.

Mr. T. W. Holloman, Treasurer for the Conference Sunday School Board, has left Louisiana for Y. M. C. A. work, and as the bank through which the business of the Sunday Schooi Board is handled is in Alexandria, it has been decided by the Executive Committee of this Board that the Field Secretary, C. V. Breithaupt, shall receive moneys and disburse necessary funds for the carrying on of the work until Conference convenes.

Please make your remittances for Children's Day or on 2 per cent assesment direct to our Field Secretary, payable either to him or the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board, and he will acknowledge receipt of same.

Nine Louisianians were at Lake Junaluska for the July-August Sunday School School of Methods, and despite the fact that the burning of the Junaluska Inn caused some to abandon the trip to this wonderful assembly ground, the consensus of opinion seems to be that the school this year was better in the work done by those who attended than heretofore.

The month of August will be spent in the Monroe District, September in the Ruston District, and October, or a part of the month, is to be spent in the Baton Rouge District by Brother Breithaupt, our Conference Field Secretary for the Sunday School Board.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The number of students taking credit work this session of the schooi for Sunday school workers is larger than last year. North Mississippi has nine out of a class of one hundred and twenty-three to receive the Junaiuska Honor Certificate.

It would be hard to find a more interested, cheerful, and at the same time more serious group of people anywhere. A large percentage of the students are graduates of our best colleges. The instructors are nearly all university professors, and there the students do university work. Dr. Shackford is having first-class work done for the teachers attending this great school.

Dr. Edward Porter St. John, Professor of Pedagogy in the Hartford Schooi of Religious Pedagogy, and author of many books, taught a class of about one hundred in Story Teiling. The students that studied under him were charmed with his artistic skill in presenting the truth through the form of the story.

Dr. W. C. Barclay, author of the "Pupil, the Teacher and the Schooi," has rewritten the division of his book on the Pupil. He is one of the great teachers of this generation.

Mrs. Morehouse, Elementary Superintendent of the M. E. Church, taught a class of teachers for beginners; Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, Elementary Superintendent, of our Church, taught a class for primaries; Miss Bailey, of Wisconsin, taught a class for primary workers; Mr. Emmett Hightower taught a class for intermediate and senior workers; Prof. Hugh H. Harris, of Emory University, a class for young people; Dr. Siedd, of Emory University, a class in the Life of Paul; Dr. C. D. Bulla, a class for adults. These are all specialists of a high order; to study under them is a privilege to be coveted.

Dr. Henry S. Cope, Secretary of Religious Education, gave a series of lectures on Democracy in the Church. Dr. S. Parks Cadman thrilled us with a great address on some phases of the war. His striking personality made the following sentences fairly burn: "War is always moral when it reveals a state of things worse than itself." "The most dangerous man is the man that can't think straight." No permanent peace can exist between God and man, and man and man until righteousness rules." "Why this war? Because we do not live in a fool-proof universe." "When the Kaiser forced this country into war, he sealed his doom."

Bishop McDowell, of the M. E. Church, gave four addresses on "The Worker," "The Workman's Tools," "The Product He Seeks to Make," and "Our Ideal." It is not the subject, nor is it what the speaker says that makes the soul feel its poverty of spirit and makes it yearn for the higher things of Christ, but it is the speaker himself. Bishop McDowell is one of the great preachers of Methodism.

Ten years ago we did not have two people in the Southern Methodist Church that could do the class of work that can be done by two hundred men and women that have been trained in the Junaiuska Training School. This school will emphasize the necessity of having trained men in every department of church work. Goodness is not to be discounted in the least, but goodness alone is not sufficient; the good man should have some definite training when he is sent out by the Church to perform the most difficult task God has assigned mortal man—that of nurturing and training immortai souls to live the life of Christ.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

On account of the primary election the District Institute at Natchez has been postponed to September 3, 4, same hours and the same program.

At Wesson, Miss., August 22, 23, the Brookhaven Institute convenes. I hope the Sunday schooi workers of the Brookhaven District will be on hand in full force. We have a good program and I feel that it will be a profitable one.

The Jackson District Institute will meet August 27, 28, at Fiorence; Hattiesburg Institute, at Coliins, August 29, 30.

I had a delightful day last Sunday with Brother Gunn at East End, Meridian. He and his good folks were so patient and kind with the Secretary and were such an inspiration, too.

Any one who has a good plan for increasing Sunday schooi attendance, please iet me hear from you. I know of several, but I need some more plans and it will be a great help to me.

If any have tried a Teacher-training class and failed with it, would you mind writing me your opinion as to the reasons of the failure and just what the trouble was? It will be helpful both to me and others.

If any one has succeeded with a Teacher-training class, will you write and teii me about it?

Never has there been such a need for trained workers. May we not ali pray the Lord of the Harvest to send forth the workmen Pray for me.

EXCHANGE YOUR OLD BODY FOR A NEW ONE.

You can do it in three weeks and thereby renew your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen: If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds, your body contains eighty pounds of water, for according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixty-seven and one half per cent of water. Now disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call poisons, and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar mineral water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the solubie part of it is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the following letter carefully; then sign and mail it:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17-J, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

Try It! Substitute For Nasty Calomel

Starts your liver without making you sick and can not salivate.

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs but a few cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, pureiy vegetabie remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.

Even In Chinese You Hear

"Take Nuxated Iron"

As a tonic, strength and blood builder probably no remedy has ever met with such phenomenal success as has Nuxated Iron. It is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually are taking it in this country alone. It has been highly endorsed and used by such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Presidential Cabinet Official (Secretary of the Treasury), United States Judge Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington; Judge Wm. L. Chambers, Commissioner of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, formerly Chief Justice of the International Court, Samoa; former United States Senator and Vice Presidential Nominee Charles A. Towne of Minnesota; former U. S. Senator Richard Rolland Kenney of Delaware, at present Assistant Judge Advocate General U. S. Army; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was Sergeant in the U. S. Army when only twelve years of age; General David Stuart Gordon (Retired), hero of the battle of Gettysburg; physicians who have been connected with well-known hospitals have prescribed and recommended it. Former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, says it ought to be in every hospital and prescribed by every physician.

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago, and former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, says Nuxated Iron has proven through his own tests of it to excel any preparation he has ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves, strengthening the muscles and correcting digestive disorders.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says there are thousands of men and women who need a strength and blood builder but do not know what to take. In his opinion there is nothing better than organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for enriching the blood and helping to increase the strength and endurance of men and women who burn up too rapidly their nervous energy in the strenuous strain of the great business competition of the day.

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

MANUFACTURERS NOTE: Nuxated Iron which has been used by former members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives and other prominent people with such surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians is not a secret remedy, but one which is well-known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

THE J. H. BELL REVIVALS.

Dear Mr. Editor: Rev. J. H. Bell is nearing the close of his second gracious revival on my charge. The first was a nine days' campaign at Belen, resulting in six additions to our Church, and many brigbt testimonials to a definite experience of grace.

If we close to-morrow (Sunday) night, we will have had an eleven-day campaign at Marks, the county site of Quitman County. Up to date, we have had thirty-five additions to our Church and we think there will be more. Both these meetings come nearer being real union revivals than any I bave ever been in, the people of all denominations apparently forgetting what church they belonged to, this being true not only in attendance, but in interest, both spiritual and financial. A number of the largest contributors to Brother Bell were Baptists, Presbyterians, and Episcopalians.

Our church building at Marks is entirely too small for the crowds, but tbe Baptist pastor and his people invited us to tbeir church. Auditorium and class-rooms are filled every night. Being with Brother Bell for three weeks, I am convinced that we have a young Knickerbocker or Culpepper in our midst if we will open the way for him to prove bimself, and to develop his resources.

Brother Bell's absence from our Sate while at one of our cantonments has interfered with his making engagements. He would be glad to hear from any of the brethren who might need his services. No pastor need be uneasy about money matters. If the people are given an opportunity, the collection will be entirely satisfactory. Bell asks no more of the pastor and his congregation than the pastor asks of his board of stewards and church membership. Nothing less tban that is a fair deal. H. G. ROBERTS.

Lambert, Miss., Aug. 10, 1918.

P. S.—I fully believe that if the pastor has been active in preparing the way, Brother Bell can go anywbere in the Delta and hold a successful revival. R.

MERIDIAN, SEVENTH AVENUE CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: We are making fair progress on this charge in the Lord's work. The interest is growing gradually in all of the services. As I have stood and viewed the work of our Sunday school here at this church, I find that the need of the hour is for a more efficient leadership. We have got some splendid teachers who are faithful and true, but we need some more good teachers to help us to carry on this noble work of the Church. No grander work bave we in tbe Church, than that of the Sunday school, and if we fail to push it properly, we have hurt the Church of to-morrow.

Our spring revival here at Seventh Avenue Church was a great one; it seemed to be of spiritual worth to the Church in many ways. The Rev. B. L. Sutherland, of Poplar Springs, Meridian, did the preaching for us, and did it well. His messages from day to day were of a high spiritual order. Every message that was brought to us by this true man of God seemed to be shot through and through with the love of Jesus for a lost world. And, then too, they seemed to have the stamp of the heavenly Father's approval upon them from the very first service of the meeting. We all enjoyed having this faithful man of God with us, and all those that heard him were lifted closer to God and heaven. His sermons are still living in the hearts of some. May God continue to bless and use "Ben" in soul winning.

The Rev. George H. Thompson, our faithful presiding elder, was with us on the evening of the 31st, ult., to hold the third quarterly conference. He preached for us an able sermon on "Jonah's going to Nineveh." And following his sermon he held the business session of the quarterly conference, which was well attended. The reports were all very good, and all the officials seemed to be optimistic over the outlook of the charge for future work.

D. V., we will begin our autumn meeting on the first Sunday in October, and we are to have the assistance of the Rev. Henry A. Wood, of Lauderdale, Miss. "Henry" is a fine exegete. When you hear him once you will want to hear him again. He has been used by the Lord Jesus in the bringing of many precious souls into the kingdom of God. We are planning and praying for a great ingathering of precious souls in the coming fall meeting.

The true and tried ones on the charge are cheerful and happy, and we are hopeful and joyful, and take courage and press on toward the beautiful city of God. Pray for us!

Yours in the true work,

AMERICA'S INFLUENCE ON FOREIGN STUDENTS.

What influence are the Christians in America exerting on foreign students from non-Christian lands who come here to study? Recently 900 Chinese students returned to China after four years of study in the United States. Of these, 800 entered Chinese government service and only 125 were Christians.

Every mission field is represented by the foreign students in American universities, colleges and high schools. There are now about 1400 Chinese, 1000 Japanese, 200 Korean, 300 Filipino, 150 East Indian, 2000 Latin American, and 200 Armenian young men and women who have come to pursue their studies in the United States for periods of from one to eight years. Many of these students are the product of mission schools—others are prejudiced against Christian missionary work—practically all of them have some knowledge of the program, methods, and activity of our missionary societies.

At least one-half of the entire number of these foreign students are not professing Christians when they arrive in America, but most of them are open-minded. If American Christians did not reveal such indifference and apathy regarding the importance of bringing these students into touch with Christ, hundreds of them would not have been permitted to return to their homes as non-Christians, or anti-Christian. In politics, business, education and religion, these students are destined to be the future leaders of their nations, and they should go back in full sympathy with the program for the expansion of evangelical Christianity.

Churches and individuals at home may render a great service to the cause of Christ and of humanity by ascertaining from their mission boards or from the "Committee on Friendly Relation Among Foreign Students" (347 Madison Avenue, New York) the names and addresses of students whom they may invite into Christian churches and homes. Missions abroad should communicate to associations and other organizations at home the facts about students coming to America. Many at home will find it both interesting and useful to subscribe to "The Chinese Students' Christian Journal," "The Japanese Student," "The Hindusthane Students," "The Cosmopolitan Student," and other magazines of a similar character published in America. Some of these foreign students are well able to address churches, Sunday schools and conventions. Some may be materially helped by part time employment. They may be greatly benefited by being taken to visit large institutions, factories, and places of historic interest. All may be remembered in prayer and many should be urged to attend student Christian conferences and other similar gatherings.

Some foreigners have come to America expecting to find every thing Christian and thinking that they would be overwhelmed with Christian influences. They have returned without even being invited to attend a church where they might hear the Gospel. Others, who have come to America without any purpose higher than to prepare for leadership among their own people, have returned home to devote their lives to the service of Christ. Any Christian may he the determining factor in the scale.—The Missionary Review of the World.

INTERESTING CHILDREN IN MISSION WORK.

If we are going to claim the world for Christ, we must claim the children for mision work and train them to be missionary leaders. Unless we are doing this, we have failed to begin at the beginning.

We spend hours arguing with some opposer of mission work who is so "set in his way," that he has no eyes for the Lord's way, and who has grown so confident and hoastful of bis own wisdom that he dares contradict the demands of the Savior.

Let him alone! It is a pity, but while we are wasting time on him, a whole congregation of children are likely to follow after him. Go to work with the children. They need no argument. They only want leadership. It is so easy to interest them in the work, if some one who is interested will only make the effort.

Dr. Jefferson said: "With all her follies and crimson stains, Rome goes on her conquering way because she knows the value of a child." And we know to-day that the power of the German people lies in the fact that they begin in early childhood to train their children to a thought. That thought—that God intended them to rule the world—is no jest with them, but a stern reality, because of this early training.

Missionary work with the children is the missionary work of the greatest possihility.

The mother of Alexander McKay did not know when she told missionary stories to her boy, that she was helping to send out "the greatest missionary since Livingston," according to Stanley.

So the leader of a children's missionary society can never estimate the value and the possihility of the work she is doing.

It is hers to train the children of today, who shall be the missionaries and the missionary supporters of to-morrow. Do not he discouraged because you do not see the fruits of your work immediately. Too often we go about our seed sowing with one hand, expecting to reap immediately with the other. Remember that the harvest is promised "in due season" and on condition that we "faint not."

The space allotted to this article is too brief to take up in full the "Hows" of this fascinating work, hut a word as to how to hegin. One of the greatest possibilities for missionary training is through the Sunday school. It is a possihility that extends from the Cradle Roll to the Home Department. Our missionary women should help to make their Sunday schools thoroughly missionary in spirit and training. However, the Sunday school hour is too short to meet the need. Therefore we should have additional meetings for the children. This has led to the formation of Missionary Societies, Mission Study Classes and Reading Circles.

How organize? How conduct a meeting? How keep up interest? How and why a Mission Study for children? When a Reading Circle?

Get your constitution for Junior and children's societies and study it. Consult your pastor. Write the Home Base Secretary. Get your catalogue of publications and select that needed literature. Plan your work, work your plan. Talk to the children, talk to the mothers. Above all pray earnestly to God for help and guidance.

Then as our boys say, "go to it!"—Selected, by Mrs. L. G. Fant.

REVIVAL NEWS FROM NATALBANY (LA.) CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed one of the best revivals ever held at Pipkin's Chapel. Christians were inspired, sinners converted, and God glorified. There were ten accessions by profession of faith. Brother Alonzo Early, of Amite, did the preaching. We commend Brother Early as splendid help in revivals. We have a splendid lay force at this church, and they are doing things.

We have held three other good revivals on the charge, assisted by the following brethren: L. E. Crooks, W. A. Mangum, and L. 1. McCain, all of whom are splendid help in revivals.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Miss Kelly Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Newark, N. J.—"For about three years I suffered from nervous breakdown and got so weak I could hardly stand, and had headaches every day. I tried everything I could think of and was under a physician's care for two years. A girl friend had used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she told me about it. From the first day I took it I began to feel better and now I am well and able to do most any kind of work. I have been recommending the Compound ever since and give you my permission to publish this letter."—Miss FLO KELLY, 476 So. 14th St., Newark, N. J.

The reason this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, was so successful in Miss Kelly's case was because it went to the root of her trouble, restored her to a normal healthy condition and as a result her nervousness disappeared.

A GOOD MEETING ON THE ST. FRANCISVILLE (LA.) CHARGE.

Our meeting began at New Hope on the third Sunday in July and went through the following week. Rev. P. S. Carpenter, our pastor, did the preaching. The gospel was presented to us in a way that we had never heard before. God was with us from the very first service to the last, and twelve bright young people were converted and joined the Church; five young girls renounced dancing. Our church has never had such a great revival before.

The pastor offered a nice book to the one who would read the most verses of scripture in the New Testament; eleven entered the contest and 23,819 verses were read from Tuesday to Friday night. Miss Daisy Spillman was awarded the book for having read 5008 verses.

Brother Carpenter is well loved by the people of this section and all are praying that the Conference will send him back to us another year.

MR. GLADSTONE IN HIS HOME.

Mr. Gladstone was the soul of courtesy and consideration toward his hosts. On Sunday mornings when we came down to breakfast we would find him already down, probably with his Bible and Greek Testament. He always had special books for his Sunday reading, and he put official business altogether aside unless an emergency arose.

He had a sense of intense responsibility as a public servant, and considered it to be his duty to the country to try to keep himself at his best, and to take only such relaxation as seemed necessary for that purpose. While he was in office he left the management of his private affairs to Mrs. Gladstone and his son. He was a regular attendant at church, and very pleasant are the remembrances of our drives through the country lanes to the picturesque church of Willesden. There he often read the lessons, until the hope of hearing him drew such large crowds that he gave up the practice and took to attending a small and very old church in a more sequestered part of the district.

We treasure as a precious remembrance of those days a whole shelf full of books that he read and discussed with us—books that he marked himself, and that he annotated by a system that Mr. John Morley explained in his biography. We also like to remember that it was at Dollis Hill, one summer morning, that he translated the beautiful hymn, "Hark, my soul, it is the Lord," into Italian—the language in which he took so much delight.

But to know what Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone's home life meant, it was necessary to see them at their own beloved Hawarden Castle. Never was there a wedded couple whose lives were so absolutely one. Mr. Gladstone told us that never had he kept any secret, political or other, from Mrs. Gladstone, and never had he found any secret leak out through her knowing it.

Soon after our marriage Mrs. Gladstone said to me, "Now, my dear, your husband is going in for a political career, and there is no career that more separates man and wife unless they determine to share it. I will tell you my experience. When we returned from our wedding trip, my husband at once took up his political work again; and as soon as we settled in our new home, I took my desk into his room, and said, 'Now I am going to write my letters and do my work here, except when you want to see anyone in private, when I shall go away.' Politicians coming in would look surprised, but they soon became accustomed to it. When health permitted, I have always accompanied my husband to all his meetings and campaigns; and so our lives have never been divided."—Youth's Companion.

NOTE FROM BROTHER W. D. BASS.

Dear Brother Carley: Recently I helped Rev. W. A. Bowlin in a very successful revival at Independence, on the Cockrum charge, Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference. Independence is a nice country village in one of the best communities in the State. We had great congregations. Brother Bowlin is doing a fine work. His people love him. That made seven revivals I have assisted Bowlin in during the past year.

The latter part of the week was the occasion of the third quarterly conference held by Brother Holder, the beloved presiding elder, who is doing a great work on the district. I have never been associated with a presiding elder who was more beloved by the pastors and people than Brother Holder. He is the right man in the right place.

I have a few vacant dates I could arrange to spend with pastors, if they will write me at once.

A FINE MEETING AT RIPLEY, NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a very fine nine days' meeting here at Ripley on July 8. The Lord was with us from the first to the last service. Five persons joined the Church—four on profession of faith. Our church was revived and the people of the town blessed. Our church is doing the best work of any I know of its size. In this meeting we had the co-operation of the Presbyterian and Baptist brethren. The ministers of these churches were with us and did what they could to promote the interest of the meeting. I have never seen, in any town, a more beautiful spirit existing among the people of all denominations.

Rev. W. M. Young, of Pontotoc, Miss., and Rev. W. A. Wilson, the engineer preacher, of New Albany, Miss., did the preaching. Brother Young gave us the old-time gospel in its saving power. He is intensely spiritual and it tells in all his life. He gets close to the people and every one soon learns to love him. He is good help in a meeting. Our town was greatly blessed by the ministry of Brother Young. He was not a stranger to many people here, for at one time he was presiding elder on this district.

Brother Wilson preached to the children and young people every afternoon and soon won all of their hearts. He also preached several times in the other services and held three or four services on the streets of Ripley. We were greatly blessed by a service held for men only by him on Sunday afternoon of the meeting. Brother Wilson has religion and all have the utmost confidence in him. Preaching and telling his experience over this country he is doing great good. Any one desiring help in meetings will do well to secure his services.

I have been here since the 15th of March. We have paid our assessments for all Conference benevolences in full and our church is moving forward along all lines.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

Some men expend a prodigious amount of energy in accomplishing a very small task. That is their affair; but they must be content for the world to value them by what they accomplish rather than by the noise they make.

There are youths and maidens in every community, in every church, who need only a vision of their possibilities and the world's need to arouse them to high aspirations and noble endeavor. What a pity if they never get the vision!

A reputation for honesty and fair dealing is the greatest asset a business firm can have. Some men are willing to sacrifice this asset for the sake of immediate gain. They are as wise as the men who will lose their souls for the sake of money and pleasure.

There is great satisfaction in arriving at the place we started out to reach, in accomplishing the thing we undertook to do. A definite aim in life gives a steadying power that makes achievement almost certain. One reason why some people never amount to anything is that they never tried.

"He's what I call a man." We overheard that remark the other day in a street car by a man we had never seen before about one whose name even we did not catch. But it brought a picture to our mind of an upstanding, forward-looking, clean, brave man who means something to the world. We do not know what standards of judgment were employed by the speaker—they may have been altogether too low—but we admire the gracious tribute he paid his friend. It was no small thing to say.

LEADERSHIP IN THE CHURCH.

We hear on every side to-day the call for leadership. In war and in peace, in Church and in State, the insistent demand is for men who can and will take the lead in great movements for the betterment of the world. One of the strongest arguments used to get boys and girls to go to college, is that they may prepare themselves for positions of leadership. In the limited field of community activities as well as in the larger field of national life, leaders are constantly being looked for and called for.

The question as to what constitutes leadership is both interesting and important. It is entirely too large, however, for us to consider it in all its phases; we desire to discuss it briefly with reference to only one field: What constitutes leadership in the Church?

We name spirituality as the distinctive and supremely necessary characteristic of genuine leadership in the field of religious endeavor. Spirituality is a term that is hard to define exactly. It is not to be identified with a soberness of conduct that may be nothing more than the result of a temperamental predisposition, or a morbid self-consciousness. It is certainly not gloominess of spirit and solemnity of manner. It involves an apprehension of the real values of life and the constant, joyous recognition of the Divine immanence. It is the quality of mind and heart that accepts cheerfully and obediently the fact of the revelation of God in nature and in man. It shows itself more in act than in profession. It is the intangible but powerful influence that radiates from the life, making itself unobstrusively but irresistibly felt in all places and under all circumstances. It springs from the submergence of the human will in the divine. It is the manifestation of the transforming power of God in normal humanity. It is the infallible sign of a genuine religious experience.

Spirituality, then, is a condition of real leadership in the Church of God. It could not be otherwise, since the Church is the visible expression of an invisible order—the spiritual order. We may not ask a man if he has spirituality—but we cannot fail to recognize it if he has. The Church cannot safely follow for long those who are lacking in this essential element of Christian character. Only spiritually minded men are fit to lead the forces of the Kingdom.

While spirituality is an essential prerequisite for safe leadership in the Church, it is not the only qualification. In addition, there must be a broad understanding of the essential facts of Church history and a comprehensive knowledge of present-day conditions and needs. In other words, leadership requires full intellectual equipment in order that it may be saved from one-sidedness, narrowness, and bigotry. Ignorance of itself is one of the great curses of humanity; but when it is the state of mind of one who has been set in a position of responsibility, or of one who would set himself there, its power for evil is multiplied many times. History is the marvelous record of all that men have felt and thought and done in the past. It is the record of men's efforts to realize their hopes and ambitions and dreams. It unfolds their failures as well as their successes. It is the inexorable comment of time upon the ceaseless activity of the human mind. It is the revelation not only of what man was, but of what he is and of what he would be. Therefore, he who would lead men to-day, is but poorly equipped for his task unless he is reasonably familiar with the record of the past. The idea is not at all that those who would prepare for leadership should immerse themselves in the pages of history merely for the sake of making themselves familiar with facts and theories; it is that they should acquire the knowledge that will enable them to articulate the past with the present in order that they may, with some degree of assurance, point out safe paths for the future. Passionate enthusiasm, though hampered by ignorance, may be effective in bringing to pass measures that are of local and temporary interest; but constructive leadership that looks to the future must be based upon knowledge.

It is largely for this reason that we have scant patience with the so-called education for efficiency that seems to have no higher aim than to fit boys and girls to enter the earning class with the least possible expenditure of time and effort. We do not believe that education, in the true sense of the word, can be acquired or imparted in any such way. However, those who are eager to begin earning money are not likely to aspire to places in the higher field of service. They get what they want and are satisfied.

Definite convictions as to what ought to be, growing out of full knowledge, is a third condition of real leadership. A real leader is one who knows pretty well where he wants to go and is headed that way. He may not be altogether certain about some details of the way, but he has general directions clearly in mind, and he is not going to be constantly changing his course. There is a certain broad-mindedness that is compatible with an uncompromising adherence to fixed principles; but uncertainty and hesitancy are sure signs of weakness. One who is swayed by every wind of doctrine may not deserve our censure—he may be merely trying to find himself and his place in a world of conflicting opinions; but he is not to be pointed to or followed as a leader.

These definite convictions do not preclude a tolerance for other and conflicting views, and a willingness to listen, with an open mind, to suggestions from all sources. But they mean steadiness of purpose and constancy of effort for the attainment of the goal that has been set.

One other thing that must be mentioned in this connection, is courage. The leader must have the courage of his convictions. It is no easy matter, sometimes, to stand out in the open for things that may be unpopular though they are right. The leader is liable to be misunstood, and to have his motives misinterpreted. He is likely to be assailed by those he called his friends, as well as by those he knows are his enemies. But in the midst of it all, he must be strong enough to maintain his ground, and courageons enough to face his opponents, unshaken and unafraid. He must not fear to be found in advance of his times. He must expect men to come to him—he falls back at the risk of his soul. Burdens he will have to carry, and great loneliness of spirit will come upon him. It will take courage of the highest sort to keep him from losing heart and hope.

Spirituality, full knowledge, definite convictions, courage—these are some, at least, of the essentials of leadership in the Church. We thank God that we have men to-day who are qualified to lead the hosts of Zion. We have faith to believe that others are being raised up to take their places in the fulness of time.

THE EFFECT OF THE WAR ON THE EDUCATIONAL AFFAIRS OF OUR COUNTRY.

Within sixty days after the declaration of war nearly all college presidents had pledged to the President the loyalty of their trustees, faculties, alumni, and students, and had placed the resources of their respective institutions at his disposal. An expert writer on educational topics for the Boston Transcript reported last November that the colleges had contributed forty thousand students to war service, representing a loss in tuitions of four million dollars. But the drain extended also to alumni, faculties, trustees, and patrons; larger figures are required than those given; and they have grown daily since that time. The industries and activities in aid of war service have been depleted of man power; young people of college and high school age have been fruitful recruiting fields; the unusual wages offered in these and various other commercial and industrial concerns have made strong appeal for young people to leave school and college.

These facts are matters of grave concern to President Wilson, Secretary Baker, Secretary Daniels, and to all thoughtful patriots. Our allies warn us of their grave danger. Appeals have been made by our President, and others, that young men can best serve their country by staying in school and college until they are called to service by the Government. But youth cannot be restrained from the cause glorious. They hurried forward to the cantonments; there they were restless until sent to France; there they deserted in such numbers as to cause official investigation, which revealed that the "deserters" had gone to the trenches. "The only difference," says Secretary Daniels, "in the spirit of the youth of to-day and of Paul Revere's day is, that he rode as fast as his horse could carry him, while our boys seek the flying machine of fleetest and longest flight."

That the boys may follow the wiser and more patriotic plan of going to college, the Government has ordered that, beginning this fall, there shall be formed in each college, a College Army Corps, provided with uniform, equipment, and instruction; thus they will be in army service and in college at the same time, fitting themselves best for the most immediately effective military and civil service. To aid in this, one out of every twenty-five of last year's students, together with a proportional number from faculties, are now in special training at Plattsburg with a view to serving as officers in this College Army Corps under the Government commandant to be sent to these colleges this fall. It is also provided that next summer these students shall have six weeks' intensive training at Plattsburg with allowances for travel, salary, mess, and equipment. They are a part of the army but furloughed to finish their education.

Student Life in War-Time.

What of student life in war times? It was never so earnest, serious, vital, and interesting. So-called "student activities" have changed from fraternities, dances, picnics, dinners, athletics, and social functions, to studies in world conditions and to win-the-war activities, such as canvassing for the Red Cross, Thrift Stamps, Student Friendship Funds, War Libraries, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, ambulances, and hospital equipment. The students in the department of Romance Languages in one college are supporting a Soldiers' Convalescent Home in Paris; one medical college with its affiliated hospital has sent to France a thoroughly equipped base hospital of one thousand beds, costing $75,000, secured from friends of the school and hospital, manned by graduates of the school, members of the hospital staff, and graduates from its affiliated training school for nurses. And we have all heard of the Smith College Unit, and the Vassar Farmerettes. These are but illustrations of a score of win-the-war activities among college students.

It was my good fortune to hear about twenty-five high school graduating orations this spring; without exception they discussed the war, revealing a wonderfully thorough understanding of the issues involved, vibrant with patriotism, clear in thought, and strong in expression. These boys and girls are worthy to take their places in the historic line of those who defied General Gage and insisted upon their right to the use of the hill on the Boston Common for coasting and to the use of the ice on the pond for skating.

These interests and activities have greatly enriched, elevated, and quickened the intellectual life of school and college. Such vices as cribbing, cutting classes, resorting to questionable casuistry, and double-dealing, are tabooed. If a student lapses occasionally it is quite enough to say, "That sounds as if 'made in Germany;'" he feels the rebuke of the professor, but far more the scorn of his fellow students.

The classroom atmosphere has suddenly cleared; thinking relates to things fundamental. How is it that that nation which has claimed to be most educated has brought on this world disaster? Why has it revealed such moral wreck? What is science worth if its use is but to invent new forms of savagery by a people whom we thought most civilized? Is scientific achievement safe unless there is a corresponding development in moral character, an unswerving loyalty to ethical obligation; and an unfailing spiritual insight? Must history forever continue to be a series of dates posting the bloody butcheries of Kaisers to glut their greed, or shall such characters be the scorn of history? Should not history be the story of peoples in their aspirations, their development, their self-realization in truth and freedom? Sociology should no longer be a remote and hazy series of platitudes loosely strung together, constituting the choicest "snap" courses in college; it is a science requiring the hardest work of the most discriminating minds gathering data and drawing conclusions as to how people can live together in society with the greatest good to the largest number, granting a fair and equal chance to all for a living and a life—with opportunity not only for bread and shelter, but also for a self-cultivation in the fine art and spiritual grace of living nobly and well. College students are awakening to the truth so well expressed by Gilbert Murray: "We have none of us done our duty as free societies. We have oppressed the poor; we have accepted advertisement in the place of truth; we have given too much power to money; and we have been too indifferent to quality in human character. The democracy of the future must be a great deal better and cleaner than any which now exists, with more reverence, more discipline, more love of beauty, more joy in life, as well as more social friendliness between man and man." This spirit in our colleges is also now stirring in the hearts of our boys in France; and these two groups of our future citizens, men and women, will determine the character of the democracy of the future. From what we hear from France and from what is going on in our colleges, we may well have high hopes for the future.

German Materialism Found Out.

One of the most important changes in our educational situation is our disillusionment as to the character of the influence Germany has had upon our educational policies. That influence was fast taking the life, spirit, poetry, beauty, and humanity out of education and testing it alone by materialistic efficiency; it was definitely and unconscionably pragmatic. Does it work? Does it produce results? The moral quality of the working, the means by which results were achieved, the ends to which results were to be devoted, were not matters of serious concern in this philosophy of education. For instance, again and again have college presidents been "scientifically informed" by Ph.D.'s "made in Germany," that so long as they are scholars in their line and bring knowledge—often of dubious quality—into the classroom, the administration must not be concerned about the professor's personal life outside of curriculum hours. The ethical, moral, and spiritual atmosphere of many a college has suffered seriously from such a theory and has given college presidents grave concern.

Nearly one hundred professors in German universities published a declaration early in the war, defending Germany's part in the war and justifying her methods in Belgium; copies of this declaration were mailed to nearly all college faculties in the United States, among whom were many former students of these professors. It was a revelation to the educators of America and went far to break the influence of German scholarship in the United States. But here is the strange situation: there must be four or five hundred professors in American institutions and colleges who are of German birth and education. Why has there never been a counter-word of protest from them? But more alarming still, after the United States had been in the war for over a year, when the issues were clearly defined, and the monstrous crime of Prussianized Germany stood out as strong as sunlight on a clear noonday, an attempt was made to unite these professors in such a counter-declaration and protest. Out of the five hundred or more who ought to have been eager to sign such a document, and out of over two hundred who were personally given the opportunity to do so, just eighteen responded! Here is either high treason or moral delinquency; in either case it requires the immediate attention of those colleges which have these professors on their staffs of instruction.

For a generation, perhaps for a century, Germany can have no important influence in the world's educational policy except as a horrible example to be avoided. There will be no exchange of professors with Germany; students will no longer go to Germany for graduate study. Nor shall Germany any longer give us our philosophy or religion. The spirit of educators the world over will recoil at the mere suggestion of going to Germany for anything educational. Foundations like the Rhodes Trust, the Chinese Indemnity, and others, will be multiplied, so as to encourage interchange of students and professors among the Allied and neutral nations of the world. Already surveys are being made of their respective resources in education; so rich are the findings that there is astonishment that we have so long ignored these priceless treasures. The only explanation is that, with a view to Prussian propaganda, the German universities opened wider doors of welcome to the students of the world, and have given more liberal recognition to their attainment and work than the other nations deemed wise.

"Program for Cosmopolitan Education."

It is reported that an educational commission, with most patriotic intent, recently called upon our President asking him to indorse a scheme of scientific and technical education that had as its immediate objective more efficient service in winning the war. The President replied that he could heartily indorse all that the committee proposed, but more, that he was a humanist in educational matters; he thought it far better to make a plea for a program of education that would include not only what the commission wanted, but much more. He is represented as having requested them to make out a Program for Cosmopolitan Education which he would indorse, and which would, as he believed, do more for their purpose than if it stood alone. And in this suggestion our President has coined a phrase almost as enduring as his classic "make the world safe for democracy." He would have an educational program whose purpose is to make a democracy that is safe for the world. It means a type of education that is neither exclusively scientific, looking to material and militaristic efficiency, as in Germany, nor limited, humanistic, and ideal, with class distinctions and autocratic privilege, toward which England has leaned too strongly. Let us hope that we in the United States shall be delivered from that strange stupidity which has too long exercised us, that there is a contradiction between these two types of education. We do not have to choose the one, neglecting the other; we may—nay, we must—have both. Cultural education is not education if it is not also scientific and practical; practical and scientific education is not education at all if it is not also cultural. They are one; they are not in competition except in our perversity and stupidity. That which God hath joined together let us not put asunder.

The limits of this paper will permit only bare mention of the many modifications and enlargements of our educational program. Among them are Federal aid to vocational education; the type of education which our soldier boys are receiving through their unusual experience in the cantonments at home and abroad; the continuation of an educational program in foreign lands and at home among our soldiers during the war, but more particularly during demobilization and peace negotiations; the re-education of crippled soldiers for civil occupations immediately upon their return from the front; the education of dependents of soldiers, etc. All these press right now for solution and are growing more insistent every hour. The problems of demobilization and returning our boys to an efficient and worthy place in civil life will be a hundredfold more difficult and delicate than those of mobilization; and they are largely problems of education.

Our other problems will include a better parenthood for children and their better care in infancy; the abolishment of sexual diseases; the promotion of domestic and public hygiene; the development of physical education; the prevention of occupational diseases. Great stress will be placed upon vocational, commercial, and technical education; but we must resist the pressure surely to be made to prostitute this new development in education to an easy means of providing cheap, skilled labor for office, store, shop, mill, or mine. The spectacle of an employment manager of a large textile mill going to a trade school, as one did this spring, seeking to draw every boy and girl from that school into his factory at unheard-of wages, should, in the future, be looked upon as a crime against society and its youth, and as prostituting innocence and inexperience to base and ignoble ends.

And while the State will give larger and more effective attention to ethical and moral education, as well as to these above mentioned, it will devolve upon the churches to provide a scientific program of religious education that will, in the soundness of its psychology, pedagogy, and administration, compare favorably with that afforded in public school education. Here is one of the most serious problems before the Church to-day.

The education of the child in all his human relations is of vastly greater importance than that he shall become merely and only a skillful worker. Every child, whatever his occupation, has an inalienable right to a full share in the race's heritage of thought and feeling, its aspiration and hope, as distinct from his share in the primeval heritage of work; this will necessitate larger attention to vitalized instruction in liberal courses in history, literature, economics, sociology, and the theory and practice of Christian living. President Wilson's "Program of Cosmopolitan Education"—with education defined as participation in the race's heritage of thinking, feeling, and working—is the ideal for the future; and being one of the most precious goods of life, it must be fully, fairly, equally, and widely distributed among all classes. Thus, and thus only, shall we begin to do our share in making the world safe for democracy and in making democracy safe for the world.—President L. H. Murlin, of Boston University, in Zion's Herald.

HOW READ THE BIBLE?

There are many methods of study that may be used, and many rules that may be observed. It is well to read the Book through consecutively a few times to get acquaintance with all its parts. But there is no necessary blessing in much reading, any more than in much speaking to God. To select some special book for close, exhaustive examination is a good plan, going through it minutely and repeatedly until saturated with it and master of it in all details. To study by topics is excellent, to take up particular doctrines, to trace the history of prominent persons, to follow special words, like "verily" or "believe" or "blessed" or "walk." A concordance or Bible text-book is a necessity. Much depends on the free use of pen or pencil for concentrating attention and preserving the results of labor. A marked Bible—with marginal notes made by oneself, illustrative, experimental, practical, personal—has vast value. One should be familiar by name with the golden chapters. One should have at least a hundred of the jeweled verses at his tongue's end. To commit to memory one verse a day would not be a formidable task, but if practiced for a series of years, with an occasional review, the results would be immensely beneficial.

Great freshness is given to the Bible by reading it in another language than one's own, in the original tongue, of course, most of all, and in other tongues. A new English translation, such as the American Revised Version, or the Twentieth Century New Testament, or Weymouth's New Testament in Modern Speech, or Moffatt's New Translation, by its unaccustomed phrases and changes in language helps to set the mind at work. And this is the one main thing to be sought by all means—that the mind should really work at the Word, to get out of it, as out of a mine, gems of truth. The exact meaning of the original writer should be mastered, if possible, first, then adaptations to our own times and analogical applications to our own needs may fittingly be found. Reason, research, imagination, affection, volition should all come into play, the two latter especially.

The Bible should be read with most careful discrimination, and with the untrammeled exercise of one's reason or common sense. Many good Christians are afraid to use their reason in this matter, being still enslaved by a superstitious fear that is most pitiful, bound by a meaningless reverence for the mere letter of the Bible when it is the spirit alone that giveth life.

The difficulties in the way of understanding the Scriptures are more than the ordinary reader is apt to perceive. It is true that the bare essentials of salvation are tolerably clear to one who honestly seeks to know them. But when one passes beyond this, as almost every one desires to do, it is not such plain sailing. What we call the Bible is a series of pamphlets more or less disconnected, by writers separated from each other, as well as from us, very widely, far distant from us in space as well as in time, living in ages and countries where the habits and customs of life were not like ours, where the ways of speech and of thought were foreign to us, using languages many of whose terms have no precise equivalent in our tongue, so that the work of transiation is exceedingly difficult, and dealing with subjects of the profoundest nature. He who reads right on without thought or learning, reading it as he would peruse a newspaper of the present day, will make many serious mistakes, as the multiplicity of denominations, all appealing to the same Scriptures, abundantly testifies.

Then there are not only the intellectual sources of error to be considered, but the spiritual. He is not likely to understand the Bible whose heart is at odds with its precepts. "If any man is willing to do his will, he shall know of the teaching." Other things being equal, the holiest man will comprehend the Word of God the best, for He will be taught of the Spirit as to its meaning. But if one were to rely on the supposed teaching of the spirit alone he would make many foolish blunders, as the history of fanaticism testifies. What then? I will read "with the spirit and with the understanding also" is a good resolve. It is well also to consult with those best qualified, by their possession of both spirit and understanding, to give counsel as to the real purport of these ancient writers.

There are many ways of studying Scripture. We strongly recommend the intensive rather than the extensive, although both are good. There are those who pride themselves on reading the whole Bible through in course once a year, or perhaps the New Testament once a quarter. It does not seem to us the best way. It will produce a superficial acquaintance with the letter of the text, but nothing more. It is utter folly to say that all parts of the Bible are of equal importance, or equally profitable, or equally inspired. Selections must be made, as in all other volumes. All those books, those chapters, those phrases that contain the substance of the revelation, that have the most direct application to life, that best meet one's personal needs, that are most juicy, most practical, most prolific of suggestions, most weighty with thought, must be picked out and conned continually. One cannot too often go over these parts or too profoundly meditate upon them. He that eateth Christ in this way shall live by Him. It is in this way that the Word of the Lord is digested and passes into the mental and spiritual system, producing strength in the inner man, and equipping for the warfare of life.—Rev. James Mudge, S. T. D., in Zion's Herald.

OUR BEST FOR HIM.

There is a beautiful story told of Titian, the great painter; he met a young man whose gift in the direction of art seemed to be unusually promising. He urged the young man to give up the idea of winning fame in a military life and to devote his talents and his energy in painting. After the young man had labored for a long time upon a painting in which he was ambitious to make his name famous, he came to a point where he felt that his genius failed. In despair, the young man threw down his brush. Titian met him weeping, and did not ask the reason, but, going into the studio, he realized that the young man had felt that he had reached the limit of his genius. So Titian took up the brush, remained at work through the night, and finished the picture. The next afternoon the young man came back to the studio, resolved that he would try art no more, and as he entered the door, there, upon the great easel was his finished picture. He knew at once, instinctively, that the great master of art, Titian, had completed his design. With tears coursing down his cheeks he said, "I cannot abandon my art. I must continue for his sake. He has done so much for me I will forget myself and please him. My master's fame is my fame. I will paint and do my best." To-day his pictures hang side by side with Titian's on the gallery walls of the world. The Master has done more for thee. His fame is your fame. Give him your best.—Cortland Myers.

The essence of lying is in deception, not in words; a lie may be told by silence, by equivocation, by the accent on a syllable, by a glance of the eye attaching a peculiar significance to a sentence; and all these kinds of lies are worse and baser by many degrees than a lie plainly worded; so that no form of blinded conscience is so far sunk as that which comforts itself for having deceived because the deception was by gesture or silence, instead of utterance.—John Ruskin.

NEW BEGINNINGS IN MEXICO.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

The heading of this does not mean we have ever ceased work in Mexico any more than it means we have never done any before. It only means that under new conditions and on new plans we are making a new start. Bishop Cannon, our new Bishop in charge; Miss Case, Secretary for Latin America and myself have just returned from Chihuahua on this mission.

Our first object was to decide on an Episcopal residence which is to be in the field occupied by our Mexican work, Home and Foreign. The two cities which meet this condition are San Antonio and El Paso. After full investigation and consideration of all the conditions, San Antonio was decided on, at least for the present year, and a suitable residence was rented.

Owing to some slip in the cogs, the passports of Miss Case and myself were delayed and we ventured across the Rio Grande on a permit from our courteous Customs Officers and found that sufficient to get us to Chihuahua and back, although I would not urge this as a safe precedent to follow.

From El Paso to Chihuahua the road is fairly good and notwithstanding the antiquated and dilapidated day coach in which we traveled, the trip was comfortable and without unpleasant incidents. The route lies through territory which has not been free from bandits and which bears evidence of the havoc of war. Rails lie all along the road, curled and tortured into every conceivable shape, as an example of the artistic work of General Orozco during the revolution—one of them. There are blackened ruins and dismantled walls that bear witness to the loss and madness of war. But this all seems like ancient history as we gaze on the sandy stretches rimmed with mountains that lift sharp, bare outlines against the bluest of blue skies. The scene is one of peace and the unhurried and unhurriable population fit well into the serene environment. But the troops, such as they are, occupying the box car just behind our coach, tell another story, and the barbed wire entanglements and other crude defenses about the depots where the road runs near the mountains, warn one that those smiling ridges are deceitful. We pass the camp of General Mourguia and realize that here is something that may at least divert the attention of Francisco Villa or any of his ilk till we get by.

In Chihuahua all was quiet and orderly apparently, and while we saw signs of war and pillage, they were not so numerous nor so extensive as one might have expected from what we read in the newspapers.

We had a most pleasing and satisfactory interview with the new Governor, a young man of culture and of an attractive personality. He treated us and our mission with the utmost courtesy and gave us every assurance of his sympathy and support in our educational work. He bears a good reputation among the people and from remarks he let drop during our interview, we may look for interesting developments in that region. He is organizing a force which he himself proposes to lead in a hunt for Villa in good earnest.

The last night but one that we remained in Chihuahua, two men were hanged by Villistos three miles from the city. The papers had staged a raid on the city for that time, but that was as near as it got—quite near enough for us. I make haste to say there was no connection whatever between this and our sudden leave taking. The incident created no excitement and not much comment. In fact, hangings are quite frequent. One passenger on our train out told me he counted eight the day before hanging from telegraph poles west of Chihuahua. Nevertheless, one realizes the country is settling down and becoming more orderly and normal. This may be on the surface, but that is all a visitor can see.

Our visit was for the purpose of arranging for reopening our schools and arranging with our Congregational brethren for the necessary exchanges of property and other matters involved in the new territorial adjustment. Our task was made delightful by the Christian courtesy and brotherliness of those in charge of the Congregational Mission, Mr. and Mrs. Wright and Miss Long. They were surrendering a cherished work into which they had been building their lives, but they do it ungrudgingly for the sake of Christ and Mexico. We surrender work in Guadalajara and in other sections quite as dear, and we do it gladly for the sake of the larger interests of the work. Nothing could be more beautiful than this spirit of Christian comity being manifested in so practical and thorough a way in Mexico, and nothing in half a century has promised so much for that country's religious and educational well-being.

It happens that in the exchange of property between the two Churches that there will be only a few thousand dollars difference in valuation. Instead of the one school property at Palmore College we get two others in Chihuahua, one of them not quite completed. Two of these will be used for school purposes and one for settlement work, for which we find it admirably located. We get from them a very good and commodious church and missionary's residence in the heart of the city, and a residence for our Mexican pastor. We shall be far better equipped, therefore, for all our work there and with little extra outlay. Our women will have a great plant and an exceptional opportunity for educational and social centers well equipped with no extra outlay of cash.

The uniting of two good congregations into one in the large and attractive church now occupied by the Congregationalists will make a strong self-supporting congregation and influential center for evangelistic work. All in all, we shall be better equipped there than we have been heretofore in any city in Mexico. The same will be true of the Congregationalists in Guadalajara by the combination of two plants into one, and of other places as well.

We begin to see more clearly than ever the vast benefit to be realized from this redistribution of territory. For one thing, we shall be able to man our entire territory with greater ease and furnish our centers with far better and more permanent equipment. We have in our territory in Mexico, including five States on the border, about 2,000,000 people. While sparsely settled, much of it is good territory and is occupied by the strongest and best people of the republic.

One of the pleasant and significant features of our brief visit was a delightful evening in which a "bien venudo" (or welcome) was given in the assembly hall of Palmore College to the visitors from the North and to the members of the Congregational Church. There was music and speech making and good fellowship and good things to eat. We took this as a good omen of the future. In fact, the indications are that with tact and a little patience, the two congregations will soon be as if they had always been one.

This exhibition of Christian unity and co-operation among the Protestants throughout the republic will far more than offset whatever dissatisfaction there may be here and there, based on denominational grounds. The two congregations in Chihuahua have already been worshiping together in the finest fellowship.

Miss Case was radiant at the prospect and Bishop Cannon expressed much satisfaction in the outlook. He took hold of the situation with his customary vigor and thoroughness and industriously sought to understand every detail. I think it can be safely said if the Church fails to make good there, it will not be his fault. But let it be understood once for all—we are not going to fail.

THE NATIONAL "GO TO COLLEGE" CAMPAIGN.

The "Go to College" campaign, inaugurated by the Federal Government, should enlist the heartiest co-operation of our readers. This plan, taken in connection with the plan of the Government to form in all high grade colleges for young men Students' Army Training Corps, will make a strong appeal to high school graduates.

The following letter has been addressed by the President of Millsaps College to the preachers of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Annual Conferences. We have no doubt that every one of our preachers will be glad to comply with the suggestion of Dr. Watkins.

Jackson, Miss., August 12, 1918.

My Dear Brother: Mr. Ira T. Gilmer, the Executive Secretary of the "Go to College Campaign" inaugurated by the United States Government, tells me that he has written to every preacher in the State, calling his attention to the advantages of this campaign to high school graduates and requesting them to present the plan to their congregations at their regular appointments on Sunday, August 25.

This campaign, taken in connection with the plan of the Government to discourage boys less than the draft age from volunteering and encouraging them to continue their education by going to college, and thus more thoroughly to prepare themselves for the service of their country, is of especial interest to institutions like Millsaps College.

In such institutions the War Department proposes to form Students' Army Training units, where young men can enlist in the Army and continue their education until they shall be called at graduation into the active service.

The Government proposes to place at these colleges a military instructor, and to furnish guns, uniforms (including hats, shoes, and overcoats), and other necessary equipment, and in this way to give the young men not only an opportunity to become thoroughly drilled soldiers, but also to carry on in the meantime their college education.

The Army needs officers, and while not all of those who enlist can hope to become commissioned officers, this points out the plainest road toward this promotion.

My purpose in this letter is to earnestly ask you to comply with the request of Professor Gilmer, and on that day to urge upon the high school boys of your congregation the advantages offered by our own Methodist College. Yours fraternally,

A. F. WATKINS, President.

Every telephone operator understands that she is working under conditions unprecedented in our national life, and in rendering efficient service she is doing a patriotic duty similar to that of the soldiers in the trenches.
She knows that the enormous increase in telephone traffic is due directly to the government's war activities, and that it is regarded as a matter of course that she will meet the new demands cheerfully and well.
So when the increasing business is reflected in your telephone service by a slowing down and by more frequent busy reports, remember that the operator is not entirely to blame.

THE CAMP PASTOR ORDER.

The War Department has recently issued an order that "In view of the greatly increased number of chaplains authorized by recent legislation, and the professional training of chaplains, the present arrangement at camps and posts whereby privlieges within the camps are granted to camp pastors of various denominations shall he brought to an end." Camp and post commanders are, hy this order, instructed to "bring this decision tactfully to the attention of clergymen now acting as camp pastor or voluntary chaplain;" and a period of not exceeding three months after the notice is given for completing work now in hand.

The order states that "This shall not he construed to prevent chaplains on duty with organizations and at camps and posts, with the approval of their commanding officers, from inviting clergymen to conduct services or to assist therewith on special occasions." The order further states that "Plans are under way for hringing to the camps, for public addresses and private conferences, a number of men distinguished in their various professions (including the clergy) whom officers and men will have an opportunity to hear upon the moral and spiritual factors of the war, and upon other subjects of fundamental interest."

Naturally this order unsettles the camp pastor in all our camps, and raises many questions in the minds of all concerned with the spiritual welfare of our men.

Effort has been made and will be continued in a spirit of loyalty and earnest desire to serve the Government in the best possible way, to secure the withdrawal or modification of the order. The last meeting of the Executive Committee of the General War-time Commission of the Churches earnestly discussed the question. A strong committee was appointed to take the matter up with the War Department. It will take time to reach final conclusions.

Meantime, what?

We do not think the purpose of this order is to shut off the soldiers from such religious privileges as they have heen accustomed to enjoy, so long as these can possibly be rendered. Nor can we helieve it to he the purpose of the order to stop the Churches from ministering to the soldiers reared in their faith and rendering them the ministries of the gospel. Whatever military complications may have arisen at some points in connection with this work, we are sure the aim and work of camp pastors of Methodism, as a whole, has been heartiest co-operation with and response to military authority, seeking to create and maintain the morale necessary to "win the war." We Methodists believe that to "shoot straight," one must "live straight," and we believe that living straight is a matter of faith in and obedience to Christ. Faith in and obedience to Christ, we insist, is the only ground of the highest efficiency of manhood as civilian or soldier. We have sought and will seek to bring men to this ground of high efficiency through the preaching of the gospel—the simple gospel of Christ as the present, all potent Savior of men.

If we cannot render this ministry to the quarter of a million men of our own branch of Methodism now in the army while in the camps through such agencies as we have heen employing, we must find hetter agencies, or multiply our agencies for reaching these men hefore they go from our home churches, when on leave, and in every way possihle.

We hope the War Department, when it has clearly before it the spirit and purpose of the camp pastor plan, will see fit to withdraw the order, or at least to modify it, that the work we seek to do in creating and maintaining the morale needful above all to a soldier, may continue. We are not only willing, but rather prefer a system of military regulations for all who work in the camps. But we must reach our men with a saving gospel at this time when they go forth to face death for us, and when their hearts and minds are open to the appeal of the gospel as never before. We must do this in some way, or their blood will he required at our hands.

Some, who should have clear ideas as to the order, suggest that the paragraph permitting chaplains, with consent of their commanding officer, to invite clergymen to assist in special services, should he construed as permitting the continuance in this way of all the vital activities heretofore carried on by camp pastors. However that be, there are lines in which we can and must minister in loyal obedience to orders. The situation must and will be met.

Some plans that suggest themselves are:

1. The estahlishment of church headquarters in towns and citles adjacent to camps, and the maintenance at these of the highest order of intensive work in hehalf of soldiers on leave.

2. The assignment of "soldier pastors" as assistants to churches adjacent to camps—this to be for rural churches near camps as well as for the churches in towns and cities.

3. Special ministries of every proper sort and as far as possible to our men within camp by pastors of our churches, or their assistants designated as "soldier pastor" of such church. We should seek permission for and invitation to perform these ministries.

4. Redouhled effort to reach our men and draw them to our churches and to the church headquarters when on leave.

5. Gripping emphasis upon the preaching at every service in all our churches of CHRIST as the only, the present, and the all potent Savior of men. We must everywhere, whether soldiers he present or absent, but especially where there are men in uniform or men and boys soon to go to the colors, preach this old, old gospel of a present salvation through repentance and faith in Christ as the only Name given under Heaven among men whereby one may he saved.

6. Every pastor, presiding elder, and Bishop, bearing constantly in mind the great obligation of the Church, no matter what the difficulties, must keep emphasis upon soldier ministry through the gospel.

7. We must do more for our chaplains to enlarge and make more efficient their ministry. These chaplains should have every time and labor saver possible that their full strength may be devoted to real ministry.

8. We must enter the open doors of opportunity afforded hy the great war work industrial plants that spring up almost over night, massing thousands in new communities and under absolutely new conditions without provision previously for churches and the ministry of the gospel. These, as truly as those with the colors, need our ministry.

All this requires money—more and more of it—and that right now. The need for the money called for under the War Work Emergency Fund is more imperative to-day than ever. Let no pastor or presiding elder dally about this. Call for the small sum suggested as a minimum; and if the presentation is even half-way clear, our people will respond with far more than they were asked for, no matter how much they may have given to similar causes. It is no trouble to get our people to give, that our boys may have the gospel according to the ideals of our fathers. E. O. WATSON, Secretary.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

By Rev. Isaac Lockhart Peebles.

"Church of Christ" is not in the Bible, neither is it in the writings of the early fathers of the Church; and if it had been, why should it be called, "The Holy Church of Christ?" Is not Christ holy? And therefore, is it not understood that since he is holy, it would he out of place to say "The Holy Christ?" and to say "The Holy Church of Christ?" He can have no Church but a holy one, and therefore "The Church of Christ" means a holy Church without adding "holy" to it. It is implied. He has no other kind. The phrase, "Catholic Church," was used by Ireneus in his book 3d against all heresies when he wrote: "The truth is to he found nowhere else but in the Catholic Church."

Ireneus, of the first century, wrote: "Where Christ is, in that place is the Catholic Church," but the Smyrneans wrote in the second century: "And to all the congregations of the Holy and Catholic Church in every place."

The Aposties' Creed seems to have been formulated from period to period until the present form in which we have it came down to us from the writings of Pirminius, A. D. 750. The main substance, and in some cases its present wording, date back to A. D. 180, and hence the conclusion is, that it was not formulated by the apostles but hy Bible students and church councils from time to time, basing it on the Scriptures. History does not afford us the accuracy we desire concerning the Apostles' Creed as to its beginning and development. However, we may change it until it is strictly scriptural; hut to substitute "the Holy Church of Christ" for "Holy Catholic Church," is not making it as scriptural as to substitute "the Church of God." There are two scriptural reasons for substituting "the Church of God" for "the Holy Catholic Church." The first reason is, "the Church of God" implies Trinity; the Father, Son and Holy Ghost," but "the Holy Church of Christ" does not. The second reason is, that it harmonizes fully with such Scriptures as: "Christ is God's." 1 Cor. 3:23, and also with those eight with the phrase: "Church of God." Acts 20:28, 1 Cor. 1:2, 1 Cor. 10:32, 1 Cor. 11:22, 1 Cor. 15:9, 2 Cor. 1:1. Gal. 1:13. 1 Tim. 3:5, and also the one with the phrase: "Church of the living God." 1 Tim. 3:15.

From the above, almost any one should see, that if we desire the most scriptural course, we should substitute for "the Holy Catholic Church" "the Church of the living God."

Notes and Comment

Alabama Next.

Reports indicate that the prohibition forces in Alabama were successful in the recent elections in that State, which means that the constitutional amendment for national prohibition will be adopted in due time. One by one, the States are falling into line.

Not Around This Office.

Cliff Williams, district superintendent of labor, says there are 30,000 loafers, 20,000 of them men, in New Orleans. In addition, there are 14,241 men here engaged in non-essential industries. Mr. Williams says there is 50 per cent more idleness here than in any other city of the South. We do not know how accurate his figures are; we see a good many men everyday on the streets of the city who do not seem to have anything especially to do. We can assure Mr. Williams, however, that there are no loafers around this office.

He is There.

A selectman from Parson, Alaska, has just arrived at Camp Lewis, Tacoma, Washington, after a 3000 mile journey by dog team, buckboard, mail barge, river steamer, railway, and coastwise vessel. It was not an easy trip, as can very well be imagined. But his country had called him and difficulties could not be allowed to stand in the way. This is the spirit that characterizes our men from all sections of the country. It is the spirit that is making the American army one of the finest fighting machines the world has ever seen. It is the spirit that will harry the Huns out of France and carry the war to Berlin. It is absolutely unbeatable.

"A Day in June."

It has been stated officially that the American war program calls for 3,000,000 men in France by June 30, 1919. The military policy of President Wilson, so it is stated, calls for the concentration of America's forces on the Western front, including Italy, with the idea of forcing the issue and winning there. General March has expressed the opinion that four million American soldiers under one commander can go through the German lines whenever they please. We have an idea that, when they do get ready to go through, they will do it with such energy and enthusiasm that those German lines will be broken into insignificant bits. We will whip the Kaiser in June—if not before.

The Public is Entitled to Know.

The people as a whole are fighting this war and paying for it, too. They are entitled, therefore, to know what is going on, in so far as that knowledge will not impair our chances of success. The old idea that they should ask no questions and receive no information, has passed away. We are glad to note that General March, chief of staff, believes the people can be trusted and is willing to give them a clear understanding of the situation from day to day. Twice a week he meets the newspaper men and gives them reviews of the situation, and comments upon what is being done and planned, that are read with a great deal of interest throughout the country. Proper publicity is worth a great deal, even in running a war.

What Difference Does War Make?

New Orleans was entertained last week with a "Fall Buyers' Dance and Style Show" at one of the largest auditoriums in the city. We did not see it; we do not believe in dancing, and we are not especially interested in styles at the present moment. What we are interested in, is winning the war and the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth. We cannot see how dances and style shows can help either cause. We had fondly imagined, since the King of England is willing to wear a $14 suit of clothes, and cabinet members are willing to wear patched trousers and half-soled shoes, that styles would have to retire to the background for awhile. We were mistaken; what difference does the war make with some people, anyway?

Conductors, Too?

A newspaper report says that the railroads in Washington have opened a training school to teach young women to become ticket sellers. Within a short time, it is thought, similar schools will be opened in Nashville, Atlanta, and New Orleans. This action has become necessary on account of the heavy demands made by the army draft on the male population of the country. Already women are acting as elevator tenders in office buildings and, in some places, as street car conductors. They have promptly stepped into, and filled satisfactorily, many other positions made vacant by the operation of the draft law. We are not surprised nowadays to find a woman engaged in any kind of business. Perhaps they will be acting as train conductors and engineers soon.

Not Worth It.

A news dispatch from London says that Kerensky, of Russia, has received a flattering offer from America to tour the States as a lecturer. The dispatch says that the contract offered him specifies a fee of $1500 for each of ten lectures, and half that amount for each of forty or fifty more. In addition, railway and hotel expenses will be paid and the services of a secretary and translator provided. Unfortunately for Mr. Kerensky, the British Government refuses to give him a passport that will enable him to take advantage of this golden opportunity. It is well; the charges made against Kerensky by those who know his record in Russia are such, if true, as would make him altogether an undesirable visitor. In general, the charges are that he has all along been a willing tool of Germany. They seem to be well-sustained. In any case, however, $1500 is a high price to pay for a speech by anybody.

A Little Common Sense.

The Commission on Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Departments has recently issued a warning to young women to be watchful of the acquaintanceships they make with soldiers. The Commission says the warning is not intended to reflect on the character of the men in the service, who as a whole are clean and upstanding, but nevertheless women should not approach and talk to a man in uniform unless he has been properly presented or has been vouched for by community organizations. No thoughtful person will take offense at this warning. It is simply a suggestion that the ordinary rules of propriety and common sense be observed that are in force in ordinary social intercourse. Nothing is to be gained, either by the soldiers themselves or the community at large, by letting down the bars at this point. The strict requirements of the social code are the result of a social evolution that has been guided all along by common sense.

Who Will Pay It?

The report has been made unofficially that the United States Food Administration has agreed to increase the sugar refiners' margin of profit 145 points net, equivalent to $1.45 a hundred pounds, or about a cent and half a pound. We have no fault to find with the desire of business men to make a reasonable profit on their transactions, and we do not know that a cent and a half a pound is too much to make on sugar; but we have a very definite idea that ultimately all increased profits have to come out of the pocket of the consumer. And we know that increased prices are making it exceedingly difficult for the average family to keep up with the costs of living. The sugar prices are probably all right—the Food Administration has that matter well in hand—but some princes of commerce are evidently getting more than a gentleman's share of the money in circulation. We should like for somebody to come to the help of the man who "pays the freight."

They Are Making Good.

"I've been a sort of wanderer for the past six years. I guess the folks back home thought I was good for nothing. But now I wish you would write mother for me, and just tell her I made good." These are the words of a wounded Marine who had just been carried to a hospital in Paris. They illustrate two things that are characteristic of the American boy—the capacity for making good, and his love for mother. Many a reckless youth, in those trying hours in the trenches, has been brought face to face with himself, and as he has realized something of the meaning of life, his nobler instincts have asserted themselves and gained the mastery over that which was evil. The appeals for clean living and right thinking have not been without avail. And then the thought of mother grips the life and brings it back to the high resolves and noble ambitions of boyhood. The mothers of America deserve a large share of the credit for the record our boys are making at the front.

The War Situation.

A report from Paris says that the German losses from the beginning of the war to the end of July are understood to be 6,000,000. From March 27 to June 17, the Germans are said to have lost 120,000 in killed alone. It is evident that the enemy's manpower, once so freely wasted, is dwindling now in such proportions as to cause great anxiety to those high in command. General Ludendorff has issued orders that every available man be made ready for the trenches. The German press is beginning to demand of the Government that it supply full information to the people that they may know why they fight. There is unrest throughout the Central Powers that seems to be a serious menace to the military authorities. In the meantime, the Allies are steadily growing stronger. They have continued to push back the German lines and capture great stores of military supplies. The United States is about to make provision for sending a largely increased number of men to the front. The financial requirements are being satisfactorily arranged for. The situation is altogether encouraging.

A Street Car Company in Trouble.

The New Orleans Railway and Light Company is in hard lines. The War Labor Board recently granted an increase in pay to the employees of the company, which the officials say they are utterly unable to pay with their present resources. In order to meet the situation they propose seven-cent carfares, abolition of transfers, and a 30 per cent increase in gas and electric light rates. The officials of the company met with a committee of financiers and exchange presidents on Thursday of last week to consider the matter. The financiers seemed to be of the opinion that the increased rates should be put into effect. It finally dawned upon them, however, that the people at large, who pay the bills, ought to be given some consideration in the matter. Recent occurrences in Detroit, in which rioting marked the protest of the people against increased carfares, made them realze that, perhaps after all, the community at large has some rights in the administration of a great public utility. A meeting was therefore called for Friday, at which labor leaders and others were invited to be present. We do not know at this writing what the outcome will be; but we do know that the time is rapidly approaching when the exploitation of public utilities for private gain by the well known methods of high finance, which is usually responsible for the financial embarrassment for which the people have to suffer, will be too dangerous from a legal point of view to be attempted very often. We believe that actually invested capital is entitled to a fair return; but we hate to see the people suffer as the result of financial mismanagement on the part of a few individuals. Even at five cents per ride, street car fare in a city is a considerable item of expense.

THE GREAT HEART OF GOD.

Ten thousand armies might bathe in the ocean, and neither sully its purity nor exhaust its cleansing power. Yet the ocean is but a cup by the side of God's heart. Realms and orbs may bathe and rise into purity; no words will ever hint or dimly paint the height and depth and length and breadth of the love of Christ. It is love that pours, endless and spontaneous, just as the sunlight does—simply because God is love!—Henry Ward Beecher.

MISS HURRY AND MISS STEADY.

Little Miss Hurry,
Ali hustle and flurry,
Comes down to her breakfast ten minutes too late;
Her hair is a-rumple,
Her gown is a-crumple,
She's no time to button and hook herself straight.
She hunts and she rushes
For needles and brushes,
For books and for pencils flies upstairs and down;
If ever you'd find her,
Just follow behind her
A trail of shoe-buttons and shreds of her gown.

But little Miss Steady
By school time is ready,
Ali smiling and shining and neat in her place;
With no need to worry,
She pities Miss Hurry,
Who but yesterday sat here with shame in her face.
Her heart beating lightly,
With duty done rightly,
She vows she will never again change her name;
For, though you'd not guess it,
I'm bound to confess it,
These two little maidens are one and the same.

DAVY'S STRONG FOUNDATION.

Davy stood and watched the workmen as they laid the foundation for the new house next door. He had never before seen a piledriver, and the great hammer driving the piles was very wonderful and new to Davy.

Day after day found him watching at the fence that divided their garden from the next lot.

After a while the big piledriver was moved away, and the workmen began using the lumber that lay waiting to build the house. Davy missed watching the huge hammer work, but he soon grew very much interested in the new house.

The workmen came to know and like Davy, too, and because he was polite and never meddled with anything they saved the odds and ends of lumber and gave them to him to play with in the garden.

"Davy, dear," called his mother one bright morning, "don't you think that you have learned enough by watching the workmen next door to be a carpenter yourself and build a doll house for your little sister?"

Davy's face was as bright as the day as he ran into the house for the hammer.

"Come on, Agnes," he called, "and show me where you want it put."

Little Agnes followed him into the garden and chose her lot.

"I'll have to drive piles there first to make it safe," Davy said, as he began hammering things into the ground.

Agnes started to cry, and mother came to the window to see what the trouble was.

"She wants to see the house go right up, mother," called Davy, "but I've got to make the foundation strong before I begin to build."

"You wouldn't like your house to fall when the first hard wind blows, would you, dear?" asked her mother, joining the children in the garden.

And then, while Davy laid his foundation, she explained to her little daughter something of what Davy had learned all the days he had watched the piledriver.

Davy took a whole week to build the house, and that seemed a long time to his little sister; but he didn't slight one thing about it, and so when it was finished it was quite a nice little house.

Several of the workmen paused to watch Davy, as they passed the garden fence, and to praise his good work.

One sunshiny morning, when the house was quite complete, Davy and his mother sat under one of the garden trees and watched Agnes move her things in.

"I am glad you are so careful in your building," began his mother. "Did you ever think that people are like houses, my child?"

Davy's face grew puzzled, and he listened eagerly as she continued:

"You see, it's like this. Even little folks can begin by taking the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior and laying a good foundation for their lives, and as they grow older and larger they must not neglect any part of their house, but put all good works into the building."

Davy smiled as her meaning came to him.

"I never thought before of people being like houses!" he exclaimed.

"There are poor, cramped houses of weak material in the world, and there are also strong, beautiful houses carefully built," his mother replied, softly. "Which kind are you going to try and make your life like, Davy?"

"I mean to try and be like the strong one, mother!"

"Then," she whispered softly, "your building shall not fall, but will remain strong and good throughout all the stormy days of life."—American Messenger.

THE RHYMING GAME.

"Now what can we play next?" Hilda snuggled up to her Great Aunt Agnes as she asked the question that little folks are always asking on rainy days.

"How about a rhyming game?" suggested Aunt Agnes. "We might play one that your Grandmother Hillis and I used to play when we were just about the ages of you and Miriam."

"Oh, that would be lovely! How do you play it?" the children asked.

"Well," Aunt Agnes smiled down at them. "Let me think a minute. It's so long since I've played it. Now I believe I am ready. I have thought of a word that rhymes with gave. And you children must guess what it is."

"Is it brave?" asked Miriam, quickly.

"But that isn't the way you must ask in this game," Aunt Agnes explained. "You must describe the word, without saying it outright. For instance, you may ask, 'Is it a word that we could use in describing our soldiers?' And I'll answer at once, 'No, it is not brave?'"

"Oh!" said Hilda, thoughtfully. "I believe I understand. Don't you, Miriam?" and Miriam nodded.

Then, "Is it a sort of—sort of deep, dark hollow place in the side of a hill or down in the ground?" asked Miriam. And again Aunt Agnes shook her head.

"No, dear, it isn't' cave."

"Is it a dishonest, bad kind of a man?" asked Hilda.

"No, dearie, it isn't knave! You're both playing the game beautifully," she added.

"Is it what our flag does in the wind?" asked Hilda.

"No, it isn't wave," replied Aunt Agnes.

"Oh, my, what can it be?" Miriam and Hilda puckered their foreheads, and for a moment there was silence.

"Is it—is it what we ought to be doing now with food—'specially white bread and wheat and bacon and things they're needing over in Europe?" Miriam asked, eagerly.

"Yes, dear," nodded Aunt Agnes, "you've guessed it this time; it is save. And because you guessed it, it's your turn to think of the next word, Miriam."

"I think this is the nicest game," Hilda said; while Miriam shut her eyes and began to "think hard."

"And it teaches you a lot, too, about words; it's like a language lesson, only it's fun, because it is a game."—The Child's Gem.

RELATION BETWEEN CRIME AND PUNISHMENT IN TURKISH LAW.

In Turkey, if you stole a horse, it entailed from one to three years' imprisonment; if you stole a sheep you were liable to from three to seven years. While you are figuring at this I will give you another instance of subtle jurisprudence. If I drew a dagger on you and stabbed you seriously, but you recovered, I was liable to prison from one to three years. If, on the other hand, I drew a dagger on you but did not touch you, I might be imprisoned anywhere from three to seven years. Yusuf Effendi, a prominent lawyer, was much disgusted with my obtuseness when I questioned the equitableness of these penalties.

"Why," said he, "it is as plain as day. If you go to steal a horse the supposition is you purpose to escape on the horse's back, but if you go to steal a sheep, inasmuch as you in the nature of the case cannot ride away on the sheep's back, it is fair to suppose that you come armed and ready to resist. Therefore, if you steal a sheep you are the more guilty, in intent at least, and deserve the greater penalty. And, again, if I draw a dagger on you, and though I wound you seriously, yet you do not die, the result is known—namely, bodily injury. But if I draw a dagger on you, even though I do not touch you, yet I might have killed you, and therefore I also in that case deserve the greater penalty."—From "Seven Innings in Mesopotamia," by John Van Ess, in Asia magazine for July.

It's got something that all the others seem to lack. And it's packed in dust-proof, moisture-proof cans that bring Luzianne to your kitchen just the same as when it left the roaster. Editorial

THE POWER OF ENTRENCHED EVIL.

We recently had occasion to read a part of the report of the special committee appointed hy Congress to investigate conditions in East St. Louis which resulted in the race riots there some months ago. The record is enough to make the heart sick. Never before have we come across a document which iiiustrated so forcibly the power of entrenched evil. Vice of the most damning kind is shown to have been rampant, the courts and all the means of securing justice and decency apparently being controlled ahsolutely hy the harpies that prey on human weakness. As we read it, our wonder grew that it was possihle for such conditions to exist in a Christian land.

But as we thought of it, we were forced to the conclusion that the forces of righteousness were not aitogether biameless for the state of affairs that had come to exist. Their fault was a negative one, to be sure, but it was real, nevertheless. They had allowed the forces of evil to become so entrenched that the task of disiodging them was all but impossible; and the upheaval that shocked the whole country was hut the logical result of a policy of indifference that is aitogether too characteristic of many good people.

We need to remember in these days, as in all others, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Whiie we are going along comfortably, maintaining a kind of smug moral respectahility and shrinking from contact with the sordid forces of wickedness, those very forces, taking advantage of our policy of non-interference, are gradually, but surely and powerfully making for themselves strongholds that are not easiiy to he overthrown. When we do awake to a realization of conditions, we find ourselves almost powerless in the face of entrenched evil.

We do not advocate rashness in dealing with wrong conditions; hut we do helieve strongly in the doctrine of the open eye and the uplifted voice and the outstretched arm and the clenched fist as a means of averting threatened dangers. In many communities to-day, situations are developing that ought to he brought under control before they get beyond it. It would be hard, perhaps, to find a parallel to the East St. Louis case; but such parallels are potentially existent in many American communities. Little snakes, left alone, grow into dangerous serpents; little eviis, unchecked, grow into giants of destruction that are hard to kill.

We need to he constantiy on guard lest evii gain the ascendancy; if, hy any chance, evil becomes entrenched, we need to mass the forces of righteousness against it and maintain the assault untii it is defeated and utterly overthrown.

GET YOUR FUEL NOW.

The Fuel Administration continues to warn the public that there is a great scarcity of coal, and that it is going to be increasingly difficult for private consumers to secure a supply unless they take immediate steps to that end. In Louisiana, the Fuel Administrator has recently announced regulations that will virtually cut off the coal supply of farmers and others in rural communities. This action has heen taken in view of the fact that the State is rich in firewood which is easy to secure, and in view of the fact that a cord of wood has a heat value of three-fourths of a ton of coai. Every ounce of coai is needed for war industries and for our fleet of transports and supply ships.

We write this note to cali attention again to the great importance of providing now an adequate fuei supply for our churches, parsonages and schoolhouses before cold weather sets in. It is not always easy to get wood cut and hauled, and there is a possibility that some of our people, who have relied on an ample coal supply heretofore, will have to suffer when frost comes. Make provision for your fuel supply now.

GO TO COLLEGE WITHOUT FAIL.

The editor of Zion's Herald recentiy submitted to a number of leading educators and others vitaily connected with educational affairs, an inquiry as to the advice they would give a youth about attending college this fall. The following striking reply, in the form of a ietter to a young man who was debating the question, was given hy Dr. W. F. Warren, President Emeritus of Boston University:

"Dear Godfrey: Jack tells me that though your preparation for Boston University is complete, yesterday's offer of twenty-five dollars a week from Beckner & Baldwin for your service in their wartent making, 'like a good young patriot,' has in a measure unsettled your purpose to become a college freshman next Septemher. I am sorry to hear this and must write you at once. A good young patriot shouid study the oncoming needs of his country and prepare himself to meet them. Your town high school will need teachers ten and twenty years hence. Turn aside from college, and you forever shut yourseif out from that form of future patriotic service. Your State will shortly need a wise senator in Washington; your nation a wise amhassador in London; your Church an efficient Bishop in her world-wide activities on six continents; but turn aside from college, and you har your avenue to all these forms of public usefulness, and to a score of others. It is not patriotic duty, or permissible personal advantage, thus to impoverish the possible serviceabieness of an oncoming citizen of our country. In haptism you received the name of Godfrey, in college you will be told that in the good old Angio-Saxon tongue it means, 'At peace with God.' Barter not away your one day of opportunity for any war-time wage, lest heaven refuse to honor your claim to so precious a name as the one you bear. Be early at the university door on opening day!"

OUR BIBLE OFFER.

Several friends have taken advantage of our offer to give a Bible as a premium for a club of suhscrihers. They have helped us, have done a favor to those whom they have induced to take the Advocate, and have secured for themselves a splendidly printed and hound Bihle. In some cases, those who have accepted our offer are laymen. We should like to suggest to our preachers that in many of their congregations there are, perhaps, persons who would he glad to attend to the matter of securing renewais and new subscriptions to the Advocate for the sake of getting a fine Bihle, if the preachers themselves have not time to attend to it. We shall appreciate it very much, if they will take the matter up with suitable persons.

We are grateful to those of our subscribers who have responded promptiy to the statements that we have recently sent out. There are others who, perhaps, have overlooked the matter. We earnestly request them to look at the labels on their papers, and, if their subscriptions are overdue, to send us their renewai as soon as possihie.

We are receiving a good many commendations of the Advocate; these encourage and help us very much. But we need the financial backing of a large, paid-up suhscription iist to enahie us to maintain the high standard of efficiency that has been established in the past. It may be unfortunate, hut it is true, nevertheless, that it takes money to run the Advocate. Let aii our friends help.

MILITARY TRAINING IN MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Methodists generaiiy throughout Mississippi will be glad to know that Miiisaps College has been designated hy the War Department as one of the colleges of the United States to have a recognized Student Army Training Corps. The ietter of President Watkins, printed in another column of the Advocate, hrings this fact specificaiiy to the attention of our people, the preachers especially.

This plan for college student military training and enlistment is an important part of the Government's program to meet the exigencies of the war situation without impairing the usefulness of our educational institutions, and without interfering with the development of a competent leadership for the difficult days that are to come. It is especially important from the following considerations:

In the first place, it offers to the patriotic boy and young man an acceptahie outlet for his patriotic zeai. A student eniisted in the Students' Army Training Corps is in the miiitary service of the United States. In an emergency, the President may cail him at any time into active service. He is furnished a regular uniform, inciuding hat, shoes and overcoats, and he is given regular military training under competent officers detailed by the War Department. He is a part of the military force of the Government, though not in the regular army.

In the second place, the plan, hy checking premature enlistment, and by combining military instruction with the college curriculum, provides for a hedy of trained leaders and specialists who, both during and after the war, may meet efficientiy the nation's needs.

The Government has emphasied, in every way possible, its desire that our students continue their college education. We sincerely hope that this matter wiii so be brought to the attention of our young nien that they will realize that they are doing their fuii duty—aii that is expected of them by the Government—in going to coiiege this fail. Instead of having a falling off in attendance this year, aii of our coileges ought to be crowded to overflowing with students eager to help their country in the most effective way possihie.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

A note from Rev. Olin Ray, of Tunica, Miss., informs us of the arrival of a iittle daughter, Martha Louise, at the parsonage on August 5. Happy home!

We thank Brother W. R. Baker, of St. Joseph, La., for sending us two suhscriptions recentiy, with the promise of more soon. He has done a good work for the Church, we steadfastly believe.

We desire to express our thanks to Brother W. H. Jones, of Norris, Miss., for a ciuh of ten subscriptions he recently sent us. We are greatly indehted to the friends who are helping us to circulate the Advocate among our people.

Dr. F. N. Parker, who is fiiiing the Rayne Memorial pulpit during the ahsence of the pastor, Dr. U. G. Foote, is delivering messages that are stirring the hearts of his hearers. His sermon last Sunday morning made a deep impression upon those who heard it.

Bishop Kilgo's son, John C. Kilgo, Jr., has recently arrived overseas in the service of his country. He is a member of the headquarters company of the Fourth Motor Mechanics' Regiment.

Bishop Kilgo's article on dancing was reproduced by the Eastern Methodist, of Philadelphia, in its number of August 15.

The Christian Advocate (Nashville(reports that Bishop John M. Moore and his party arrived safely at Rio de Janeiro on August 9.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, of St. Mark's and Mary Werlein Missions, who has recently been seriously ill at the Touro Infirmary, has recovered sufficiently to leave for Kentucky, where he will spend some time in recuperating.

Rev. A. A. Bernard, our pastor at Ponchatoula, La., dropped in to see us one day last week. He reported his work to be in good shape. We enjoyed shaking hands again with our fellow-guest at the Louisiana Conference at Minden last year.

Dr. Henry Anson Buttz, who for fifty years has been connected with Drew Theological Seminary as president and professor, has resigned his position as professor of New Testament exegesis, to take effect at the close of the present school year. Dr. Butz is 82 years old.

Dr. George W. Truett, a prominent Baptist minister of Dallas, Texas, and one of the foremost Baptists of the country, sailed for France the first week in August for service as an Army Y. M. C. A. worker. Dr. Truett is well known in Louisiana, where he is held in high esteem.

Rev. R. S. Satterfield, of the West Oklahoma Conference, has taken up his duties as assistant editor of our general organ. He succeeds Dr. John Chadwick, who resigned to enter Army Y. M. C. A. work. We extend a cordial welcome to Dr. Satterfield to the important field of religious journalism.

Dr. Jose Marcial, a new worker in the missionary field, has just entered upon his extensive labors in the West Indian Islands. He is a native of Spain, a graduate of the University of Mardrid, and is well known in literary and religious circles. He is working under the auspices of the American Bible Society.

The total resources of the national banks of the country, as shown by reports to the Comptroller of the Currency under the call of June 29, were $17,839,502,000, an increase of $1,688,462,000 over the same date last year. Total deposits in national banks on June 29 show an increase of $1,249,776,000 over a year ago.

We regret to learn from a personal letter that Rev. J. T. Leggett, the popular presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, still suffers considerable pain from a broken shoulder which he received in an automobile accident some months ago. We sincerely trust that he will soon be entirely well.

Dr. Rolfe Hunt, president of Mississippi Conference Training School, requests us to state that he can find places for one or two earnest Methodist boys to pay their board while attending the Training School. The work will not interfere with school duties. Those interested should write Dr. Hunt at once, at Montrose, Miss.

Brother J. A. McAlpin, a steward and Bible class teacher at Hollandale, Miss., recently sent us a club of six subscriptions, with the promise of more to follow. We thank Brother McAlpin for his efforts in behalf of the Advocate. We believe there are other laymen who could help in the important work of circulating the Conference organ.

Official announcement has been made that the sale of War Savings Stamps has been so great since July 1, that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving at Washington has had to stop making postage stamps altogether and devote its efforts to making Thrift and Savings Stamps. The cash receipts from the sale of these stamps for the month of July amounted to $211,417,942.61.

Brother W. J. Baker, a substantial laymen of our Church at Pocahontas, Miss., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Tuesday of last week. He spoke in the highest terms of his pastor, Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr. We have enjoyed the hospitality of his home, and count it one of our privileges to know his noble father and mother. They are a tower of strength in their community.

Rev. Clyde F. Armitage, representing the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, has announced that he will interview candidates for the chaplaincy as follows: Camp Custer, Sept. 20; Chicago, Sept. 23-27; Camp Grant, October 2; Camp Zachary Taylor, October 4-5. Those desiring to interview Mr: Armitage may write to him at the Woodward Building, Washington, D. C., at any time before the dates designated.

Rev. W. H. Coleman, pastor of our First Church in this city, was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office on Monday. He reports good congregations and much real interest during these hot summer months. His down-town church has a great field of usefulness in New Orleans. Brother Coleman's eldest son has recently enlisted in the hydro-aviation corps, though he has not yet been called into active service.

Rev. R. I. Collins, of Courtland, Miss., writes us that he has just closed a fine meeting at Center Hill church, on his charge. There were fourteen accessions to the Church, most of them on profession of faith. He sent us four subscriptions for our files, for which we thank him. He remarks that these subscriptions are the result of the fine meeting recently held at Pope. During the revival season is a good time to get people to take their Church paper.

At the recent meeting of the General Sunday School Board, Rev. J. L. Neill, of the Mississippi Conference, was elected Superintendent of the Missionary Educational Department. Brother Neill gives up the work of the Educational Department of the Board of Missions for the larger work of superintending the whole program of missionary education in the Sunday schools. Those who know him, know that he will do his work most energetically and effectively.

Rev. W. L. Duren, the capable presiding elder of the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference, in sending us the announcements for his fourth round of quarterly conferences, says that the work of his district is moving along very well. Most of the charges are ahead of last year in salary payments, and good work has been done on Conference collections. Rev. S. L. Pope expects soon to be "over there" in Y. M. C. A. work. Rev. J. C. Park, of Starkville, has been given a month's vacation.

Director General McAdoo, of the United States Railroad Administration, has issued a circular to all employees in the railroad service of the United States, calling attention to complaints that employees are not treating the public with proper consideration and respect. He lets it be plainly understood that the Government will not tolerate anything less than efficiency and courtesy on the part of its employees. We wish the Postmaster General would take similar action in his department.

Brother James H. Ramsey, of Houlka, Miss., writes us that the recent meeting there, conducted by the pastor, Rev. O. P. Armour, was one of the most spiritual it has been his privilege to attend in some years. He says that Brother Armour, though he has been hindered greatly by illness, has done a great work at Houlka, and is in high favor with the people. Brother Ramsey himself has been a subscriber to the Advocate about thirty years. We thank him for his kindly words of appreciation.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to be present at the marriage of Miss Mary Lowe, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Collins, to Rev. Rufus G. Moore, at the Methodist Church, Coffeeville, Miss., Wednesday evening, August 28. The groom, it will be remembered, has recently been appointed to missionary work in China as a teacher in Soochow University. In advance, we invoke the richest blessings of Heaven upon the happy couple. They will be at home after October 10 at Soochow.

Among those who were at the Lake Junaluska Training School for Sunday School Leaders last month, were Sunday school field secretaries of all the Conferences served by the Advocate, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of the North Mississippi Conference, Rev. J. C. Chambers, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, of the Louisiana Conference. Brother Chambers was called home before the close of school because of sickness in his family, consequently his name does not appear in the list of those receiving credits. Four persons from Louisiana and seven from Mississippi received awards at the close of the school.

Chicago has recently been honored by visits from two distinguished representatives of France and Great Britain, the Rev. Reuben Saillens, D.D., of Paris, who came to America to tell of his country's sacrifices in the war, and the Rev. J. Stuart Holden, D.D., Vicar of St. Paul's, London, who was charged with a special mission for the British Government, the nature of which was not publicly disclosed. Both made The Moody Bible Institute a kind of base in Chicago, addressing the faculty and students and giving some time each day to personal conversations with the latter, and both stirred their audiences to the depths for God and country and world liberty and world evangelization.

"Each day may bring sufficient ill;
But we can meet and fight it through,
If hope sustains the hand of will,
And conscience is our captain, too."

It is related of the two great French preachers, Bossuet and Fenelon, that when the people heard Bossuet, they said, "What a splendid sermon!" When they heard Fenelon, they said, "May God give us grace to sin no more!"—In a sermon by Albert Clayton.

THE METHODIST REVIEW.

Dr. Frank M. Thomas, the Editor, requests us to state that our Publishing Agents, Smith & Lamar, have announced a special subscription to all new subscribers to the Methodist Review. Five numbers, beginning with the coming October number and including the four numbers for 1919 will be sent to new subscribers for the sum of $2.00, the present annual subscription. The new subscribers, in order to avail themselves of this special subscription, must accept it by September 10, at the latest, as the October edition will then go to press. The new editor of the Review, is introducing some new features that will prove of exceptional interest to pastors. The October Review will contain some leading articles of unusual interest. If you desire to keep abreast of the world's best thought in this epochal age then subscribe for the Review, the official quarterly journal of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Send your subscription to The Methodist Review, Nashville, Tennessee.

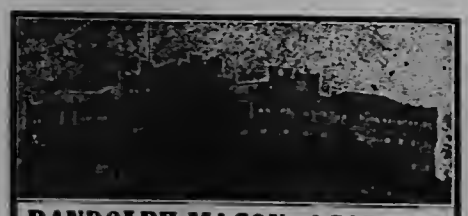
HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.



If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

Mrs. JENNIE WELLS (nee York) was born near Zeiglersville, on August 22, 1876. She joined the Methodist Church in early life. She was twice married, first, to Mr. Hamilton; after his death she married Mr. Tully Wells. She died at her home near Phoenix, Miss., on June 8, 1918. As die away the sweet cadences of a bright summer day upon the bosom of some gentle zephyr, so she quietly and submissively folded up the mortal remains of her earthly tabernacle here and pitched it in that radiant clime from which no traveler ever returns.

During the long, weary days of her sickness she seemed cheerful. She said she would never get well, but was resigned and willing to go. On that bright morning in the June-time she stepped out upon the last projecting rock in the stream of time, bidding adieu to husband and friends, and went home to the mansions of glory in our Father's house. May the Lord sustain and comfort the bereaved husband in this hour of sorrow.

Mrs. L. JESSIE ABEL.

Our homes were made sad and our hearts broken when the news came to us last Wednesday of the awful tragic death of my uncle, HARTWELL POTTS, who was accidentally drowned in Tallehatchie River, at Poter's Ferry. He had been ferryman there for more than a year and had rendered good and faithful service. His body was found the next day by kind friends, who dlligently assisted in the search. His remains were laid to rest at dear old Shiloh, by the slde of his sainted mother and father who had preceded him to the glory land. The funeral services were conducted by Brother Ed. Keating. He professed faith in Christ about fourteen years ago, and had been a consistent member and steward of Shiloh Methodist Church ever since, and also district steward. His presidlng elder said yesterday, "he was a good man and we will miss hlm." He was 53 years old and single, but leaves two brothers, J. R. and W. M. Potts, and one sister, Mrs. Fannie Wright, and four nieces to mourn his death. May God sustaln us, is the prayer of a niece who loved him. Mrs. WILL MARSHALL.

Batesville, Miss., Aug. 1, 1918.

RALPH E. WILLIS, son of Edward Lee and Jannie Willis, was born in Robertson County, Texas, on April 1, 1909, and with his parents came to Mineola, Texas, in 1917. It was during hls short life in Mlneola that the writer, attracted by the rapid unfolding of his intellectual endowments, together with the moral stamina of one so young in life, could but exclaim "How bright and how promising are the blending of those supreme traits, which so richly combine in his admirable personality."

Ralph was regarded by his teachers as a boy of promise, and he was so recognized by hls Sunday school superintendent. He seemed to have caught the spirit of inspiration for a hlgher life on the last day of his attendance at Sunday school, and on his return home, said to his mother: "Mother, I never intend to miss another Sunday school." This expression was one of inspiration for a brighter life. His respect for the aged was always beautiful and highly respectful. The writer would tender his profound sympathy to the bereaved parents, and beseech the Divine guidance in this their sad affliction. M. G. JENKINS.

Mlneola, Tex., August 10.

Brother JOHN WESLEY OWENS was born in Claiborne County, Miss., on Jan. 18, 1845. He came to Texas in September, 1887. On May 16, 1867, he was married to Miss Eliza Shelby. He dled peacefully and in great faith at his home in Dallas, Texas, on July 2, 1918. He is survived by his wife and two sons, Edgar and Dave. One son—Dock—died in 1915. Brother Owens served three years during the Civil War under General Lee. For some years he was engaged prominently in business in Dallas, untll his health broke down. He joined Trinity Methodist Church in Dallas several years ago under the pastorate of Dr. W. D. Bradfield, now editor of the Advocate (Texas). The family were greatly consoled by having Dr. Bradfield in charge of the service, who was assisted by the writer, the family's present pastor. Bro. Owens was a good man in every capacity of life. He bore years of bodily affliction with the utmost calmness and Christian resignation. Those who were close to him during those years were greatly impressed with the fine quality of his Christlan faith and character. His sufferings were great, but were endured without a murmur. Before departing he gave abundant assurances that he was well prepared to go, and was without doubt as to his entrance into the eternal joys of his Lord. We shall meet him again.

IN MEMORIAM.

After a brief illness, at the home of her beloved son-in-law, Dr. W. A. Hodges, Iuka, Miss., the gentle spirit of Mrs. Emily A. Bell passed from earthly scenes, on February 4, 1918. She was the daughter of J. B. Harper and Annie E. Graham Harper and was born on Feb. 23, 1837. When about sixteen years of age she was happlly married to Benjamin R. Bell, of Marshall County, Mlss., who departed this life on June 12, 1898. Their comfortable home was not only the stopping place for Methodist preachers, but for any tired traveler. No one was ever turned away. Of tender sympathies and great generosity, this noble couple opened their hearts and home to two motherless boys—one a nephew and the other a son of a Methodlst preacher. After the death of her husband, Sister Bell moved to Iuka, Miss., where she spent the last elghteen years. Of nine children, only one remains to mourn her loss, Mrs. Katharine B. Hodges, who dld all in her power to brighten the days of the precious mother who had borne many bereavements without a murmur, with a faith that seemed to say: "It is the Lord. Let Him do what He will."

Even as death was fast claiming her gentle spirit, she had a sweet smile for those at her bedside, and was thoughtful to send a message of love to two shut-in friends whom she often visited. It is a great comfort that she said: "Bless the Lord. He has been so good to me all the days of my life. From my childhood days—all through life, He has been so good to me." Bless the Lord for a good mother and a true friend. The funeral services were held at the residence by the writer, and the remains were carried to Red Banks, Miss., and laid to rest beside her husband.

A NOTE FROM BIENVILLE, LA.

I have just closed a very fine meeting on my charge at the Burk Place. I was assisted by Rev. W. E. Hudnall, of Ringgold, La. In fact, he has assisted me in three meetings, and all of them were a succcss.

Hudnall is a fine fellow and a splendid preacher. He places much stress on the question of experience as to the divine llfe. He preaches with much power and seems to be burdened with the lost. I wish to state that any of the brethren dcsiring the services of a godly and consecrated man will make no mistake in using him. I have had up to date about 36 additions on my work. I have one more revival to hold and this will wind up my year of revivals. God bless the Editor.

Not Equipment But the Man Makes the Difference.

Every great school, college or university has been built around the personality of some one man. The educated men of America who have accomplished great things and who stand well in professions look back on their college training and attribute much of their accomplishments to the dominating personality of the school in which they were educated. The dominating personality of Morgan School is that of Professor R. K. Morgan. His influence for good and better things does much toward the moulding of morals and stimulating of broader ideals in the students who are so fortunate as to attend Morgan School. Mr. Morgan has devoted his life to the training of boys.

The thoughtful, considerate parent feels that the school to which he sends his son must be equipped and its faculty chosen with the primary end of training the boy to become a man—to teach true Christian faith, to develop manly independence and self-confidence, to inspire high ideals of life and service, to strengthen and develop mind and body alike.

Such an institution is the Morgan School, which has been built up around the Christian character and wholesome, inspiring personality of Robert K. Morgan, who has been principal for 25 years.

A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., will bring you a catalog and full information about this school.

Killed by Poisons

All scientists agree that poisonous products in the blood are eliminated by the kidneys and liver. The kidneys act as a kind of filter for these products. When the kidneys are changed or degenerated, by disease or old age, then these poisons are retained in the body. If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily between meals to flush the kidneys. Then procure at your nearest drug store Anuric. This Anuric drives the uric acid out. Scientific men have learned that in gout, also rheumatism, poisonous uric acid crystals are deposited in or about the joints, in the muscles — where inflammation is set up.

If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vegetables, with only little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day lor a month. An-u-ric is many times more potent than lithia and dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar.

You can obtain a trial package of Anuric by writing Doctor V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., enclosing ten cents.

TARPON SPRINGS, FLA.—"I find Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets simply fine; they give me relief in a few days alter I start to take them when the kidneys do not feel good. These tablets have done me so much good."—MRS. J. W. CARDY, Box 291.

PLATTSBURG, MISS. "This is to certily that I have been a sufferer of rheumatism lor ten years and have tried several noted doctors and a lot of patent medicines. At last I saw Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets advertised and got a trial package; they did me more good than anything I have ever taken. They relieved me of all the pain. I believe that two packages of these tablets will effect a permanent cure. I can recommend them to anyone suffering with rheumatism. Anuric will do all that is claimed for it.' —M. E. WEEMS.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Last Sunday was spent at the little city of Louise. They have a small church there, but I found a good interest in the Sunday school. Sold several Teacher-Training Books and one teacher pledged to take the entire course. It was a delightful trip.

The Meridian District Institute at Enterprise was very successful. Rev. S. U. Turnipseed of the Alabama Conference did most excellent work and was most helpful to all. The district officers and local workers did excellent work and I feel were strengthened thereby to be able to do better work the coming year. Special emphasis was given to missions through Brother Thompson; personal experience and home religion through Brother De LeBar; teacher training, Mrs. Lipscomb; W. B. C., Brother Stokes, and Brother Hawkins held a most interesting round table.

The Newton District was helpful and all the workers did faithful and good work; $22 was raised for Conference Missions. Rev. B. F. Lewis was the main speaker and his messages were most helpful indeed. Dr. Hunt's work on teacher-training was simply fine. Mrs. Oakey's demonstration of the elementary work was, I think, very helpful. Mrs. Hunt made a fine impression for the Home Department work. I thought it a most helpful and profitable occasion.

I feel that the general discussions that we have been enabled to arouse during the Institutes are the most helpful, and give us definite things to work on.

Jackson District meets August 27-28, at Florence. Hattiesburg meets August 29-30, at Collins. Bear these dates in mind and come. Pray for me and the work. JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

RENWAR RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanitarium treatments, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should anyone doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." For sale by druggists, price 50c; or by mail on receipt of price from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Adv.

YESTERDAY AND TO-DAY.

Yesterday the wrist-watch was the fad of sissies; to-day it is the necessity of soldiers going to battle.

Yesterday Uncle Sam was smashing the railroads into small units; to-day he is preparing to operate them as the largest trust in the world.

Yesterday it was fashionable to see how much you could waste, and then indirectly brag about "the things one really and truly must have to get on with;" to-day multi-millionaires are eating corn bread.

Yesterday all the blatherskites pointed to big business, such as Bethlehem Steel and Baldwins as a public menace; to-day we hail them as saviors of our country.

Yesterday hundreds of men I know or know about were earning with their brains tens of thousands of dollars for themselves every year; to-day they are toiling for Uncle Sam at two cents a week.

Yesterday it was a crime for the United States to own a merchant marine; to-day a Philadelphia shipyard is preparing to build fifty great ships at a clip, so that we may have a merchant marine.

Yesterday it was the fashion for the vast majority of people to spend every cent they earned; to-day ten million people own Liberty Bonds—mostly paid for out of savings.

Yesterday we couldn't possibly get on without limited railroad trains; to-day we feel no fatal sensations when those costly luxuries are not running.

Yesterday a girl paying-teller in a bank would have caused a mild riot; to-day women are in the bank, breaking stones on the railroads, conducting trolley cars, making big shells for our troops, running elevators in office buildings, and playing messenger boy.

Yesterday we put more money in alcohol twice over than we put in all public education, as men, and a few women, too, couldn't seem to live without John Barleycorn; yet to-day our liquor bill has been cut in two without a major surgical operation.

Yesterday we taxed ourselves heavily to feed and maintain in semi-luxury or at least full comfort thousands of crooks, thieves, counterfeiters and murderers; to-day some communities have set this parasite class to work.

Yesterday milady could scarcely draw on her own gloves; now she is knitting with nimble fingers stout sweaters for Sammy.

Yesterday we depended upon Germany for a lot of drugs and dyes which to-day we are duplicating—only making better ones.

Yesterday we simply had to eat steaks and chops three times a day; now we find less need for doctors and fewer calls upon our bank accounts when eating meat but once a day.

Yesterday the farmers apparently were raising all the food they could make Mother Earth produce; nevertheless one clear call from Dame Necessity and the farmers added a cool billion bushels of grains to our supply.

Yesterday the mossbacks yelled that three hundred ships of war were too many for a nation certain never to have another fight; now we find one thousand such ships too few when we have a war.

Yesterday you just couldn't be content without a joy ride, eating up precious gasoline; but you reduced mileage on the average by forty per cent, and still survive the shock.

Yesterday we had to have our dinner-plates flanked by sugar-bowls; to-day when the big hotels dole out one lump of sugar for each cup of coffee we do first rate and still save over fifty per cent in sugar.

That's what necessity does for us.

You never can tell. By to-morrow we may have made sufficient progress to be able to dine without the din of a brass band at our elbows.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

A GOOD BUSINESS OPENING.

The steady increase of the livestock interest in the Southern States warranted our making a thorough investigation of the natural advantages of the Southland for the raising of good horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry compared to Northern States like Iowa that for years have been looked upon as leaders in these lines.

The reports of our experts justify our establishing headquarters in the South at some centrally located city having good railroad connections as soon as suitable arrangements can be closed.

Our business will require the help of a number of reliable men who must be well and favorably known among planters and farmers who own stock in the vicinity of their home town and we prefer men with some knowledge of livestock.

These positions are worthy the prompt attention of any one who is looking for a chance to make money in a reliable, steady and growing outdoor business.

THE JOY OF MOTHERHOOD

Came to this Woman after Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to Restore Her Health

Ellensburg, Wash.—"After I was married I was not well for a long time and a good deal of the time was not able to go about. Our greatest desire was to have a child in our home and one day my husband came back from town with a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and wanted me to try it. It brought relief from my troubles. I improved in health so I could do my housework; we now have a little one, all of which I owe to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. O. S. JOHNSON, R. Such women should not give up hope until they have given this wonderful medicine a trial, and for special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of 40 years experience is at your service.

BUSINESS MEN ON PROHIBITION.

Dear Sir: Statement relative Jones amendment to Agricultural Appropriation Bill:

We have been informed that Hon. E. N. Hurley, chairman of the Shipping Board, thinks that war prohibition will disorganize labor activities in shipbuilding plants. And the newspapers report that Hon. Bainbridge Colby, of the Shipping Board, has appeared before the Senate Agricultural Committee to protest against the enactment of war prohibition on the same ground.

Detroit is the largest city in America under prohibition. The prohibition law went into effect here on May 1 of this year. A great number of our leading industrial concerns are working on immense contracts for war material. It will therefore be seen that the experience of our large industries as touching the point raised in the objection of the Shipping Board to prohibition is not only valuable but conclusive on this point.

There is no division of opinion among our leaders. They are unanimous in giving emphatic testimony to the wonderful benefits prohibition is producing. Our big concerns are reporting fewer absentees of men, fewer accidents, greater unity, and higher efficiency on the part of their employees. Their men come to work now with clear heads and steady hands on Monday mornings and after holidays.

Detroit's experience has proven beyond a possibility of doubt that the wage-earners do not insist on their beer as the price of their loyalty, and that instead of prohibition causing any industrial revolution or disorganization, it, on the other hand, is a most valuable contribution to industrial efficiency, higher productivity, and conservation of man-power—all of which are of very vital consideration to our country in these war times.

If the Shipping Board and others who object to war-emergency prohibition on the ground that it will cause disorganization of labor or revolution among industrial workers will but study the experience of Detroit, they will find that their anxiety on this matter is totally unfounded. After an unexcelled opportunity of studying the value of prohibition in its relation to industrial efficiency, our conviction is that no measure of conservation would be more valuable to our country and its interests at this time than war-emergency prohibition.

We therefore respectfully submit these considerations and appeal to our National Congress for early favorable action in behalf of this legislation.

Yours very truly,

AN ISLAND ENTIRELY BONE-DRY.

There is a little island on the confines of the Arctic Ocean 300 miles long by 200 miles wide. It is 600 miles from Norway, 500 miles from the north of Scotland, and 250 miles from Greenland and belongs to Denmark. Its name is Iceland. It is a barren land, much of it snow-capped mountains and burning volcanoes. It has no trees. There is enough grass on the ground not hardened with the lava crust to keep the few hornless oxen and little ponies that do their work. The summer is too short for corn or wheat to grow. The people raise potatoes and a few vegetables. They catch the finest fish, and some seals, and shoot swan and duck. They live in hovels made of turf and lava blocks and are very poor.

But they are of a splendid race. They are Scandinavians, and they speak the Norwegian language. They have a brave and heroic history. Their fathers discovered America 500 years before Columbus stumbled upon the West Indies. They have to import their bread; they used to import their liquor. But it played such havoc with their people that they have banished it entirely. They have a law forbidding the manufacture of intoxicating liquor at home, and though having free trade, they do not allow a barrel or bottle of liquor to enter the island.

What is the result? There is no jail, no criminal court, and only one policeman. There is not a person on the island over ten years of age who cannot read and write. There are public schools, seminaries, colleges, newspapers, books, a classic literature, churches and a splendid type of religion. The Icelander, with nature against him, with barren soil and volcano and iceberg, and sea shutting him in and sullen winter, by his healthy religion and by his total prohibition of the liquor traffic has set an excellent example to nations more highly favored. He has illustrated the fact that total abstinence can abstain and that total prohibition can prohibit and that they are friendly to education, virtue and religion.—Exchange.

BLOOD POISON IS SNEAKING.

It steals upon you in the most unexpected manner. Beginning with a mere scratch of the skin and aided by the careless touch of a pair of dirty hands the slight wound becomes infected, festers and spreads. Blood poison sets in and unexpectedly the entire body is affected. Too often it proves fatal. Don't be foolish. Take care of yourself. The application of Gray's Ointment in all cases of cuts, burns, scalds, bruises, stings, sores, whether large or small, will put a stop to any possible chance of infection and blood poison. Mother, Why Don't You Take Nuxated Iron

And Be Strong and Well and Have Nice Rosy Cheeks Instead of Being Nervous and Irritable All the Time and Looking So Haggard and Old?—The Doctor Gave Some to Susie Smith's Mother and She Was Worse Off Than You Are and Now She Looks Just Fine.

The Child's Appeal.

Any Woman Who Tires Easily, Is Irritable, Nervous and Run-Down Should Take Nuxated Iron to Help Increase Her Health, Strength And Vitality.

"There can be no strong, healthy, beautiful, rosy-cheeked women, without iron," says Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York physician and Medical Author. "I have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors should prescribe more organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for their nervous, run-down, weak, haggard-looking women patients. Pallor means anaemia. The skin of an anaemic woman is pale, the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone, the brain fags, and the memory fails, and often they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. When the iron goes from the blood of women the roses go from their cheeks.

What Is Your Answer?

"In the most common foods of America, the starches, sugars, table syrups, candies, polished rice, white bread, soda crackers, biscuits, macaroni, spaghetti, tapioca, sago, farina, degerminated cornmeal, no longer is iron to be found. Refining processes have removed the iron of Mother Earth from these impoverished foods, and silly methods of home cookery, by throwing down the waste pipe the water in which our vegetables are cooked, are responsible for another grave iron loss. Therefore you should supply the iron deficiency in your food by using some form of organic iron, just as you would use salt when your food has not enough salt."

"Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living tissue. Without it, no matter how much or what you eat, your food merely passes through you without doing you any good. You don't get the strength out of it, and as a consequence you become weak, pale and sickly looking, just like a plant trying to grow in a soil deficient in iron. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary nuxated iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were ailing all the while have most astonishingly increased their strength and endurance simply by taking iron in the proper form and this, after they had in some cases been going on for months without getting benefit from anything. But don't take the old forms of reduced iron, iron acetate, or tincture of iron simply to save a few cents.

The iron demanded by Mother Nature for the red coloring matter in the blood of her children is, alas not that kind of iron. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated to do you any good, otherwise it may prove worse than useless.

Manufacturers' Note—Nuxated Iron, which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians, is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists. Unlike the older inorganic iron products it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

WHAT CHRISTIANITY HAS DONE FOR KOREA.

(1) Christianity Made Known to the Korean the Affairs of the West.

Formerly, the Korean knew of no country other than Korea and China. He had no idea that learning, morality and other forms of civilization existed anywhere outside of these two countries. But since the missionary went about preaching everywhere, the Korean has learned that there is such a thing as the Western world. He has even faintly realized that the West has developed a peculiar form of civilization and that this civilization is superior to that of the East.....The political movement, like that of the Independence Club, may be said to have been an echo of the Western influence. It is, at any rate, an undeniable fact that Christianity brought to Korea the dawning light of that civilization.

(2) The Quickening of the Moral Sense of the People.

Toward the end of the Korean regime it was not only politics that were corrupt. Industry and finance were disorganized. As education was neglected, and administration rotten, social morals were indescribably corrupt. A whirlwind of extravagance, selfishness, dishonesty and jealousy swept over the nation. Officials openly practiced bribery, favoritism and cruelty. People sank deep in debauchery. Even children indulged in gambling. Slaves were sold and bought. Everybody seemed to think of nothing but evil day and night. Summed up in one sentence: the Korean degeneration reached the point where life had no ideal and morality no standard. When I think of what I heard and saw in my childhood, I can't help trembling. To this confused and wicked society Christianity brought a high ideal of life and the dignity of virtue. Intemperance and immorality were forbidden. Dishonesty was denounced. Human traffic was discouraged. To worship God, to seek after righteousness; to teach new ways of living a pure, ideal life—all this has been the gift of Christianity. It is Christianity that has enabled nearly three hundred thousand souls in Korea to enjoy religious consolations and to strive after a morally pure life.

Not only the Christians but through them, the moral conscience of the whole nation has been awakened and the ethical standard has been raised—another inestimable service which we owe to Christianity.

(3) The Spread of Education.

We have now common schools and higher schools at different localities. In Seoul there are even schools for special subjects. Educational facilities are thus being provided. But up to seven or eight years ago, there were scarcely any but Christian schools. Of those who have received the new education, and who are above thirty years of age, the majority are graduates from Christian institutions of learning.

Since the religious revolution in Europe, the Christian Church has found it necessary to establish schools. As all believers had to study the Bible, children were taught to read. This became the foundation of the modern system of common education. For the same reason, the Christian Church in Korea has given much attention to the founding of schools and hospitals. A church with two or three hundred members has a primary school, as a rule. It is thus that the Christian Church has laid the foundation of Korea's new system of education.

Besides school education, the necessity for reading the Bible and hymns has induced illiterate believers to learn Un-moon. Moreover, the reading of the Scriptures has created a taste for reading, with pleasure, such simple religious works as "Pilgrim's Progress," etc. Thanks to this fact most Christians, male or female, old or young, have acquired the knowledge of letters and the ability to read.

(4) The Status of Woman Has Been Raised.

The distinguishing mark of Oriental ethics is to honor man and despise woman. Especially in Korea a woman was considered no better than a domestic animal. She was denied the privilege of education. To assert her personality or to engage in an independent livelihood was never dreamt of. But it is the blessing of Christianity that has induced her to attend church services and to engage in acts of worship along with men, giving her the conception that men and women are sons and daughters of God on equal terms. A Christian woman enjoys that same power with men to vote for the election of church officers. She shares equally with men the responsibility of supporting the church. In the roll-book of Christians a woman possesses her individuality as well as a man.

The first school for girls was a Christian school and the first girl students were Christians. Now-a-days there are common schools and high schools for girls: but as late as five or six years ago the very mention of a female student was associated with a Christian girl.

Again, it is the Christian Church in Korea that has sanctioned the re-marriage of women. By breaking down the notion that it is a great sin for a widow to re-marry according to the literal interpretation of the maxim that "a virtuous woman never has two husbands," Christianity has conferred on the Korean woman a precious freedom.

(5) The Hurtful Custom of Early Marriage Has Been Rectified.

Now we have a legal age for marriage so that early marriage is, at least theoretically, forbidden. But formerly it was Christians alone who enforced strict rules against premature marriages.

(6) The Universalization of Un-moon.

It is the Christian Church that has given to the Korean the idea that Un-moon is also a form of writing. The translation of the precious Testaments, Old and New, and of the hymns has given to Un-moon its dignity and universality.....It is probable that the Korean alphabet and the Korean language have become, for the first time, the medium of high and noble thoughts through the translation of the Bible. When the history of Korean literature shall come to be written by a future historian, the fact that the Bible was translated in pure Korean will find its place in the first page.

(7) The Mental Faculties of the Korean Have Been Stimulated.

The Korean mind had been paralyzed, dried up and stagnated. To this, Christian thoughts, unheard of in former ages, brought a powerful stimulation.

(8) Personal Liberty.

The individual is the basis of this religion. In the Confucian system, the sage makes ethical laws for the people, who are required to obey them unconsciously. "People should be made to obey but they should not be made to know," is the Confucian doctrine. Hence the Confucian ethics destroy private judgment, and this has hindered the free development of thought. But Christianity teaches that each individual, through his own prayer and endeavor, can find and see God and obtain eternal life. To say that all persons, sons, daughters and slaves, in fact, every human being, have a soul implies that all men are brothers; that everybody is to be respected; and that all persons are equal in status and dignity, however they may differ in abilities. This is the source from which is derived the idea of the equality of men and women. This is the root of modern ethics—Yi Kwang Su, Editor of Chung Choon, a Korean monthly published in Seoul.

SAVE FOOD—BUILD UP RESERVES.

"We can not administer the food problem on the basis of one year's war. We must prepare for its long continuance if we are to insure absolute victory," declared the Food Controllers of the United States, France, Italy, and Great Britain in a joint resolution adopted at their conference in London. The resolution, which was cabled to the United States Food Administration, emphasizes the necessity of building up reserves in North America as an insurance against possible crop failures here and elsewhere and the diminution of agricultural labor. The resolution follows:

"Resolved, That while the increased production of the United States renders it possible to relax some of the restrictions which have borne with peculiar hardship upon all our peoples, yet it is absolutely necessary that rigid economy and elimination of waste in the consumption and handling of all foodstuffs, as well as increased production, should be maintained throughout the European allied countries and in North America. It is only by such economy and elimination of waste that the transportation of the necessary men and supplies from North America to the European front can be accomplished and that stocks of foodstuffs can be built up in North America as an insurance against the ever-present danger of harvest failure and the possible necessity for large and emergency drafts to Europe. We can not administer the food problem on the basis of one year's war. We must prepare for its long continuance if we are to insure absolute victory."

There are two spirits in machinery—the spirit of weariness, weakness, of inventing ways of getting out of work; and there is the spirit in the machine, too, of moving mountains, conquering the sea and air, of working harder and lifting one's work to more heroic, to more splendid and difficult, and almost impossible things. The fate of our modern civilization is all hanging on the battle between the spirit of achievement, the spirit of creating things, and the spirit of weariness, or the spirit of thinking ways of getting out of things.—Gerald Stanley Lee.

DR. BOAZ AT MERIDIAN.

Meridian Methodism enjoyed a visit from Dr. H. A. Boaz, our new Church Extension Secretary, last Sunday, August 11. Dr. Boaz came to Meridian at the invitation of the East End Church, where he preached a delightful sermon to a good congregation in the morning. Dr. Boaz is a very forcible and spiritual preacher, with the gifts and graces of an evangelist as well as those of a great Secretary. By the way, it is entirely within the range of possibilities that something good along the building line may soon come out of his visit to East End, and Meridian Methodism may be rejoicing over another fine church building enterprise.

At 6 o'clock in the afternoon, Dr. Boaz delivered the address at the cornerstone laying for the Central Church, which has made splendid progress. The ritualistic service was conducted by the presiding elder, Rev. Geo. H. Thompson. The address of Dr. Boaz was appropriate, and uplifting and the occasion will long be remembered as a red-letter day by this congregation.

At 8 o'clock, Dr. Boaz preached a splendid sermon in the Seventh Avenue Church, leaving Monday for the coast. To say Meridian was delighted with his visit expresses it mildly.

A GOOD MEETING AT HOULKA, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: We have just closed a most successful meeting here at Houlka. The pastor, Rev. O. P. Armour, did the preaching. Brother T. H. Lipscomb, our presiding elder, was due to be with us, but owing to sickness he was forced to decline the invitation. We trust that he is better by now.

The meeting began on Sunday, August 4, and closed on Friday night following. From the very first it promised to be a good meeting. Good crowds attended every service, and the Lord was with us all through the week. Brother Armour preached some great sermons, uplifting and inspiring. The writer thinks that the best sermon he preached was on Sunday morning. His subject was, "God's Image in Man." He handled the subject to perfection, and rendered an excellent discourse on that topic. On Thursday night we had a flower service. Everyone was requested to bring a flower to the service, and the pastor directed each one that had a flower to pin it on the person that had helped him spiritually. That had a great effect on the people, and we had a grand service. Sixteen persons joined the Church, and one came to us by letter from Webb, Miss., Mr. James Walker. We trust that this meeting will have lasting effect upon the people of Houlka, and serve to keep them on the lookout doing God's great work, which should come before anything else.

CAMP MEETING AT OXFORD.

Dear Advocate: The forty-sixth camp meeting at the old Oxford camp ground came to a close on Thursday evening, August 8, after running six days.

Rev. Chas. D. McGeehee, of Indianola, did most of the preaching and did it well. He held the undivided attention of his audiences from start to finish. He presented gospel truths, precepts, and promises to his hearers in such fashion that even the small children could understand. Logical in thought, practical in discourse, and unlimited in power of speech, he is easily among our greatest preachers. The crowning glory of the man is his consecration to God, who is using him gloriously as a "fisher of men."

There were fewer people tented upon the grounds than usual, owing to the strenuous times, and to the fact that this section of country is suffering from a distressing drouth. However, the services were well attended, the tabernacle being filled on Sunday and each night following, with increased attendance to the close.
